The Watergate conspirators, the key to whose distorted perception was their characteristic confusion of what is pragmatic for what is realistic, virtually to us all proclaimed their innocence. Speaking of making and passing the proverbial buck, remember how they professed not to know they were participating in any extensive wrong-doing? Included in this group are Martinez and Barker, the small fish who were members of the original break-in team. Barker has said he still feels he did the right thing. Nothing is immoral so long as one chooses to see it that way. Thur Barker, Porter, Martinez, Dean, and the rest confessed to being mere ciphers, errand boys who did various things, carrying messages and money, paying bills, knowing not why or for whom, but just because they were told to do so, because they were loyal. Seldom did they ask questions because they didn't need to know the connections among the events in which they were but unobtrusive players. As long as you don't know, you're not deceived. Too easy, too easy ...

The person who always does what he is told has no moral ballast of his own; he is by definition amoral, which is the ultimate inhumanity.

The more prevalent the bureaucracy is, the less discriminating and developed will be the moral imagination. So we end up with someone like a Lt. Calley or the Watergate crew — people who know how to stand up for America and not much more. The deception is there — it's just a matter of recognizing and combatting it. By that time though, Dean and Haldeman may have sold the rights of their "true story" to Ross hunter at Paramount Pictures. And you can bet that the "Four-Star Rating" attributed to them by the "Daily News", will once again attract the faithful flock of deceived and errant souls.

The US role in Portugal

One of our stock cliches is that "History repeats itself." Well, I don't know about cliches, but I do see several alarming parallels between the Communist rise to power in Portugal and between certain events of the 20th century.

1) Consider the Reichstag Fire parallel, where Hitler and Voering had the Reichstag, the German Parliament, burned to the ground. They turned around and blamed the arson on the Communists, and after the subsequent parliamentary elections banned both the Communist Party and the Communist deputies from convening with the rest of the Reichstag, thus achieving by crook a parliamentary majority that they were unable to obtain by the ballot. Also as a result of all this fun, the Nazis got the German President, von Hindenburg, to sign an "emergency" decree cancelling civil liberties and freedom of the press "until further notice." In addition, they also pushed through the shrunken Reichstag an act enabling the Nazis to overrule (to control) anything the Reichstag did. Thus did they achieve dictatorial powers.

Should the United States forcefully seize Portugal? The alternative is eventual Soviet domination of all Europe.

Very much the same thing has occurred in Portugal. A sham revolt was staged (A couple of airplanes dropped a few bombs and some "rightist" soldiers "demonstrated" against the regime. Big deal.) The Army was purged of non-communist elements, and the junta got their own enabling act which also over rides the Portuguese parliament (How come nobody complains about a military dictatorship when it happens to be leftist?). Naturally, the reds didn't miss their chance to suppress individual freedoms, the press, and rival parties. They even outlawed the Maoist party! All they need now to ice the cake is a song like "Deutschland uber alles"

2) Another alarming parallel is that of naval access to the open oceans. Germany did not become a real threat to Britain, and never mind the Scapa Flow fiasco, until she occupied Norway and France because before then, her access to the Atlantic was limited and more easily monitored by His Majesty's Navy. Fifteen years ago, the Soviet Navy was likewise landlocked by nations stretching all the way from Alaska and Korea to Norway, but since they they have established bases in the Indian Ocean and Cuba, and are now about to add to their tiara of bases by annexing Southeast Asia and worst yet, Portugal. They will be far more difficult to control in the event of a future crisis. For example, does anybody remember that we used the Portuguese Azores to re-arm Israel during the Yom Kippur War? Well, we won't be able to do that the next time, and if I were an Israeli, both the news from Vietnam and Portugal would greatly alarm me.

3) Just as the Germans were outflanked in World War II by the Russians on the one side and by the Western Allies on the other, so too is Western Europe — NATO — now being outflanked by the Sovient Union. I wonder which country will be the next to go — Spain? Italy?

4) The final parallel is a coftingency whose time is coming. Just as the Soviet Union suppressed Hungary (1956) and Czechoslovakia (1968) because they reightly perceived the liberalization of these countries as a threat to their system, so too must NATO (if it isn't already too castrated psychologically) seize Portugal from the Communists by force. The alternative is eventual Soviet domination of all Europe.

SOJOURN helps women

SOJOURN INC. is a newly organized, non-profit corporation, whose purpose is to provide innovative programs and alternative services for young women in Franklin and Hampshire counties. Every day, the number of adolescent girls who run away from their homes, or foster homes, increases. They run for many and various reasons. Some are fleeing alcoholic or abusive homes, extremely restrictive ones, or simply homes that, through daily conflicts and hardships, have become unsupportive and non-nuturing. Others have never really felt at home, in a series of inappropriate foster placements.

Previous to last year, those young women who were convicted of being runaway, truant, 'stubborn' or 'incorrigible' children, were committed to the Department of Youth Service, and into the juvenile justice system. In a move to decriminalize these offenses, the legislature recently enacted the CHINS (Children in Need of Services) law. Under CHINS, a child is still brought before the courts for non-criminal 'status' offenses, but the aim is to recommend service or placement for him or her. There were never, unfortunately, any funds allocated for these services.

SOJOURN consists of women from Franklin and Hampshire counties who have past experience in working with young women, and are acutely aware of the need for alternative programs. The emphasis of the program will be to train young women in the skills of living independently, with particular stress on vocational and educational components.

If you are interested in finding out more about SOJOURN, write: SOJOURN INC., 94 North Leverett Road, North Leverett, Mass. 01054.

Health seminar can aid students

By LANA FISCHER
Staff Reporter

Whether you've caught a cold from your roomy, sprained your ankle running for the bus, got stomach convulsions from last night's pizza extraordinaire, and-or just feel depressed and you don't know why, look no further than your own front door ... of your dorm that is.

Last semester 20 Residence Hall Counselors participated in a 9-week one-credit Public Health Seminar sponsored by University Health Services. Each counselor was not only trained in first aid procedures, but also to act as a "resource to their peers in the area of health knowledge, attitudes and behaviors and serve as a liaison to University Health Services," according to Mrs. Ann Grose program coordinator who is a health educator and nurse practitioner at UMass Health Services.

The program teaches counselors to treat such simple problems as burns, splinters, nose bleeds, colds, sprained ankles, but also "to know when and whom to call for 'debatable' wounds or serious problems, and to assist the person to the Health Center" added Mrs. Grose.

During the training seminar, participants met with guest speakers such as Dr. Kraft from Mental Health, Ms. Evelyn Duston on problems with Alcohol, Ms. Debbie Norton from PSE (Peer Sex Education) and Contraception Clinic, Ms. Lisa Lambiase, Nutritionist, and Ms. Chris Faulkner from Dental Clinic. Also, Mrs. Ann Grose has compiled a manual for the program on care of common illnesses in conjunction with Dr. Katharine Reichert, Dr. McBride, Medical Director and Ms. Jane Zapka, Director of Health Education. "With this information the counselors learn how to use the information in dorms so they might, in turn, teach it to others," said Mrs. Grose.

This semester in-service sessions are being held for the 20 counselors.,

Anti-transient petition caused PCP defeats, say spokesmen

By BILL GONET
Staff Reporter

PCP spokesmen attributed the defeat of all of its candidates for town meeting representative in precinct 1 to an anti-transient petition directed against their candidates.

"The petition had the effect of turning our more long-time resident voters than would have normally voted," said Floyd Bailey, a defeated PCP candidate for town meeting representative in precinct 1.

Bailey said he felt that the petition generated an increase of voters who turned out to vote specifically against PCP candidates.

In precinct 1 where nine 3-year seats were contested, the 9 PCP candidates ran against a field of 20 candidates, including 5 incumbents who all polled more votes than anybody else running in that precinct.

The PCP's biggest vote getter in that precinct, Sandra Brayton, who finished tenth, lost by 108 votes. She received 114 votes while William Mullin and Robert Patterson, who were tied for ninth, both received 222 votes.

This year, when 20 candidates ran for nine seats, the front-runner incumbent Frank J. Bukoski polled 284 votes.

Last year, when 18 candidates ran for 15 seats, the front-runner received 152 votes: while the winner with the lowest number of votes polled only 89 votes.

Bailey, who received 96 votes, said he felt that the increase in the tally of this year's front runner over last year's front-runner resulted from an increased number of voters who turned out to vote against PCP candidates.

From a field of 43 PCP candidates running for town meeting representative, 12 were elected. The PCP, a coalition of candidates interested in representing the interests of students, tenants, and low income groups in general, had hoped that a strong turnout of students would have carried their slate.

"We did not get the student vote that we had hoped for," said Dough Phelps, defeated PCP candidate for town meeting moderator. "We got what we expected."

Phelps estimated that 2100 votes were cast in last year's election. A total of 3422 were cast this year; Phelps estimated that at least 1000 of these were cast by students.

Phelps and Mark Levitan, a PCP candidate for town meeting representative defeated in precinct 3, agreed that PCP candidates were hurt by three factors which varied in each precinct: lower than hoped student response, a block vote by long-time residents against PCP candidates, and an increased turnout of long-term resident voters generated by the anti-transient petition.

Vets present Walpole film

By JOSEPH COTTER
Progressive News Service

Three Thousand Years to Life, a half hour documentary film depicting conditions at Walpole Prison during the 1973 guards and union strike, will be playing at the Student Union this afternoon. Sponsored by the Veterans Coalition and Operation Update, a prison reform group, the movie will be shown continuously in the Commonwealth room between 1:00 p.m. and 3:00 p.m.

The film was made by Randal Conrad and Stephen Ujlaki with help from the New England Prisoners Association.

Three Thousand Years is an eye-opener to anyone who has not been exposed to prison life as it contains scenes and dialogue that was not related by the local media at that time.

The movie shows us how the inmates ran the prison without assistance from the Department of Corrections even more efficiently than the guards ever had while at the same time incidents of inmate violence dropped incredibly.

The problems that the prisoners have in trying to inform the public as to their plight is brought up time and time again but this film gives the campus community a chance to see Walpole Prison through a totally different perspective than the local televison.

Israeli Independence feted

On Sunday afternoon, April 13, Israel's 27th birthday will be celebrated here with a Five College Independence Day festival. The festivities will start at 3 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge with live entertainment by the "Zabarim", a top Israeli trio, followed by typical Israeli refreshments, such as felafel, and Israeli Dancing. At 8 p.m. the award winning Israeli film, "Three Days and a Child" will be shown in Campus Center 101. The film was made in Jerusalem and is in Hebrew with English sub-titles. Both these events are without charge, and the public is invited.

Philosophy Dept. conference

UMass department of philosophy announces a conference at which the following papers will be presented:

Today: 3 p.m. Professor Murray Ritely Smith College "The Set Theoretic Anatomy of a Murder" Campus Center 163-164.

8 p.m.: Professor Gareth Matthews, UMass-Amherst "On Talking Philosophy with Children".

Professor Clyde Evans, UMass-Boston "Philosophy with Children: Some Experiences and Some Reflections". Campus Center 101.

Tomorrow at 11 a.m. Professor Howard Cohen, UMass-Boston "On How the History of Philosophy Works" Campus Center 105.

Christianity talk at Smith

This Friday night offers a good opportunity to those whose spiritual search is open to the reality of Jesus Christ to experience a night blessed in His Lordship, at Smith College, in the basement of St. John's Episcopal Church at 7:30 p.m., featuring Rev. Freedom Wentworth II.

Freedom will also meet in the Chapel Lounge on Saturday morning at 9:00-11:00 with anyone with questions, comments, or problems.

DVP presents week-long program concerning oceanic environment

Next week, April 14-17, the Distinguished Visitors Program, in conjunction with the Coalition for Environmental Quality and Program Council will be presenting "Ocean Options." The programming including guest lecturers and four films from the classic series "The Undersea World of Jacques Cousteau" is designed to investigate various aspects of the ocean environment from the extremes of the Antarctic or the undersea Caribbean world to the vast resources and precarious potential of these waters.

The week will begin with a C.E.Q. sponsored speaker, John Teale who will be speaking on "The Health of the Oceans" in the S.U.B. at 8 p.m. Monday.

Tuesday and Wednesday will feature four films selected from the television specials in the series "The Undersea World of Jacques Cousteau. "Lagoon of the Lost Ships" and "Tragedy of the Red Salmon" will be shown at 8 p.m. in the S.U.B. April 15. "Smile of the Walrus" and "The Unsinkable Sea Otter" will be shown, same time, same place, on Wednesday.

The executive producer of the T.V. series, Tom Horton, is the guest lecturer for Thursday. His lecture combines slides and anecdotes about the Cousteau crew and their adventures from the "outtakes" not used in the series.

The week long Ocean Options events are free to the public.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

FRIDAY, APRIL 11 — Born today, you have an amazing gift for influencing other people in the way you would have them go -- whether that way involves an activity or merely a mental attitude. The show, however, is seldom on the other foot, for you are not one to be easily influenced by anyone at all. You are not an eager, highly enthusiastic talker; indeed, you generally speak your mind so little that, when you do, others are actually forced to sit up and take notice. You will never speak on what you do not know -- which only adds credibility to what you do say.

You are a highly ambitious individual, but you are also a highly independent one. Thus you will not easily accept aid from others, even when, by not accepting it, you jeopradize your own success. You would, in fact, almost rather fail on your own than succeed and have to share the credit. For this reason, you are not one who is suited to team ventures or joint enterprises. You work best and are happiest when engaged upon activities for which you alone are responsible.

You are probably not one who has been gifted with many talents. On the other hand, you have the possibility of bringing a single talent to very high development -- higher, in fact, than you could ever bring two or three together. You will need to secure proper education and training, however, if you are to be able to bring your single talent to full flower, and it would be well to be aware of this early in life.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Ssturday, April 12

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Customary Saturday activities may leave you at a loss by day's end. You might do well to take another's advice about impending new projects.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — If you would have family members live up to your code, you must yourself set the example. Don't be alarmed by a youngster's seeming revolt.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — The more diplomatic you can be within the domestic circle, the sooner you will see the results of your efforts to persuade the young.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Gain the freedom from worry you need for a happy weekend. Take into your confidence one who knows what your priorities should be.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Begin now to prepare for holidays to come. Don't expect others to do your work for you today, though many may owe you a favor or two.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — If you insist upon becoming involved in another's private affairs, you must expect to take some of the blame if things go wrong.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Turn your attention toward projects and issues outside yourself and your immediate family. Other people's children give a clue to a friend's behavior.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take care not to overstep the bounds of good behavior. You can do another considerable harm without meaning to simply by failing in caution.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Keep on your toes today if you would be able to take advantage of another's influence. Good behavior counts for more than ability today.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Outside interference may be such that you will be unable to control situations as you would like. Try to gain the upper hand by evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Reconsider your views of another's efforts to get to the top. What you take to be a shortcut may actually be a well-considered certainty.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — An out-of-the-ordinary event early in the day can make this a Saturday for the whole family to remember. Take charge of family affairs in the afternoon and evening.

Best record for gym men

By BILL DOYLE

Despite the loss of the team's best gymnast through a transfer and amid rumors that the gymnastics program at UMass was about to be phased down, that there would be no full time coach next year, and that some of the team's key performers were going to also transfer next year because of those rumors, the UMass men's gymnastics team compiled a 10-2 record this year, the best ever in the team's existence.

Gene Whelan, an All-American last year for UMass, transferred to Penn state because of the uncertainty that the program at UMass would remain at its present high level. Also, a proposal by the Athletic Department last year to phase down the gymnastics program and not to hire a full time gymnastics coach next year, hurt the recruiting for this year as only two of ten freshmen recruits came here.

Throughout the season, several of the team's top-notch gymnasts were rumored ready to transfer if the coach, Tom Dunn, was let go, because there would be no state position for him.

Despite all this, the team stuck together and had a "fantastic dual meet season" according to Dunn.

"We couldn't have hoped for more," Dunn added.

The season's highlights had to be the victories over Springfield College and Temple. The Minutemen edged Springfield midway through the season, 204.25-203.20 and nipped Temple in their second to last meet, 207.40-206.30, using their season's best score to clinch a tie for second place in the dual meet season.

Whereas the Minutemen enjoyed their best record ever in the dual meet season, the team faltered a bit in the E.I.G.L. championships. UMass finished fourth there to end up in third place in the league on the basis of its second place dual meet finish along with its championship showing.

"We could have done a little better in the championships," Dunn said. "We didn't do badly but we missed a couple of routines in the compulsories."

The highlight of the post-season was the E.I.G.L. championship by Bill Brouillet on the parallel bars. It marked the second straight year that Dunn, a former national p-bar champ for Penn State, had coached the E.I.G.L. p-bar champ. Last year it was Gene Whelan.

Peter Lusk scored the highest still ring average in the finals of the E.I.G.L.'s to finish first among Division I competitors and Steve Marks place third in vaulting among Division I gymnasts.

Brouillet, Lusk, and Marks qualified for the nationals where Brouillet finished 13th on p-bars and Marks finished 21st. Lusk did not have a good meet, as he finished 26th.

The team had "no outstanding individuals" according to Dunn as the team's strength rested in its balance. In every event, the team had at least four good competitors.

"We didn't have many scores in the 9's," Dunn said, "but we had a lot in the mid 8's. Basically, we had an inexperienced team but everyone really came through when we needed it most."

Brouillet and Dave "the rock" Kulakoff were the team's two most consistent performers, Dunn said. ("We could always count on them to hit," he said.) Roy Johnson, all-arounder, had good meets and not so-good meets, Dunn added, but "he always had his best performances in the key meets."

Injuries played a big part of the team's performance, as they do for every gymnastics team. Dunn labeled the biggest disappointment of the season as the injuries to the Marks brothers. Steve missed the season's first three meets with a broken hand and Paul was hampered by a bad back all season which ultimately kept him out of the season's final game and the E.I.G.L. championships.

Only Kulakoff, Henning Geist, and Dave Douglas escaped serious injury throughout the season.

The season's lowpoint was labeled by Dunn as the team's poor showing at Southern Connecticut.

Next year's outlook in still up in the air. Depending whether Dunn will be rehired, whether anyone will transfer, and whether any good recruits will attend UMass.

Brouillet, Tim Beasley, and Jack Fabbricante will graduate this year. Another senior, Roy Johnson, has decided to use his year of eligibility that he has remaining due to missing all last year because of a separated shoulder, and come back next year. That will be a plus for the team.

This year's juniors "did a lot better than expected" said Dunn as they contributed greatly to the team's efforts.

The Minutemen won every meet this year that they had a chance to win, Dunn said. Next year could be even better but then again it could be a disaster. Only time will tell.

Naiads — Aquatic Art

By SUE DAVIS

Naiads, the University Aquatic Art Club, had its opening night of the annual Naiads Spring Performance on Wednesday at 8:00 p.m. in NOPE pool.

After listening to a brief explanation of what Aquatic Art is ("the communication of ideas, feelings, emotions, or experiences .... through aquatic movement), the audience enjoyed watching ten compositions. Audience favorites were "Hello Dolly", a comedy choreographed by Sandy Reed and performed by Laurie Green and Sue Davis; "Kaleidescope", a colorful composition of floating patterns choreographed by Maria Matesanz; and "A Search for Peace", choreographed and performed by Michele Theberge. The evening splashed to a close with the finale "Just Entertainment" choreographed by Helaine Hughes and performed by the Naiads. The club presented its show again last night, and will also be performing tonight and Saturday at 8:00 p.m. in NOPE pool; admission is only $.50 for students and $1.50 for others.

JV batsmen nip QCC, 2-1

By CHAS O'CONNOR

The combined efforts of two pitchers and a first baseman who doesn't seem to fold under pressure provided the UMass JVs with another 2-1 baseball win yesterday afternoon against Quinsigamond Community College in Worcester.

First baseman Tom Shilale, who won Wednesday's game against Berkshire Community College with a suicide squeeze bunt, doubled home Bavel Cummings from first base in the top of the tenth inning to break a 1-1 deadlock.

Sophomore Chris Kirby started for UMass and pitched five scoreless innings before yielding to Gordon Smith in the sixth. Smith recorded seven strikeouts in his five inning stint.

The two UMass pitchers allowed a meager total of three hits.

Quinsigamond scored first by tallying an unearned run in the sixth inning on a walk, a sacrifice and an error.

UMass tied it up in the top of the ninth inning in a manner that would make Abner Doubleday turn over in his grave. Pinch hitter Mark Sullivan walked, bringing Al Lopriore to the plate in what would normally be a bunt situation. In his three previous times at the plate, Lopriore had made two hits and had hit a ball 400 feet that had been caught. Coach McKay decided to gamble.

Lopriore made McKay's gamble a good one by tripling in Sullivan, but failed on his home run bid by being thrown out at the plate.

In the game-winning inning, Dennis Bannon walked and was forced at second by Bavel Cummings. Tom Shilale doubled to right center, scoring Cummings.

MINI MITTS: Centerfielder John Kearney and leftfielder Bavel Cummings much more than adequate in their flychasing duties....UMass pitchers allowed but six hits in those two games...in Saturday's doubleheader against New Hampton Prep, sophomore righthander Tom Ferris, a transfer from Salem State, will start the first game....Tom Nigro, winner in Wednesday's game, may get some work somewhere along the line Saturday..."I'm looking forward to playing a doubleheader because it gives me a chance to play everyone" McKay...

42.4 timing. UMass produced a 43.8 clocking against Holy Cross.

The 440 Low Hurdles should also present another problem for UMass. Carlos and Jim Duncan's 54.5 and 54.7 times in this event surpass UMass' no. 1 hurdler — Curt Stegerwald's 56.9 Holy Cross performance. In addition, the 440 and 880 running events and relays present serious obstacles to a UMass victory.

Dartmouth's Rich Nichols and Kenny Norman have produced 47.5 clockings, 2 of the best timings in New England. Dartmouth's Sandy Fitchet enters the half mile with a 1:52 timing, good enough to be New England champ.

Track women lose tri-meet

By MIKE BERGER

Wednesday the UMass Track Club, sponsored by the Sugarloaf Athletic Club lost a track meet to Fitchburg and the Cherokee Track Club scoring 17 points opposed to Cherokee's 58 and Fitchburg's 20. The underlying reason for their loss might be in the university's failure to sponsor UMass as a team.

Cooch Tom Dederian notes that "Mostly every high school has a girl's track team. When the girls come to college, they find that the university has no team, so they find it difficult to compete. Most of the girls who do come out remark that "for a $64 athletic fee, they should receive something more than just a part time coach, no uniforms and no transportation to away meets."

Although Coach Dederian is lacking quantity (there is no one to throw the shot put, discus, and javelin,) he sees the 20 girls who do come out to be extremely hard working. Against Fitchburg and Cherokee, Sue Kibbling became the "workhorse" of the team with a first in the high jump, a second in the 220, and a 110 "leg" in the 880 medley (220, 110, 110, and 110).

Other scorers were Julie Lafrenier's 2nd place in the 880, Sue Winter's third place in the 100, and Marian Kulick's third place in the mile. Other good performances were turned in by Debby Banks and Debby Lee, and Loreen Graguloi in the 100 and 220 and Kathy Dooley in the half mile.

Netmen visit Vermont

By PETER NALAK

The UMass tennis team travels to the University of Vermont today in preparation for their match against the Catamounts Saturday afternoon.

The netmen are going up a day early in order to get in some practice time at Vermont's indoor courts.

This year the Yankee Conference championships are being held at U.V.M. on the same courts. Coach Kosakowski wants to get as much practice time as possible for his team since the championships are only two weeks away.

Vermont is the defending conference champion and the tennis powerhouse of the league. Last year they beat both UMass and the University of Connecticut by four points to take the title.

Vermont is heavily favored in this year's tournament since all of their players from last year are returning.

The netmen's pride will be on the line tomorrow because UMass has been Yankee Conference champions six out of the past eight years. They hope to show everyone in the league that UMass is definitely a threat against Vermont's tennis supremacy.

Men's crew racing two foes Saturday

By BOB NORTON

The UMass crew team travels to Poughkeepsie, N.Y. today to challenge two more Dad Vail foes - Marist College and the Mass. Maritime Academy. The team will arrive in New York this afternoon to get a look at the river and its course before racing on Saturday.

After last Saturday's loss to Trinity, Coach Mahoney did some major reshuffling among the Varsity and JV eights. The JV eight demolished Trinity last week, and Mahoney moved three oarsmen up in his lineup change.

Mahoney was once again forced to reach into his bag of tricks as Varsity stroke Steve Loomer is bedridden with a high fever. He moved Jon Hill from three in the varsity to stroke, and brought Doug Frost from sixth seat in the JV eight to three in the varsity to accommodate the situation.

Not much is known about the Mass. Maritime Academy, but Marist College always has a fine crew. They are known for their tough freshman crews due to their intensive recruitment programs. Eventually these seasoned prep-school oarsmen climb to the J.V. and varsity levels to provide keen competition. Only two freshman have had prior rowing experience so it is believed that freshman Coach Mark Casey and his fleet won't have it as easy as last week when they manhandled Trinity.

Everyone knows that when you're on top, you're everyone's target. This Saturday there will be no exception. Mahoney indicated that "they won't lie down, they'll be sky high - we'll have to put it to them in the first 500 meters." Bets are, this race won't be decided until the flag is down at the finish.

Playoff highlights

B's bow 4-3 in OT

CHICAGO [UPI] - Ivan Boldirev scored from 15 feet out with 7:33 gone in a sudden death overtime Thursday night to give the Chicago Black Hawks a 4-3 win over the Boston Bruins and square their best-of-three first round Stanley Cup Playoff series at one victory apiece.

It was Boldirev's second goal of the game and the playoffs, and Goalie Gilles Gilbert had no chance on the shot. Jim Pappin drew Gilbert out of position, then passed across the goal mouth to Boldirev, who whirled and shot in one motion.

Boston came from behind twice to tie it and force the third overtime ever between the Bruins and Black Hawks in Stanley Cup Play. It was the Hawks' second victory in the three contests.

UNIONDALE, N.Y. [UPI] - Bill Fairbairn scored two goals within a span of 51 seconds, the first on a power play and a second when the team was shorthanded, to lift the aroused New York Rangers to lifesaving 8-3 victory over the New York Islanders Thursday night in a fight-filied, penalty marred playoff game.

Faced with sudden extinction if they lost, the Rangers raced off to a 4-1 lead in the opening period and knocked out Islander goalie Glenn Resch with three more goals in the second. They deadlocked the best-of-three series at 1-1. The deciding game will be played in Madison Square Garden Friday night.

LANDOVER, MD. [UPI] - Bob McAdoo scored 35 points and teammates Randy Smith and Garr Heard scored 24 points apiece Thursday night to lead the Buffalo Braves to a 113-102 opening round National Basketball Association playoff victory over the Washington Bullets.

Game two of the best of seven series will be held Saturday in Buffalo.

NEW YORK [UPI] - Jim Barnett came off the bench to ignite late New York explosions in both the second and third quarters Thursday night and lead the Knicks to a 106-Conference best-of-three qualifying series at one game apiece.

conference best-of-three qualifying series at one game apiece.

The third and deciding game will be played Saturday night in Houston.

Golfers open with a bang

By RON ARENA

Those old classic cliches fit the story well. You know, legendary sayings like "They started out like gangbusters" or "They came to play." Well, the UMass golf team did just that as they inaugerated their spring season with two victories and a tie.

Yesterday, in a tri-match, the Minutemen and Yale, the two best teams in the East, shot their way to a 398-tie, while Columbia lagged fairways behind with a 428. On Wednesday, overcoming adverse course conditions, UMass rocked Rhode Island with a 14-stroke victory.

The Yale meet (should we even count Columbia?) did little to distinguish the better of these two teams. Based on previous matches, in fact, comparing the two would be similar to comparing Jack Nicklaus and Arnold Palmer on their best days. The teams have met three times now. Yale won the first meet, the qualifications for the ECAC, by one stroke; last year's Easterns ended in a tie; and now yesterday's results. Statistically speaking, the only conclusion would be that Yale is one-third of a stroke better.

Senior captain Joe Artman, playing what round.", commented the coach. "Two rounds back-to-back like Joe played are just great."

Coach Fan Gaudette described as an unbelievable round, shot a 74 on the par — 70 course at Yale. Artman had three birdies for the day, coming off a brilliant 74 the prior day. Noting that Artman was playing an unfamiliar course, Gaudette had nothing but praise. "Excellent. Fabulous, A helluva

'Excellent. Fabulous. A helluva round.'

John Lasek also contributed a fine round with an impressive 76, while Howie Terban and Rick Olsen shot 82's. Glenn Sullivan, the only newcomer to the squad, rounded out the top five with an 84.

Sullivan, who also played hockey, could not go out for the team in the fall. He spoke with Gaudette about joining the spring squad, and when he shot a 79 Wednesday in his first time out for the year, Gaudette decided to give him a chance.

Sullivan, a freshman, started his round on the 10th hole. Heading into his last two holes, he had a 7 over par. On the par-four 8th, Sullivan took an eight after hitting a ball into the trees. Probably with that shot dictating his thoughts, Sullivan then triple-bogeyed the 9th.

But aside from his last two holes, Gaudette was very pleased with his performance. "It was a good round of golf for that boy", he commented. "He hasn't played all year. He just has to learn to finish, to not give up." He also noted that Sullivan had never played on the course before, and that "the course was really tough if you didn't know it."

In Wednesday's home match, the course was in anything but tip-top shape, as bumpy greens somehow find a way of detracting a ball from its path. (It says so right in my Physics book!)

Apparently Artman studied his Newtonian laws of motion, however, as his 75 on the par-72 Hickory Ridge Country Club topped the field again. Considering the condition of the course and that it was their first match, Artman appears ready to challenge the PGA pros.

Olsen also enjoyed a fine day with a round of 79. Lasek (81), Terban (82), Tom Toski (82), and Jim Haggerty (83) completed the UMass scoring.

For the two matches, Gaudette was more than pleased with the team's performance. "They're really surprising me right now." he explained. "For us to be below 400 at Yale is very good. We proved that we could still play, and we should be tough going down the stretch.

"We can only get better from here. We still have to get some kinks out. From now on though, every time we tee that ball up, we'll be out to prove we're the best."

Hooks and Slices

The URI match was best six scores out-of-seven, while yesterday's was the best five, thus explaining the difference in totals, 482 and 398 ... Steve Sherrill, who last year in the ECAC tied for the individual low medalist (only to lose in overtime), had an off round of 81 for the Elis ... As did Tom Toski with an 87, including one 9, but Gaudette knows he'll come around ... The conditions of the greens on both courses provided for many missed short putts ... The next foe of the golfers will be New Hampshire, at home on Tuesday.

Trackmen in tri-meet

By MIKE BERGER

Saturday's meet with Dartmouth and Colgate (1:00 at Derby Track) may be termed a "seat squirmer 'till the gun lap of the last event is sounded."

Although Colgate remains a scouting enigma to track coach Ken O'Brien, he terms the meet between UMass and Dartmouth that of "championship caliber". Dartmouth did edge UMass by 1 point in their indoor contest and Coach O'Brien expects the meet to end up 5 points either way. In almost every running event, Dartmouth has the individual talent to take first place. But O'Brien feels that UMass' depth should provide the impetus for the victory.

Dartmouth's features great individual strength in the javelin and the discus. Skip Cummins and Chet Chepinsky have thrown 235 and 238 respectively. Umass' Todd Holt (204-11) will hope to sneak in a third and or hope either Cummins or Chepinsky have a bad day. The same is likewise for UMass' Jim Mason (137-1) who will have to contend with Dartmouth's Curt Starr (155) for first place in the discus. Hopefully UMass will be able to sweep the Long Jump, Triple Jump, and place 1, 2 in the High Jump. Watch for Ralph Moody to give Joe Martens a battle in the High Jump. Both have cleared 6 ft-8 inches this season with Marten's personal high of 7 ft.

UMass' Tom Beland, Joe Martens, and David Hinds, will have their hands full with 9:6, 21:3 speed of sprinters Tom Fleming and Rick Berryman. In addition, these two sprinters have contributed in the fastest 440 relay in New England with a

Day of reckoning for varsity baseballers

By BOB HIGGINS

Tomorrow could be one of the most important days of the season for the UMass baseball team, as they will attempt to answer a lot of questions in a home doubleheader (1:00, Earl Lorden Field) against Northeastern University.

However, the biggest question of the day could be the weather. Each game is scheduled for only seven innings, and if the weather resembles the hurricane-like conditions of Tuesday's win over American International College, everyone will probably wish they were even shorter.

For the Minutemen, the important question, as usual, will be pitching. "There are four pitchers who I would like to have seen some action," said Coach Dick Bergquist yesterday.

Sophomore Jeff Reardon, who was shaky in attaining a record of 1-1 on the Southern trip, will start the first game. Depending on how things go, Bergquist will also use John McManus (0-2), Jerry Erb (0-0), and freshman Rich Kelley, who pitched eight scoreless innings down South.

Northeastern, a perennial New England baseball power, was not involved in New England tournament play last season for the first time in three years, but they beat UMass badly at Boston, 10-2. They have only played one game so far this season, edging Bradeis 5-4 in ten innings on Wednesday. "But they play today (yesterday) and tomorrow so they should be ready for us," commented Bergquist.

The Huskies possess, in southpaw Jim Walker, one of the top pitchers in New England. "He's not overpowering--he's more of a control pitcher," said Bergquist. Walker, who won eight games last season, is a good bet to start the first contest tomorrow.

Another question for the Minutemen will be the status of senior co-captain John Healy. "We hope he'll be healthy enough to catch one game for us tomorrow," said the coach. Healy had hitting problems down South, and has been out with a sore shoulder for a while.

One of Healy's replacements as catcher, junior Jim Black, has been one of the mainstays of a UMass offense which has suddenly developed some consistency. Black is hitting .391, and, according to Bergquist, the offense "is hitting hard and often enough to always be a threat to score runs."

The final question for the Minutemen, which was first raised by the AIC game, is fielding. UMass came up with six errors in that one (some can be partially attributed to the weather), but Bergquist prefers to look on the bright side. "I saw some good things," he said. "We turned a couple of nice double plays, and I'm not making excuses, but that weather was brutal." The coach failed to mention a simply beautiful catch by center fielder Pete Backstrom out by the 375-foot mark on a wind-blown fly on Tuesday.

DIAMOND DOPE...In the latest statistics, Black, Backstrom (.375), and first baseman John Seed (.333) are the leading UMass hitters. Backstrom has all four UMass home runs...Craig Allegrezza, who went the distance vs. AIC, leads the pitchers with a record of 2-1 and a 1.35 ERA....The diamondmen will travel to Boston College next Tuesday for a big game....Bergquist is unsure as to who will be in right field tomorrow.

UMass third baseman Jerry Mondalto goes high for a late throw as left fielder Steve Wright moves to back him up in Tuesday's wind-blown win over AIC. Hopefully the weather will improve for tomorrow's doubleheader.

La semana latinoamericana

A sólo unos días del evento de mayor envergadura para la comunidad hispanohablante en la Universidad de Massachusetts y sus alrededores, los organizadores de la "Semana Latinoamericana" se encuentran dando los últimos toques para asegurar el éxito rotundo de tan importante evento.

Dicha semana comenzará el dia 14 de abril hasta el sábado 19 del mismo mes; Toda una serie de diferentes actividades se llevarán a cabo, las cuales incluyen desde conferencias, conciertos hasta un rumboso y despanpanante baile. Dichas actividades se encargaran de dejarnos una visión clara del mundo Latinoamericano. Un mundo en transformación, de rica herencia cultural y de pueblos aguerridos que se levantan con el grito-de-libertad.

Los preparativos que comenzarán aproximadamente hace un mes, ya están en su etapa final. Entre las actividades programadas, se encuentran, como hemos dicho, una conferencia de los procesos políticos en Latinoámerica (con énfasis en la Argentina, un concierto con la "Nueva Canción" como tema, una pelicula acerca de la Revolución (urbana, un panel acerca de la mujer Latinoamericana, una noche de teatro, etc., etc. Por último-para cerrar con broche de oro tan histórico evento, tremendo baile a cargo de una orquesta Latinoamericana internacionalmente conocida.

Como se ve el programa en su diseño, cubre la gran gama de aspectos culturales de los pueblos "Latinoamericanos". Para hacer estas actividades posibles, "Ahora" ha invertido todos sus recursos en combinación con el respaldo brindado por organizaciones progresistas, que han extendido la importancia de este evento. Crédito especial debe dársele a las personas que participaron y participan en diversos comités, los cuales han hecho posible que estas actividades. A ellos, pues, nuestro saludo y respeto.

Fortaleciendo el espiritu de unidad entre los pueblos Latinoamericanos, cabe mencionarse el hecho de que eventos similares se estarán celebrando simultáneamente en Boston y Nueva York.

La "Semana Latinoamericana" va p'alante desde el 14 de abril. Así es, como cada uno de nosotros debe convertirse en un vocero de tan magno acto, a ver si podemos gozar de un evento de primera.

Allá nos veremos.........

Cuba sponsors case

Puerto Rico at the U.N.

Letter dated 17 August 1971 from the Permanent Representative of Cuba to the United Nations Addressed to the Secretary-General

On instructions from the Revolutionary Government of Cuba, I have the honour to request the inclusion in the supplementary list of items for the agenda for the twenty-sixth session of the General Assembly of an item entitled "The colonial case of Puerto Rico".

In accordance with the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, I am sending you herewith an explanatory memorandum.

(Signed) Ricardo Alarcon
Ambassador
Permanent Representative of Cuba to the United Nations.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. Puerto Rico is a Latin American country. It has a nationality of its own which crystallized as early as the beginning of the nineteenth century. Its history, culture, customs, traditions and interests are totally different from those of the United States, the metropolitan colonial power.

2. The people of Puerto Rico has a long and heroic tradition of struggle for its national independence. The common task of helping that people to win full emancipation is part of the historical patrimoney of all the Latin American peoples.

3. In the first quarter of the nineteenth century, when the first stirrings of rebellion against the colonial power of Spain began to make themselves felt in the West Indies, the Liberator, Simon Bolivar, personally assumed responsibility for assisting and encouraging those in Cuba and Puerto Rico who were fighting for national independence. Since that very early time, it has been the government of the United States which represented the main obstacle to the fulfillment by the Latin American patriots of their duty of solidarity.

4. On 23 September 1868, in the town of Lares, the Puerto Rican people launched its war of independence against Spain. Side by side with the people of Cuba, the inhabitants of the small West Indian island defied colonial power and fought under the very difficult conditions resulting from their insularity until the year 1898.

5. As a result of that struggle, Spain was forced to grant Puerto Rico a relatively large degree of autonomy, which was enshrined in the Constitution of 25 November 1897. Under the terms of that Constitution, the people of Puerto Rico elected deputies to the Spanish Cortes, acquired the freedom to trade with all countries of the world and exercised important powers and prerogatives of self-government representing a degree of autonomy incomparably greater than that which now exists in the island under United States colonial rule. The Constitution of 1897 provides that Spain could not modify the status of Puerto Rico without the consent of the Puerto Rican Parliament.

6. However, on 25 July 1898, the island was invaded by the armed forces of the United States, which placed the territory under military occupation, dissolved the Parliament and established United States rule by force of arms.

7. History provides ample evidence of the expansionist aims of the United States with respect to the West Indies. Everybody knows the famous line written by President Monroe in letter to Mr. Nelson, United States Ambassador in Madrid, in 1822: "Cuba and Puerto Rico are natural appendages of the United States".

8. The military occupation of Puerto Rico was one of the most flagrant acts of piracy perpetrated by rising United States imperialism. In 1898, the United States, motivated by its own imperialist interests, intervened in the war which the Cuban people were waging against Spain for its independence.

9. The Cuban liberation movement was on the verge of achieving total victory over the forces of Spain bankrupted by its colonial war. The expansionist circles in Washington took advantage of those circumstances to seize the Spanish possessions with a view to establishing their own colonial empire.

10. In July 1898, Spain was preparing to surrender after the defeats suffered in the fighting in Cuban territory. On 16 July, the Spanish Army surrendered in the city of Santiago de Cuba. The following day, the 17th, the Spanish Government, through its Ambassador in Paris, made an offer to the United States to open peace talks. The very same day, the United States Government ordered its Navy to invade Puerto Rico. An American writer, who certainly could not be accused of hostility towards the imperialist designs of his Government, wrote quite properly: It was not a battle against the Spaniards any longer — they were fleeing satisfactorily — but against time: to establish a fait accompli occupation of the island before an unfavorable turn in the peace negotiations now in progress could deprive Miles' armies of the territory they already controlled." (Jack Cameron Dierks, A Leap to Arms, the Cuban Campaign of 1898, Philadelphia and New York, 1970).

11. Under the terms of the Treaty of Paris, signed between Spain and the United States, Spain "cede" to the United States the territory of Puerto Rico (article 2 of the Treaty), thus consumating a typical act of colonial plunder in which the people of the territory concerned had absolutely no say. To what extent, the Treaty of Paris, in so far as it concerns Puerto Rico, is null and void because it was done in total disregard of the Puerto Rican Constitution and its autonomous institutions. That argument was invoked by the great Puerto Rican patriot of the time, Eugenio Maria de Hostos: "Puerto Rico is a legal entity and could not be stripped of any of its prerogatives as a nation by a war which was not of its making". In October 1935, in a plea before the United States Supreme Court, Pedro Albizu Campos, leader of the Nationalist Party of Puerto Rico, asserted: "The Treaty (of Paris) is null and void in so far as it concerns Puerto Rico. Spain could not cede Puerto Rico because Puerto Rico was not a negotiable entity (res in commercium). Puerto Rico became a sovereign nation by virtue of the Charter of Self-Government (Carta Autonomica) which Spain could not amend without the consent of Puerto Rico. And the United States could not agree to the cession of the territory because it was obligated to respect the independence of Puerto Rico...The feudal concept of international law which permitted the conquest of one nation by another through war and retention of the victim as the property of the victory, as a possession, must have been dead in the United States too."

12. By virtue of an act of imperialist plunder the people of Puerto Rico lost the autonomy which it had wrestled from Spain. The territory, which had won international recognition as a separate legal entity when it was admitted to the Universal Postal Union in 1897, openly and frankly became a conquest of the United States, a colonial possession of the United States.

Puertorriqueños asesinados

Varios puertorriqueños han sido brutalmente asesinados en Lowell, Boston y Springfield en los últimos días. El caso más conocido es el Carlos Soto (Rafael Decodé) ultimado a balazos por un par de policias en Springfield a finales de la semana pasada.

Carlos llevaba unos dos meses en la comunidad. Había sido acusado de posesión de marihuana, y sentenciado, segun fuentes informadas, a mes y medio "suspendida."

Según investigaciones realizadas por ECO LATINO, el policía que le cegó la vida al joven boricua había dicho el jueves anterior al incidente que lo mataría.

La versión de la policía asegura que la víctima viajaba en un automovil hurtado, y que, al ver los guardias, le lanzó el auto encima. Luego, corrió al patio interior de un edificio. Allí sacó un objeto y recibió los disparos.

"Me han matado; ayúdenme puertorriqueños." fue la última frase pronunicada por nuestro hermano. Vecinos que presenciaron el hecho montaron en cólera contra el abuson policial.

Entre otras cosas, dicen las investigaciones que los vecinos vieron al policía dispararle a Carlos cuando ya estaba herido en el suelo. Dicen también los testigos que el policía hirió a Carlos con un destornillador en la frente.

La furiosa comunidad alega que, para colmo de colmos, el guardia amenazó también a los testigos.

Una vez herido de muerte nuestro hermano Carlos, es arrastrado hasta el automóvil policíaco. Por razones aún desconocidas, los guardias tomaron una vía equivocada hacia el hospital. Carlos llegó, sin vida, alegan los testigos.

Fuentes comunales describen a la comunidad latina como alarmada y asustada. Temen que la policía tome represalias contra aquellos que declaren.

Por otro lado, se informo que el licenciado Serotta asumió la responsabilidad del caso.

The Coalition for a People's Budget (CPB) es un grupo de estudiantes, profesores y trabajadores organizados en el Campus para protestar contra el corte de los fondos del presupuesto de la Universidad, propuesto por el Gobernador Dukakis para el proximó ano academico.

El corte de los fondos asciende al 33 per cent del presupuesto actual de la Universidad, lo cual solidificaria el crecimiento regresivo de la alta cualidad de la educacion universitaria.

Es a traves de la existencia de la educacion publica universitaria, que un largo numero de la minoria, de la clase trajadora y de la clase media baja, tiene acceso a uno de los mas importante recurso de nuestra sociedad, — la educacion —.

El corte del presupuesto de la Universidad puede socabar esta oportunidad de estudio. El proyectado corte del 50 per cent en la ayuda financiera, amenaza seriomente la oportunidad de entrada a la Universidad de muchos estudiantes de las comunidades pobres, mientras que el posible congelamiento en el empleo de miembros de la facultades, en las compras de libros, la reduccion de programas para graduados y el despido de los trabajadores, perjudica no solo la calidad de la educacion sino tambien, la vida de aquellos que se benefician actualmente de los diversos trabajos en la Universidad.

Esta demanda la hacemos en un tiempo de crisi economica y la cual, debe ser respondida con la participacion activa de todo y cada uno de nosotros que en definitiva somos los mayores afectados.

El amenazante corte de los presupuestos de la educacion publica, simultaneamente con el crecimiento de la ayuda publica a la educacion privada desmiente categoricamente la necesidad de dicho corte.

Las 2/3 partes de todos los Fondos Federales que recive la Universidad para la educacion, son utilizados para la escuela privada. En la presente Seccion Legislativa, hay un movimiento significativo para hacer crecer nuestro apoyo a la Coalition for a People's Budget.

Dos proyectos de ley estan bajo consideration con fines de promover ayuda directa del Estado a las escuelas privadas, con la consiguiente actitud se conseguiria; una accion competitiva entre los colegios privados y las universidades por el precio que se pagaria doblemente en las Universidades del Estado.

EL CORTE EN LA EDUCACION, JUNTO CON LOS CORTES DE SALUD MENTAL Y DE BIENESTAR SOCIAL, CONSTITUYE UN INTENTO POR FORZAR A LA CLASE TRABAJADORA A CARGAR CON LA PRESENTE CRISI ECONOMICA. NOSOTROS DEBEMOS LUCHAR POR ESTABLECER QUE EN LA UNIVERSIDAD PUBLICA NO ADVENGA A LA CONDICION DE ENCLAVE CONSUMIDOR. DEBEMOS GARANTIZAR QUE LOS RECURSOS SOCIALES PUEDAN SER ASEQUIBLE A TODOS POR IGUAL, NO SIMPLEMENTE PARA AQUELLOS QUE PUEDAN PAGAR.

Le invitamos a asistir a la reunion de Coalition for a People's Budget que se llevara a cabo el martes 15 de abril, de 1:00 a 3:00 de la tarde en el Student Union, y demonstrar con nuestra presencia el apoyo necesario para parar este crimen contra los estudiantes de escasos recursos y contra la clase trabajadora.

Nuestro empuje debe ser numerico. Recuerdalo. Esta es tu responsabilidad — asiste.

Our future is at stake

By Sherry Flashman

The Coalition for a People's Budget (CPB) is a group of students, staff and faculty organizing on campus to protect proposed university budget cuts. Governor Dukakis had proposed for the next academic year a 33 per cent cut in the budget of the State University. Such a cut will further solidify the increasingly regressive trend in higher education, the trend toward making quality higher education the prerogative of the wealthy.

It is through the existence of Public higher education that large numbers minority, of working class and lower middle class people have traditionally had access to one of the most important resources of our society.

Budget cuts for the State University can only undermine this tradition. The project 50 per cent cut in financial aid threatens the ability of many students even to attend the university, while the potential refreeze on faculty hiring and book buying, the shrinking of graduate programs and the lay-offs of classified employees impairs the quality of education and life for those who can remain.

The claim is made that in times of economic crisis we must all share the burden. But the impending budget cuts in public education simultaneous with increasing aid to private education belies this.

Currently, 2-3rds of all Federal funds for education received by Massachusetts are allocated to private schools.

And in the present legislative session there is significant movement to increase this support. Two bills under construction attempt to provide direct state aid to private schools and to improve the competitive position of private colleges and universities by doubling tuition at the State University.

The cuts in education, together with cuts in mental health and welfare are an attempt to force working people — those people who can least afford it to carry the weight of the present economic crisis. We must fight to establish that the public university is not an expendable institution. We must guarantee that social resources should be available to everyone, not simply to those who can pay.

Come to a rally sponsored by the CPB Tuesday, April 15, from 1:00 to 3:00 in front of the Student Union steps to show your support and to learn more about the nature and impact of budget cuts on the University. Our Strength Is In Numbers. Be There.

En otras informaciones recibidas, otro puertorriqueño fue brutalmente asesinado por un individuo en Boston. Mientras un grupo de personas rodeaba al boricua, el asesino le molía la cabeza a golpes con una piedra.

Este otro hermano boricua llevaba nada más que dos meses en Boston procedente de Puerto Rico.

Otro caso más se habia reportado hace unas cuantas semanas en Lowell, donde otro puertorriqueño fue amarrado, torturado y luego asesinado.

Fuentes allegadas a la redacción del ECO LATINO aseguran que estos asesinatos tienen la intencion de desalentar la emigración de puertorriquenos hacia esta área. De la misma manera, declaran que no tienen esperanzas de que la policía, investigándose a sí misma, encuentre la verdad de estos asesinatos.

El español de Puerto Rico

Motivo es de controversia entre diferentes sectores el tema del español de Puerto Rico. ?Dónde se habla mejor español, en Amherst, Massachusetts, Valladolid, España o en San Juan de Puerto Rico? Sin entrar en una polémica de carácter rigurosamente linguistico, nos gustaría aclarar las raíces de dicha controversia y necesariamente tendremos que recurrir a datos histórico-sociales.

Harto sabido es cómo la influencia darwinista, con la cual se pretende explicar la superioridad de ciertas razas, ha influído en las formulaciones de quién es superior y quién va a someter a quién. Si bien a Nietzche se la ha considerado el "abortado" de la mente hitleriana, se le puede considerar a Darwin el padrastro involuntario de Teodoro Roosevelt y su política de superioridad racial. Pues bien, estas teorías basadas en razas y seres superiores y en superhombres y superculturas, han querido avasallar al resto de las llanmadas "culturas inferiores" y se ha tratado de ignorar las aportaciones culturales de las naciones tercer mundistas. Es la política del vasallaje en todo el sentido de la palabra, y respondemos como naciones sometidas muchas veces a esta humillación con sumisión.

Se presupone que el español correcto es el que nos legó España cuando su colonización y que la mexcla de los elementos indio y africano es sólo una corrupción de esa lengua. Aquí hay varios puntos que considerar, el primero siendo ésto de la importancia de una cultura que se cree superior y el sometimiento de la otra.

Como sabemos, el colonizador español llegó a Puerto Rico y suplantó, destruyendo, la cultura del indio por la española. Se le impuso al indígena no sólo la lengua, sinó una forma de vida tan ajena a ellos que les llevó a la desaparición total. Esta falta de respeto de las culturas colonizadoras ha traumatizado nuestras raíces, que siguen siendo no reconocidas sino como culturas primitivas (lo que para un colonizador y su colonizado es peyorativo). Aquí se crea la dicotomía entre sectores que quieren imitar o seguir perpetuando el mito del español "puro" de Castilla, y los que más seguros de sí mismos aceptan su propia realidad como la válida. Volvamos al tema del idioma específicamente: el lenguaje responde a situaciones concretas de un grupo social determinado. No es algo muerto creado por las gramáticas y las reales academias, sino que es un cuerpo vivo que se va haciendo de acuerdo se van creando necesidades para la comunicación. En Puerto Rico tenemos "yautía" y "ñame" pero en Chile no, y en España hay metro y en Puerto Rico sólo se conoce el "subway" americano cuando se llega a este país. El pretender la uniformidad del idioma es seguir queriendo que una cultura se imponga a otra. No es lo mismo ser caribeño que ser vallisoletano, por razones obvias. Las influencias son distintas, el temperamento es distinto y las necesidades sociales son distintas. Exigirle a un puertorriqueño que pronuncie la c y la z como los castellanos es suscribirse a la intolerancia.

Ya Levi Straus, el conocido antropólogo francés, empezó con esta demitificación de la superioridad de las culturas y ahora los movimientos tercer mundistas están mostrándole al mundo que ignora el verdadero significado de cultura, los valores de cada una de estas naciones y sus aportaciones. Pero....hay mucho trecho que andar....

Versos de un companero

por Margarita Zamora

Lo que se encuentra en este artículo no es crítica de un libro ni tampoco de una poesía o un poeta. Porque Miguel Rivera no se ha clasificado como tal ni yo tengo el derecho de hacerlo. Sólo quisiera compartir mis impresiones con personas que quizás no han tenido el placer de escuchar las palabras de un hombre puertorriqueño que ama la tierra, los hombres, y la libertad. Y con los que, si tuvieron la oportunidad de escuchar a Miguel recitar sus poemas, acompañado de la musica de Gary Nuñez y respaldado por las imágenes de latinoamerica en Hampden Commons el Dia Cultural Latin americano, quisiera servir de eco y compartir el recuerdo.

Los versos de Miguel son simples y fuertes, libres de retórica política o literaria; sus temas siempre tratan de cosas conocidas por el escritor. El resultado es un tono íntimo y limpio, con esa limpieza que se encuentra en la simple y verdadera realidad. No son abstractas filosofías dulgencias egocéntricas sobre sus propios estados de ánimo, sino que canta del Otro, de Ella, y de la Lucha donde su responsabilidad será unirse a su hermano:

SOLO ENTRE ELLA Y YO

desde estas calles.
ella
sabía
por que me alejaba.
las tantas veces
tarde
sudor
las muchas reuniones
las marchas.
comprendía
y aguardaba
con una rosa en las manos
y un pequeño radio
roído de noticias.
cielo
desde estas calles
donde ya nadie
me espera.

Margarita Zamora

sólo
una rosa seca
un viejo radio
y una mancha de sangre.
cielo
y me arranco
una lágrima.

TE PREGUNTO, HERMANO

Te pregunto, hermano,
hacia donde volcare mis ojos mañana cuando el sol traicione la espalda de los montes.
Te pregunto hacia dónde
porque han muerto los caminos
y no hay puertos en las orillas de los mares.
Te pregunto, hermano,
porque tengo que partir hacia algún lado, solicitar un rumbo;
y se me ha hecho, tarde.
Hacia mí, companero,
hacia mí que te llevo a los otros hermanos."

Para Miguel su "raison d'etre", su realizacion como hombre libre se encuentra en su tierra. Este motivo recurre en varias formas en sus poemas. Y con este canto el se enfrenta al que "Trajo sus armas y lacayos, su lengua y su cultura...y quiso que esta tierra se tragara la mentira de una verdad burlonamente a medias":

AUTOCONCIENCIA

Soy fuerte
Puedo sostener esta jornada
Los montes
Son laderas
Y con mis manos
Es posible lo imposible
Algo así
Como exprimir la caña
O hacerle cosquillas al terreno
Con un mocho afilado
Buscando la batata
Soy fuerte
Sin pildoras
Sin espatulas
Quietas las hormonas
He descubierto la brecha extraña
Mi potencia
Mi brazo extendido al companero
Ahora
La tierra me saluda
Mas alla del silencio y la palabra
La tierra embelesada
En el dulce puñal que la retrata
Más allá del silencio y la palabra
Del dolor y la fatiga
Del calor o la lluvia
Más allá del tractor o el libro
De la muchacha
De la vida simple y sana
Simple y científica
Simple y revolucionaria
La tierra me saluda
Mas alla del silencio y la palabra

Miguel, te felicitamos por la simplicidad, la fuerza limpia de tus versos y esperamos que tu sueño de la vida simple y sana se realice para todos los que se encuentran hoy sin libertad.

Poesia en el exilio

A proposito del concierto del grupo chileno QUILAPAYUN el pasado 3 de abril, he considerado relevante publicar por primera vez este poema compuesto por una mujer chilena, con un corazon immenso y un gran amor por latinoamerica, quien se encuentra en exilio en este pais luego de haberse escapado casi milagrosamente de una muerte segura bajo los fusiles (Made in USA y cortesia de la A.I.D.) del fascismo chileno. AWAKE

I'm living!
I'm alive!
I keep on saying to myself
Walking around looking at the people carrying the empire's burden, killed in their souls, taken in their dreams only to be a new car or a fridge...

People of the North
Wake up!
Look around you,
breath the world's revolt, share the world's pain...

I come from the South
to give you my hand.
I come from the South
to hold your hand.

I come from the South and want to share with you my pain of trapped beast.

I come from the South
to bring you the news

My continent is bursting like thousand volcanoes bursting, trying to be free trying to live trying to exist
when the boot of the enemy is kicking the souls.

People, dear people
Wake up!
We need you
You need us
To build together the greatest volcano the greatest burst that will free us all....
Please Wake Up!

Thankyou Tio Sam

took their lumber striped their soil made them grow coffee instead of corn
so their children starved before they were born
we took their cattle, took their meat left their people with nothing to eat bult roads and ports to robethem faster (Gringo aid is a national disaster) and now we all wonder and brood at Latin America's ingratitude.

The roses and the dictionary

From the Palestinian revolutionary movement at U. Mass.

Be that as it may,
But I must...
The poet must have a new toast
And new songs.
Crossing a tunnel of incence,
An pepper, and ancient summer,
I carry the key of slaves' monuments and of legends.
I see history in the form of a sheikh,
Playing dice and gathering the stars.
He remembers Herraa * and the spider's web.
Be that as it may,
I must reject death,
Even though my legends die.
In the rubble I look for light and a new poetry.
Do you realize before now, muy love,
That the letter in the dictionary is lifeless.
How do all these words live?
How do they grow and multiply.
We still feed them the tears of memories, and Metaphors and wine.
Be that as it may,
I must reject the roses that come
From a dictionary or an anthology.
Roses grow only on the arms of a peasant and on the fists of a labourer.
Roses grow only on the wounds of a fighter and on the face of a rock.

* During his flight to Medina, the Moslem prophet hid in the cave of Herraa. A spider wove its web on the mouth of the cave, thus misleading the infidels who were pursuing him.

Quilapayun: musica y voz de Chile

Por
Victor M. Gomez y Armando Morales

Hemos tenido el privilegio de escuchar el primer concierto dado en los Estados Unidos por el grupo chileno en el exilio QUILAPAYUN. Este grupo folklorico se escapo milagrosamente de una muerte segura a manos de la Junta Militar fascista chilena debido a que ese nefasto Septiembre de 1973 se encontraba en gira artistica fuera de Chile.

Muchos de sus colegas y companeros artisticos fueron unos encarcela — dos y otros ejecutados salvajemente; Victor Jara fue obligado a tocar la guitarra con las manos fracturadas a culatazos, mientras valientemente cantaba el himno de la Unidad Popular "Venceremos" frente al peloton de ejecutamiento.

El Grupo de teatro AUCAMAN fue ejecutado en masa, y otros muchos artistas, poetas y escritores, tambien fueron ejecutados, perseguidos encarcelados y expatriados.

Los verdaderos amigos y companeros del grupo QUILAPAYUN son los obreros y campesinos chilenos, y con ellos, todos los pobres y revolucionarios de Latinoamerica, junto a todos los hombres y mujeres bien intencionados del continente y el mundo.

QUILAPAYUN canta musica del pueblo y para el pueblo, utilizando instrumentos autoctonos; la quena o planta de bambu, el charango, las maracas, el bongo... Su musica refleja la realidad social y politica de Chile; la pobreza del indio, la marginadidad del campesino, el control por las multinacionales de nuestras riquezas, las iluciones y los suenos de nuestros pueblos,... su voluntad de lucha...

Durante el gobierno revolucionario de Salvador Allende y la Unidad Popular, el grupo QUILAPAYUN recorrio todo el territorio chileno, tocando y cantando para campesinos, obreros, estudiantes y para todo el pueblo, en garajes, teatros improvisados, tugurios,... en fin, donde quiera que fueron solicitados.

Contrario a otros grupos de babeante corte burguez, y del mediocre cotejo fiduciario de su arte, el grupo QUILAPAYUN tiene un valor artistico intrinsico, elaborado sobre el alumbramiento de una nueva realidad historica: -el mundo Latinoamericano.

Quilapayun, no crea una cancion postiza para satisfacer las beleidades del mercado burguez, sino que busca en lo telurico la savia revolucionaria de los nuevos valores culturales que recorre el continente de la esperanza.

Sus canciones, estan ligadas a las condiciones de lucha de la clase trabajadora y el campesinando, vitalizando esa lucha, superando la antinomia entre las elites y las masas trabajadoras; consagrando el canto a la liberacion de nuestros pueblos.

Pero, QUILAPAYUN no es solo una conquista de la revolucion, es tambien una conquista del arte al servicio de esa lucha. Sus notas no necesitan de empresarios que la administren, porque su arte no esta tazado por el precio que hace del artista algo inasequible para el publico, porque este grupo ha roto la fantasia en que se pierde el arte comercial, el anquilozamiento acerrimo inherente a las canciones que niegan el presente de lucha a nombre de la nostalgia enagenante, y del falso romanticismo del pasado-siempre presente en la gran industria del disco.

El concierto presentado por QUILAPAYUN el dia 3 del presente mes en el Student Union Ballroom de esta universidad, nos dejo ver que la potencia artistica del grupo no esta organizado en torno a la actividad de un negocio, ni por la servidumbre cortesana de la celebridad industrial, sino que armoniosamente ha organizado la lucha del pueblo chileno en un toque estetico de internacionalidad critica, en una trayectoria de lucha.

QUILAPAYUN has logrado definitivamente hacer del arte un sinonimo de emancipacion. Este Arte-Militante, consequentemente con los principios revolucionarios anti-oligarquicoimperialista, fue el que vimos actuar en este campus universitario, fortaleciendo con su mensaje nuestro espiritu americanista, demandando unidad con la resistencia del pueblo chileno contra la Junta Militar de Pinochet y sus gorilas, con nosotros mismos y con la lucha de liberacion nacional del Tercer Mundo.

Acaba de surgir otro campeón. Nos referimos al fuerte equipo de "softball" que han formado los estudiantes latinos. Se dice que el poderio de bateo es de tal naturaleza, que la Administración espera poder sufregar el gasto por las bolas bateadas hacia las afueras de Amherst. Como ustedes recordaran, el equipo de baloncesto de nuestros compañeros estuvo por la maceta. No ganaron el campeonato por un desgraciado tecnicismo de ley. Pero, esta vez, no hay tecnicism que salve a los gringos de una merecida paliza, prefiguración de un futuro no muy lejano.

Agonia de una dictadura

En estos momentos en que la situacion politica en Espana es crítica, me parece conveniente informarles de los actuales acontecimientos y de como se ha llegado a esta crisis general.

Como Vds. saben, España con la dictadura impuesta por el General Franco lleva 39 años de "supuesta paz" y "gran desarrollo económico". Digo "supuesta paz", porque la lucha en el interior de la península no ha cesado ni un solo momento. Una lucha contra la opresión, y par la libertad de derechos humanos, la justicia y la igualdad social; todos estos atributos, indispensables para el verdadero desarrollo armónico de un pueblo, faltan en el gobierno de Franco.

Para luchar contra la opresión y tremenda explotación obrera, nos hemos visto obligados a recurrir a las huelgas que se suceden una tras otra, en gran número y por toda la geografía española. Según las últimas estadísticas, se calcula que España el pasado ano, ha sido el país de Europa donde más huelgas han existido (a pesar de ser considerada ilegal'. Pero no solamente van a la heulga los trabajadores, sino que a ellos se han unido también los estudiantes. En todas las Universidades del pais, los estudiantes se han manifestado en apoyo de los trabajadores y solicitando mejoras en el actual sistema educativo. Como represión contra estas manifestaciones el gobierno ha ordenado el cierre de las Universidades por el presente año escolar. Además en varios sectores profesionales se han producido movimientos de repulsa contra estas medidas, como por ejemplo la huelga de médicos en varios hospitales de Madrid el pasado verano; durante la cual se negaron a atender toda clase de pacientes, excepto casos de extrema gravedad, por ética profesional.

Con motivo de estas manifestaciones la policía arresta a cientos de personas por participar en "acciones ilegales" en contra del régimen. Ya que en estos casos no son necesarias las pruebas para arrestar a una persona, solamente el hecho de demostrar disconformidad con el regimen es un delito.

Dadas las deficientes estructuras económicas españolas, la gran inflación mundial la ha afectado de lleno. En este año el gobierno reconcocerá un índice de inflación del 35 per cent, pero todo el mundo sabe que será más de un 40 per cent. En estos momentos también de represión europea donde existen 2,500,000 trabajadores españoles, se inicia ya el retorno de estos trabajadores al país. Y en estos meses vemos ya el fantasma del paro por toda España. Como consecuencia de ésto el gobierno ha dictado una ley que prohibe tener a cada ciudadano español más de un empleo. Lo que indica que la mayoría de estas familias obreras pasará hambre y necesidades, ya que con un salario minimo de 280 Ptas. es imposible vivir.

Con toda esta opresión cargada sobre sus espaldas queda bien justificada la constante lucha del pueblo español. Quizás se pregunten? como es posible que con ésta situación no hay caído todavía el gobierno de Franco? es sencillo el gobierno de Franco es un gobierno militar por excelencia y el ejército en estos momentos está con Franco y controla todas las acciones y movimientos populares.

Otro elemento clave de apoyo al régimen franuista ha sido, en estos últimos años el gran apoyo recibido de Los Estados Unidos, que poco a poco se ha introducio en la península rodeándola de bases americanas y controlando gran parte de la industria. Por último el más descarado apoyo por parte de este pais ha sido el envio de la C.I.A. para fortalecer el decadente — gobierno espanol.

La gran esperanza que alienta la lucha en estos momentos es la posible muerte del general Franco y como consecuencia, que el ejército se una al pueblo en la lucha. Franco tiene 83 años y el régimen actual está montado única y exclusiveamente sobre su figura, la sola posibilidad de desaparecer pondría en grave crisis al actual gobierno español.

Otro punto de apoyo importante, es que a nivel jerárquico, la Iglesia Católica en estos momentos juega claramente la opción demócrata para España; ya que actualmente la mayoría de las reuniones ilegales se celebran en edificios religiosos; y como dijo el Cardenal Tarancón Arzobispo de Madred, "las iglesias siempre les serán prestadas mientras los trabajadores no tengan un sitio para reunirse libremente."

Los acontecimientos del país vecino, Portugal cuya única frontera as España están teniendo gran repercusión entre las uniones obreras españolas y podrían adelantar quizás el momento de la gran revolución que necesita desesperadamente el pueblo espanol.

Tampoco se nos escapa el pensar que esta lucha podría ser cruel para la nación si Estados Unidos, mete sus narices, como lo está haciendo actualmente en otros países, y convierte a España en un nuevo Vietnam.

Vice-chancellor Robert Gage sees

Forced dorm living for over 21

By LARRY KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage said he is sure the exemption for students over twenty-one from forced dorm living will be eliminated next semester.

The Principle Administrative Officers for the Amherst campus have decided to keep the dining commons mandatory and continue the present plan for student use of residence halls until September 1976.

Rick Savini, president of the Student Government Association, said, "Given the decision of the task force to maintain human services at the present level, to have no new fees, and no new increase in fees, no other decision could have been reached."

Room and board costs are expected to go up but Gage said no final decision will be made on increases until some time this week.

Tom Lesser, legal counsel for students who have filed the law suit against forced dorm living, said the dorm rule change is "definitely" being made to strenghten the universities case in the law suit.

In a telephone interview yesterday University Legal Counsel Sidney Myers refused to make any comment on the dorm rule change.

Lesser also said, "I don't think it makes their case any stronger. In some ways it weakens it." He said this is because it would force many older students to live in dorms.

The rule change increases the university's chances of winning the suit according to James Starr, student legal service attorney, because, "There is a strong argument that would say the age classification was invalidated when the age of majority was changed from 21 to 18." He added, "I think it (he law suit) will still win."

The university will attempt to defend forced dorm living in court by saying it's part of the students education, according to Starr. "They'll still have a problem in that it's hard to show the level of educational benefits that need to be shown in law suits like that one."

"The basic fallacy in their argument, if one goes along with it's assumptions, is that it would be of increased educational benefit to students if they were allowed to participate by their own choice," said Starr.

On changing the Residential Life System Gage said he hopes a decision will be made in January '76 "to be effective in January '76." In a prepared statement it said, "It is expected that in the very near future a student-staff task force will be set up to begin planning for 1976-77."

An exemption of veterans from forced dorm living is being considered, according to Gage.

School of Ed allegations:

Wood withholds examination of subpoenaed records

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

UMass President Robert C. Wood has apparently held up examination of subpoenaed School of Education records by a private accounting firm he hired, telling a state legislator that he needs the permission of the U.S. attorney to release them.

However, U.S. attorney James N. Gabriel said yesterday such permission, in general, is not necessary.

Wood confirmed yesterday that he has sent a letter to Gabriel asking that the firm, Coopers and Lybrand, be allowed to view the records, The firm was hired March 19 by UMass. A spokesman for the firm said Friday he believes the U.S. attorney should give permission to view the records.

The legislator, Rep. James G. Collins (D.-Amherst) said Friday he believes the UMass probe is "stalled" and could hold up legislative consideration of the university's $118 million budget request for next year.

Wood, in a telephone interview, said the budget "is the most important thing happening to the University right now" and not the continuing academic, fiscal and management probes at the School.

He said the fiscal probe by auditors is not stalled because of him: "That is not accurate ... we are waiting for the U.S. attorney to provide access."

But Gabriel, contacted by phone at home, said it was within Wood's "discretion" to decide who looks at the records as part of the "normal business" on campus.

In a civil action suit filed last month seeking release of the School's records, all the attornies agreed that substantially all the subpoenaed documents are still in use at UMass-Amherst for normal business and have not been transported to Boston for grand jury use.

Wood said he sent a letter to Gabriel only after he learned that probes by authorities might be delayed. He sent the letter after Collins queried about progress of the probes Wednesday and was told by Wood that Coopers and Lybrand hadn't looked at any records.

Collins is now planning to send a letter to Gabriel asking for a speedy probe and requesting that the private auditors be allowed to delve into records.

According to Gabriel, "the records are the property of the School ... they are the owners of the records ... that's the way it's supposed to be."

But, Gabriel also said FBI agent William J. Long has taken "custody" of the records on behalf of the grand jury sitting in Boston.

"If in the normal course of operations their auditors have to take a look at records" Gabriel said, the two subpoenas might not prohibit access. But, he emphasized that he would not comment on the specific request until he gets Wood's letter.

The federal prosecutor based in Boston said Wood is "exercising his discretion very, very carefully" over the records, adding: "This is what I have told him to do.

"I commend him for that. I cannot blame him if he wants to check back with the authorities before he allows access," Gabriel said.

University officials say fund amounts misused were small, perhaps only $10,000., and involve only a few administrators at the Ed School. Other investigative sources say there are no "real problems" at the School.

Wood said April 2 he thinks it is a "good presumption" there will be some criminal indictments of individuals. One source close to the investigation says the probes will end around the first week in May, barring further delays.

Wood, in the interview, said he believed the auditors could look at the records if they "function as an agent of the grand jury" and not as a member of the public or press.

Eugene M. Freedman, managing partner at Coopers and Lybrand's Boston office, said he thought their work would go forward soon. "It is my understanding that the client and we should be able to have access to those records ... but I'm not a lawyer."

Racism charged by former Urban Education director

By SHERWOOD THOMPSON
Black News Service

Cleo Abraham, former director of the Center for Urban Education at the School of Education, has charged that racism at UMass and surrounding communities is the major factor for allegations of misuse of funds at the School.

Abraham resigned his position as director in January to accept a position as Dean of the School of Education at Texas Southern University in Houston.

However, Abraham said that three of his former associates made unsolicted calls to Texas Southern officials opposing his appointment. He also said that upon arriving in Houston he was told that he would not be able to fill the contracted position as Dean.

Abraham made the remarks in a Collegian telephone interview Saturday, the first interview he has had with the press since the current controversies at the School of Ed.

"When I arrived at Texas Southern University to accept the position of Dean at the School of Education, I was told by the President and the Academic Dean of Texas Southern University that, I could not fill the position of Dean as promised in the written agreement signed by the Vice-President of Academic Affairs, because of a story carried in the Chronicle of Higher Education about the alleged misuse of funds at the University of Massachusetts," said Abraham.

"In addition, officials at Texas Southern stated that three of my fellow co-workers had taken it upon themselves to convey comments about my appointment at Texas Southern. They informed me that former Acting Dean Earl Seidman, former Asst. Dean Bob Suzuki, and professor Byrd Johnson had made unsolicited telephone calls to Texas Southern in opposition to my appointment there as Dean of the School of Education."

The Black educator said it appeared that administrators were looking for a scapegoat to cover up the lack of clear cut rules and regulations the School of Ed had for receiving and spending money awarded the School.

Memorandums submitted to UMass administrators by Suzuki, alleging misuse of federal grant funds by School of Ed personnel, prompted audits and further investigations.

It was later revealed that Suzuki has a salary grievance pending against the University.

The FBI have been probing the alleged misuse of some $15 million of federal grant funds and have acknowledged that $100,000 may have been misused.

According to Abraham, "A fair and impartial investigation of all aspects of the UMass School of Education can prove one's innocence, as well as one, guilt. However, it would appear that the Administration at UMass is seeking a scapegoat to overshadow the problems of a large university bureaucracy, and the fact that the School of Education at UMass did not have a system for receiving and spending monies awarded to them.

"The process of receiving and spending monies was left to individual professors. Therefore, after six years of operations, it seems a little inappropriate, at best, for the University's administration to question the Center for Urban Education's procedures for spending and receiving monies, when no clear-cut rules and regulations had ever been communicated at the School of Education."

Reflecting on his arrival in Houston, Abraham said,

"It was particularly surprising and disheartening for me to internalize this aspect of paranoia on the part of these Texas Southern officials, due to the fact that I had just turned down similar job offers from predominately white institutions to accept the position of Dean at Texas Southern in essence of the face that I wanted my particular skills and unique experience to have a more direct benefit for a larger number of minority students in a predominately black institution such as Texas Southern University."

Musicians stress support for Black music

By JACK CAHILL
Below the Salt

A conference of black musicians in a university setting lends an air of legitimacy, of respectability to such a gathering. Yet, why has this respect taken so long to come about and why does it vanish beyond the bounds of the "enlightened" collegiate institution?

The music-makers who met for a panel discussion last Wednesday night and a concert the following Friday as part of the Martin Luther King Memorial week have suffered under and pondered on the blind inequities of the American capitalist music system for their entire lives.

The panel discussion, held in Webster Lounge, featured professors Archie Shepp and Max Roach, former Coltrane bassist Jimmy Garrison, trombonist Grachan Moncur III, and Prof. Ackland Lynch of the Afro-Am dept. The special guest was widely respected author-critic-teacher Nat Hentoff who delivered a paper on Charlie Parker, Black Music and America.

Hentoff immediately attacked the disparity between the support lent to the black and Western classical music forms. Out of $7 million in musical grants last year, only $20,000 went to support black music, said Hentoff.

All of those present agreed that American education is primarily at fault for failing to inform children and adolescents of the importance of musicians like Parker, Duke Ellington and Dizzy Gillespie.

Shepp regretted that more of his students could not be black, torn between educating primarily whites or blacks in black culture. Prof. Ackland Lynch took the tail end of the discussion and spoke eloquently and forcefully of the rape of black music by capitalism, equating it logically with political struggle, history, integration, hell, everything. He ended his long diatribe laughing joyously as he told the audience, "But that is what the dialectic is all about and it will happen."

The audience at the fourth annual free concert at the SUB on Friday night was both large and well-mixed. The night was dedicated to the memory of Cal Massey — trumpeter, composer, organizer — who devoted his life to music and died without recognition. After we stood a moment in silence, Lonnie Liston Smith and the Cosmic Echoes opened with their brand of "sophistifunk". Smith on electric and acoustic piano and soprano saxist Dave Hubbard took most of the solos which were affective, but little beyond that. Smith's echo effects were well-controlled, but the static rhythm seemed to hold back any adventurous improvs.

..Archie Shepp and Max Roach discuss the "rape of Black music by capitalism" at the Black Musicians Conference.

Introduced as "one of the most dangerous bass-players alive," Jimmy Garrison took the stage and proved the claim true in a masterfully astonishing solo performance. Unexpectedly, this was the bassist's only appearance. Trombonist Grachan Moncur, as well, took only one very short solo on Cal Massey's "Peaceful Warrior" — much too brief.

Saxophonist Sulieman Hakim is in many ways the essence of black music: he startles and surprises you each time you hear him. This time he teamed with drummer Chris Henderson and trombonist Clifford Adams on a brain blasting Massey piece, "Message from Trane." The short head was just enough to launch Hakim on alto into a screeching, barking flight. His technical control is incredible. Then, when he landed, Adams took off spitting and steaming, part trombone and part vocalese.

Conclusions: Open up to the vast spectrum of black music and it will blow away your fears and blues and blow in a little understanding of..something else.

Academic unit to vote on 'F', pass/fail option

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

The Academic Matters Council will vote this week on two proposals which, if passed, would include the "F" in the cumulative average and allow students electing the pass-fail option to receive a letter grade for the course if it would improve their cumulative average.

The proposals, which are part of a package of revised undergraduate academic regulations, are being presented to the Council by the committee of undergraduate deans.

These changes, according to James Shaw, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, amount to a "trade-off" — tightening the requirements in one area while liberalizing them in another.

Other proposed changes that may have an impact on students include:

—Although students will continue to have 28 days to drop courses, they will only have 10 calendar days to drop them with no record. The add period will be shortened from 28 days to 10 calendar days.

—An attempt will be made early in a student's academic career to identify, and, if necessary, place on academic suspension those students having academic "trouble."

—Students will be allowed no more than ten semesters to complete all graduation requirements.

Shaw said one of the two most widely used arguments for reintroducing the "F" into the cumulative average was that if the University computes a student's average, all grades, including "F's" should be included. The deans, he said, have also argued that the reintroduction of the "F" is one way "to retard the inflation of the cumulative average."

Joe Beals, Academic Affairs committee chairperson, said, "I'm very supportive of a lot of the changes that the deans are proposing. However, I think their proposals to reintroduce the "F" and shorten the add-drop period are not well thought out at all.

"The deans have told me that the average cum, which is a lot higher now than it was several years ago, is not particularly valid. So they want to start counting "F's" to bring the cum back down. As an argument, I think that is ridiculous."

"Cumulative averages are undoubtedly inflated today. Given the possibilities available to students to bale out of courses, I think the reintroduction of the "F" will introduce some balance into the cumulative average," said Ernest Buck, associate Dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources.

The package of proposed academic changes is a result of two years of work by the committee of undergraduate deans which only recently has been working with the academic affairs committee.

The proposed package of regulations will be presented by the undergraduate deans at the Academic Matters Council meeting Thursday.

DC diet permits weight loss

By CYNTHIA BRENNER
Staff Reporter

It has long been thought that the only way to lose weight while eating at the UMass dining commons was by starvation. However, a group of UMass students have proven that weight reduction by means of a balanced diet is possible at the dining commons.

The students, members of UMass' Weight Watchers class, are quick to admit that the program is a challenge since they must eat three sensible means every day.

Developed by Weight Watchers International, the program is "designed to help people re-educate their eating habits by attending classes and following menus planned to provide a wide variety of the basic foods essential to good nutrition, such as meat, fish, poultry, vegetables, fruit, and dairy products."

"Once you decide that 'I'm going to do it!' you adjust and can do it. The hardest thing for me was to abstain from drinking — and UMass breeds alcoholism. I haven't had a drink since I started the program last semester," said a 30-pound lighter junior from Central.

A common complaint that Weight Watchers have is the small portion of protein that remains after the "calorie-infested" sauces, breading, and gravies are removed from the food.

A freshman from Coolidge, finds the task of "eating around D.C. food frustrating," but not impossible.

"Why can't they have a line for foods without all that extra junk on it?" she asked.

"I'm not eating their cakes and sweets, so why can't I get a decent portion of protein? I just wish the dining commons would be a little more cooperative with people like me. I've paid for my food and I refuse to survive on lettuce and cottage cheese," she added.

The Weight Watchers share a common opinion when it comes to the problem facing dieters (and non-dieters alike) at the dining commons:

"The food really isn't all empty calories. But when you remove all that extra stuff that it's swimming in, it's tasteless. So, you turn to the sweets which are always plentiful. Two hours later, you're hungry and raiding the vending machines back at your dorm."

External committee studies Ed School policy, practices

By DAVE EIBEL
Staff Reporter

Four of the members of the external committee studying the academic programs and practices of the UMass School of Education visited the campus this weekend to pursue their investigation and meet with University and School of Ed officials.

Dr. John I. Goodlad, Dean of the Graduate School of Education of UCLA heads the group which is due to present its findings to UMass President Robert Wood and the Board of Trustees June 1.

Terming the committee "not unusual" in education circles, Goodlad chose not to comment on the progress of the investigation which officially began on February 28th.

His remarks came during informal meeting with about fifty School of Ed faculty members Saturday, in the Campus Center.

Dr. Carl Marburger, a senior associate with the National Committee for Citizens in Education described himself more as "a practitioner" than an academician and described his aim as finding out "what happens to students when they're here and what happens when they're gone."

Marburger spent most of Saturday interviewing graduate students in the School of Ed and was satisfied with what he'd heard.

"They (the graduate students) came here for the kinds of flexible and creative programs that were available," said Marburger in singling out the views of the majority of students he spoke to.

..Dr. John I. Goodlad, Dean of UCLA Graduate School of Education, and head of the external committee.

Dr. Maxine Gree, a philosophy professor, at Columbia University Teachers College said she'd "like to identify what's really valuable here" and "find the good core of programs and people" in the School of Ed.

The external committee is in no way involved with the Grand Jury investigation of alleged misuses of funds during the tenure of ex-Dean Dwight Allen.

Marburger in his remarks seemed to play down the sensational aspects of affair.

"Without investigating it, in any institution mistakes may have been made, but that doesn't tarnish the institution," he said.

UMass 'cement canoe' christened, launched

By P. J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

UMass' "cement canoe" was successfully christened and launched Friday afternoon at the Campus Pond.

The vessel was christened by Irene Clark saying "in memory of Larry Fine, I christen thee the Porcupine," as she broke a bottle of champagne over the bow.

Amid cheers and shouts of team members and the large crowd gathered around the pond for the 3:00 p.m. launch, members of the UMass band struck up "Anchors Aweigh" and the canoe was carried into the pond by team members. The canoe came through and glided easily across the pond on its maiden voyage, under the guidance of canoe teammen Rich McManus and Wayne D'Agostina.

Asked why the canoe was called the Porcupine, team member Jim Valentine said, "Larry Fine died on the day we started working on the canoe, and there are a lot of Stooges fans on the team, and so we named it Porcupine."

The canoe was constructed by six members of the Senior Civil Engineering class under the supervision of Professor "Coach" Denton B. Harris. The canoe has been under construction since January and weighs approximately 270 pounds.

Measures may save $470,000

Energy conversation results in cost savings

By FRED GOSIEWSKI
Staff Reporter

UMass will save an estimated $470,000 in energy costs after conservation measures are completed, according to the chairman of the Energy Conservation Committee.

Edward Simpson said that the measures are necessary, because "the energy problem will be with us for a long, long, time."

The conservation measures are concentrated in three main areas, according to Simpson. They are: rescheduling of intersession programs; installing new shower heads in the dormitories; and "powering down" four main buildings on campus.

The committee decided to concentrate on the intersession programs, because "scheduling can play a big role in energy conservation," said Simpson. He said that certain programs were formalized and combined, so that the use of buildings would be kept to a minimum.

Simpson said that during the past intersession, $189,000 was saved by instituting the measures. He estimated that 30 per cent of the energy costs were saved.

A second proposal that is about half completed is the installation of new shower heads in the dormitories. The new heads reduce the water pressure, and result in a reduced amount of water and heat being used, according to Simpson.

He said the committee was "looking to save 50 per cent (of the energy costs), but its been a little less than that." He said part of the reason for this miscaluclation is that with the showers using less water, the students are likely to remain in the shower longer.

Nevertheless, Simpson estimated that the savings will amount to $107,000, mostly because less fuel will be needed to heat the water.

..Edward Simpson — Chairman of the Energy Conservation Committee.

The third measure involves the automatic powering down of Whitmore, Herter, Thompson and the new library when they are not in use. He said no one has ever made a study of when the buildings are not being used, so utilities to them ran constantly.

He noted that there are two circulating fans on the top of Whitmore, each run by 400 horsepower motors, which used to run continuously. After the committee studied their use, one was shut down completely, and the other is automatically turned off at night.

He added that 750 light bulbs were removed from Whitmore, and this resulted in "another savings of about $1900 in electrical usage and another $300 in tube savings."

He estimated that the total savings for the buildings will be: Whitmore — $95,000; the library — $49,700; Thompson Hall — $16,800; and Herter — $9900. He said that the savings in the library are lower than Whitmore because the library was an "efficient" building when it was constructed.

One of the means for determining the waste of energy in buildings is using an infrared camera that would take pictures of heat losses from them. This was used earlier this semester when a camera was borrowed for two days, according to Simpson.

Earlier in the semester an infrared camera was used and "a phenomenal number" of heat leaks were found, Simpson added. He added that "this is the kind of service that we ought to do for the state," and that the committee favors the acquisition of an infrared camera for UMass.

The problem is the cost, according to Simpson, who said that a camera costs about $50,000, and to rent one costs $2500 a week.

The Energy Conservation Committee was formed in November 1973, "in response to what was then a short term crisis," said Simpson. It continued its efforts after it was realized that the energy problem would not go away with the end of the Arab oil embargo, which ended in early 1974.

UMTA proposes co-op

N. Village, University, Lincoln Apts.

By DEBBIE SCHAFER

In response to a possible 13.5 per cent increase at Lincoln, University, and North Village Apartments for next year, residents voted yesterday to work towards the formulation of a cooperative in Married Student Housing by next September.

The proposal to make married student housing cooperative was presented at the meeting by members of the UMass Tenant Association (UMTA) steering committee. In a door-to-door canvass of North Village which took place after the meeting, 70 North Village residents agreed to join the rent strike, in support of UMTA's efforts. A rent strike began last October had little support.

The co-op proposal will be presented to Chancellor Randolph Bromery at a meeting tonight. UMTA members feel that a co-op management system would eliminate the mismanagement that UMTA feels exists now. Under the terms of a co-op, students would manage the apartments themselves.

The rent increase contained in the Office of Residential Life "working draft" for 1976 was made known to the UMTA last week. ORL officials base the increase on projected maintenance and utilities increases for next year, but tenants feel that the increase was budgeted to cover the costs of mismanagement within ORL.

UMTA spokesperson Karen Forsgard cited the high vacancy rates and excessive expenditures for personnel as one example of Residential Life "inefficiency." University Apartments allot about $34 of $180 rent for personnel, while private apartments require only about $11 for the same, she claims.

"Either there is exorbitant inefficiency, or the money is going somewhere else," said UMTA member Pat Walker.

UMTA members stressed the fact that the rent strike and the cooperative should not be treated as separate issues. In the past, University officials have treated the co-op issue as something to be dealt with after the settlement of the rent strike, but in view of a possible rent increase again next year UMTA wants to discuss the co-op at once.

Several residents at yesterday's meeting suggested that "more pressure" be applied in dealing with the administration in this issue.

Gage also said, "There is no room left for major economies (in Residential Life) without seriously compromising services."

Ken Somers, chairman of the Student Task Force, complained that the PAO meeting at which the no-change decision was made was closed and even Rick Savini, who is a university trustee, was not allowed to attend.

Gage said, "PAO meetings are always closed. The meeting this morning was no different from any other PAO meeting."

The PAO consist of the directors in several different administrative areas on campus including; Warren Gulko, Director of the Office of Budgeting and Institutional Studies; Dan Fitzpatrick, Associate Dean of Students; and Jack Denyse, Director of Personnel and Financial Services.

"If you proceed on that assumption (that the meeting should have been open), every meeting I have with everybody would have to be open which is absurd," he said.

Instead of two meal plans next year, there will be three offered. They include:

— The present 10 meal plan

— A fourteen meal plan to offer two meals a day seven days a week

— A nineteen meal plan to have three meals a day on weekdays and two a day on weekends.

Last Thursday acting food services director, Art Warren, estimated the cost of these plans at $335, $375, and $410 per semester respectively.

Room rents were projected to go up anywhere from 50 to 120 dollars, by Acting Director of Residential Life, Ken Dean at the same meeting.

Referring to the proposed 19 meal plan, Gage called it a "bargain" and estimated that it will offer 35 per cent more meals for only 10 per cent more cost than the 14 meal plan.

Khmer Rouge approach Phnom Penh

Fighting continues after US evacuation

PHNOM PENH [UPI] — Communist-led Khmer Rouge rebels battled their way to within sight of downtown Phnom Penh yesterday — Cambodia's New Year's Eve — 24 hours after the United States abandoned its five-year effort to stop the insurgents.

A new "supreme committee" under Gen. Sak Suthsakhan took over the running of the country and the war. But the rebels again drove back government defenders and, in the wake of Saturday's whirlwind evacuation of most remaining Americans, the fall of Phnom Penh appeared imminent.

At Utapao Air Base in Thailand, acting Cambodian President Saukham Khoy said yesterday he had cabled exiled Prince Norodom Sihanouk inviting him to return to Cambodia as head of state, but he had not received a reply.

Sihanouk was deposed in a bloodless coup five years ago, and weeks later Cambodia joined the Indochina war. Saukham Khoy fled the country Saturday with the last of the American officials and all but a handful of U.S. residents.

Three rockets smashed into Phnom Penh yesterday killing one person and wounding six others. On the east bank of the Mekong River, within sight and sound of the capital's downtown area, rebels and government defenders clashed in heavy fighting.

The insurgents overran Tuk Vil, six miles south of the capital, and drove Cambodian troops back more than one-half mile on the southern defense perimeter. Field reports said two government soldiers were killed and six wounded in the retreat.

While keeping the capital surrounded, the rebels pounded Phnom Penh's airport with another 19 rockets and six artillery shells. Government planes and private airlines kept flying — but no U.S. aircraft landed.

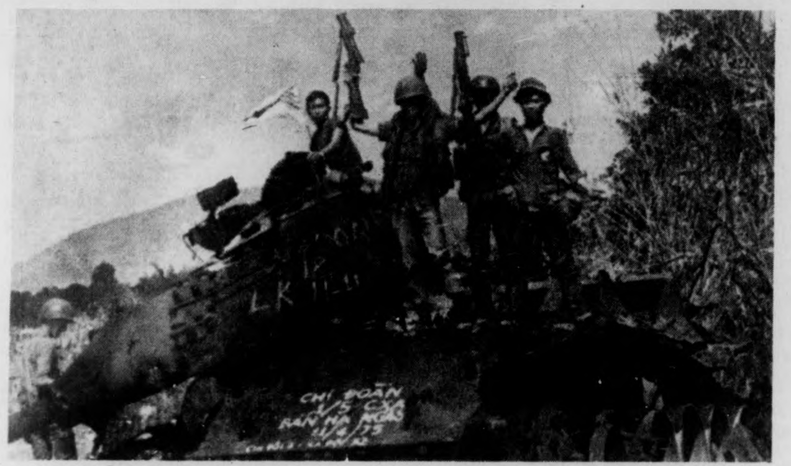
In Washington, the Defense Department said the airlift of food, fuel and ammunition into the airport — the country's lone link with the outside world for more than two months — had been replaced by an airdrop that started yesterday afternoon Phnom Penh time.

The airdrop by civilian-flown U.S. Air Force C130s to "known friendly forces" was called off at sundown but would resume after dawn, a spokesman said.

The new "supreme committee of the Khmer Republic," under Gen. Sak Suthsakhan, commander-in-chief of Cambodian armed forces, would be responsible for the defense of Phnom Penh and for making efforts to negotiate peace with the rebels, political sources said.

Prime Minister Long Boret, one of seven so-called "traitors" on the rebels' publicized list of those to be executed, was expected to lead the effort toward peace negotiations and handle the day-to-day administration of the new regime.

Despite the military setbacks and the American pullout, the capital itself remained comparatively calm yesterday.



South Vietnamese troops stand over a Communist-made tank in Xuan Loc, South Vietnam. Fighting continued in that district capital 40 miles north of Saigon, where government troops were reported in control.

South Vietnamese claim control of Xuan Loc; victory disputed

SAIGON [UPI] — The South Vietnamese government said yesterday its troops had driven Communist forces from the devastated province capital of Xuan Loc on the northeast approach to Saigon. But one field report said that Communists had the city surrounded and the battle remained undecided.

While Saigon waited and hoped for more military aid from the United States, an ammunition dump filled with new American-supplied arms to re-equip a South Vietnamese division exploded yesterday near Saigon. Military sources said careless troops cooking a meal nearby may have been responsible.

The government claimed control of Xuan Loc and flew a group of newsmen into the city by helicopter. But UPI correspondent Leon Daniel reported from Xuan Loc that while South Vietnamese troops occupied the city, they were surrounded by Communist forces with tanks and artillery support.

"It was clear," Daniel reported, "that the five-day battle for Xuan Loc — which some strategists see as the decisive one of the 30-year Indochina war, was not yet finished."

Xuan Loc, 38 miles northeast of Saigon, occupies a strategic position on the capital's defense perimeter. Daniel said that according to the strategists, a victory there could give the Communists, who already control 19 of South Vietnam's 44 provinces, a "straight shot" at Saigon and the huge Bien Hoa airbase 14 miles to its north.

But Brig. Gen. Le Minh Dao, commander of the 18 division in the Xuan Loc sector, remained confident. "We have pushed them away from the city," he said.

Indochina developments

'Orphans' not orphans

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Some of the Vietnamese "orphans" airlifted to the United States actually are sons and daughters of political and military officials, a U.S. adoption agency official said yesterday.

How they got aboard U.S. transports flying orphans from war-torn Vietnam was not clear but bribes may have been involved, Maria Eitz, an official of Friends for All Children which has sponsored most the orphan flights, said.

Javits doubts power

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., said yesterday President Ford would not need congressional permission to use a small number of troops in South Vietnam to evacuate nearly 6,000 American citizens.

But Javits, a member of the Foreign Relations Committee and author of the so-called War Powers Act, said a congressional resolution would be required before troops could evacuate an estimated 200,000 South Vietnamese the administration fears would be punished by the Viet Cong for cooperating with the United States.

Congress to respond

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Challenged by President Ford to provide South Vietnam with nearly $1 billion in aid by the end of the week, Congress plans a swift — but partial — response.

Congressional leaders have agreed to give Ford's request top priority but neither the Senate nor the House appears ready to comply with his full demands.

President of Chad killed in revolt

New leader suspends Constitution, parties

Compiled from Wires

PARIS — The leader of the coup that killed President Francois Ngarta Tombalbaye and seized power in the African republic of Chad announced yesterday the armed forces had suspended the constitution, dissolved the assembly and banned political parties, French radio said yesterday.

Speaking on national radio, the new head of state, Gen. Noel O'Dangar, 43, commander of the armed forces said, "The officers of the Chadian armed forces have decided upon the following measures.

"Firstly, to suspend the constitution.

"Secondly, to ban all political parties in Chad.

"Thirdly, to dissolve the executive council and the national assembly as well as all organizations formed according to the constitution.

"Fourthly, to retain all international agreements that exist between Chad and friendly or fraternal countries," O'Dangar said.

Tombalbaye, 57, had been president of the drought-stricken, landlocked nation — formerly part of French Equatorial Africa — since 1962, two years after independence. He was elected unopposed in 1969 to a new seven-year term.

A military communique said the army had freed Gen. Felix Maloum, titular commander of the armed forces who had been under arrest since 1973 on charges of plotting against Tombalbaye. The communique said two men identified as Gen. Djogo, former director of Tombalbaye's military staff, and Col. Djimet, former police commander, also had been free.

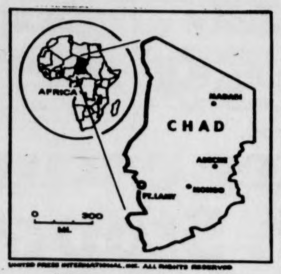
The attack on the presidential compound by the army and national police started shortly after dawn. Some firing was also reported around the Koufra military camp in the center of the capital city, formerly known as Fort Lamy.

The Republican Palace Guard resisted the troops, and throughout the morning, the thud of mortar and artillery explosions and the rattle of automatic weapons could be heard from the direction of the battle.

Odingar called on military forces to return to their barracks and ordered a curfew from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. He said the airport was closed until further notice. The general urged French troops stationed in Chad not to become involved in what he said was a purely local affair among the 3.5 million people. He said foreigners would be protected.

Chad is one of the poorest and most backward nations in the world. Three times the size of California, it has only 160 miles of paved roads, no railroads and is more than 1,200 miles from a seaport. It is in the sub-Saharan famine zone hit by a six-year drought.

With French army support, Tombalbaye has been fighting a Moslem rebel group known as Frolinat in the northeast since 1968.



Map shows the country of Chad, in north Central Africa, where the President, Francois Ngarta Tombalbaye, was killed.

Cable TV regulation may undergo a shakeup

BOSTON [AP] — State regulation of cable television soon will undergo a shakeup, but the eventual result seems as unclear as Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' position on control of the fledgling industry.

The three-year-old, seven-member state Cable Television Commission has been struggling in recent weeks due to the change in state administrations.

The state commission has received little attention from Dukakis and a spokesman or the governor said the cable issue has barely been raised in private discussions.

Consumer Affairs Secretary Lola Dickerman, who is responsible for the cable commission, said she is reviewing the panel but that it has taken low priority early in the new administration.

Cable industry sources are critical of the commission, saying it has accomplished little since it became the first agency of its kind three years ago.

The state commission set out three years ago to make broad policy on cable TV ownership and management. But those controversial issues got sidetracked both by their complexity and by opposition from cable operators.

Allon sees pressure

By United Press International

Israeli Foreign Minister Yigal Allon said yesterday the United States has been pressuring Israel to make concessions in order to reach an interim peace agreement with Egypt but that there was no "crisis" in U.S. Israeli relations.

"I think there is some misunderstanding between us and the United States," he told newsmen at the airport before leaving for Britain, the United States and a meeting with Secretary of state Henry A. Kissinger.

There were unconfirmed reports he may also meet with Soviet ambassador to Washington, Anatoly Dobrynin.

Palestinians clash

BEIRUT [UPI] — Palestinian guerrillas and armed members of the right-wing Phalangist Party fought each other yesterday in the bloodiest clash in two years involving Palestinians in Lebanon.

The Palestine Liberation Organization said 26 Palestinians were killed and 19 wounded when two of its vehicles were attacked by the Phalangists in the Beirut suburb of Ein Rummaneh.

Students may strike

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — Student leaders yesterdqy set a 5 p.m. deadline for a response from Brown University officials to student demands, saying they would strike if a response was not forthcoming.

University officials said they would meet the deadline, but would not disclose what their answer would be.

Students threatened to boycott classes in they are not given a voice in determining budget priorities. The students want increased allocations for student services, teacher salaries and financial aid.

A student vote has been scheduled for Monday in the response to the university's proposals. If they response is not acceptable, student leaders said, they will boycott classes tomorrow.

He added that, "It would appear that some Black institutions, like the racists, in Amherst, equate allegations towards Blacks with guilt." To cite one example about how allegations hurt Blacks more so than Whites, Abraham noted, "Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, Provost and Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs at the University of Massachusetts, whose wife and son, both received doctoral degrees in the School of Education at this institution, has just been appointed Chancellor of the University of Maryland, a predominately White University, at College Park, Maryland, even though his name, too, has been drawn into the recent allegations at the UMass School of Education."

"It would appear, Abraham said, "that there is a nation-wide conspiracy to discredit and ultimately destroy many of the affirmative action endeavors designed to provide for the special needs and aspirations of minorities throughout the country."

Abraham cited investigations and allegations at Montclair State College and Soul City, as just "two of the many instances recently, where racists have attempted to slander the credibility of Black change agents willing to challenge the system and fight for what they believe can better the conditions of all oppressed people."

Furthermore, "the news media never use the same sensationalism to vindicate people as it does to persecute them with half-truths and one-side of the total picture", he added.

Prior to his position at UMass, Abraham was Director of Community Services for the city of New Haven's Anti-poverty Agency, Community Progress, Incorporated, and Director of the Individualized Study Program at South Central Community College, both located in New Haven, Conn.

Collins said his understanding was that the March 25th subpoena covering all School of Ed records has resulted in Coopers and Lybrand being halted in its inquiry.

Other sources said the firm has been waiting for a go-ahead from Wood to proceed with a basic audit of Ed School records. Over the last few weeks, the firm has only reviewed audits UMass has done already and familiarized itself with the campus administration.

The firm, according to a well-informed campus source, has already found some deficiencies in the grant policies formerly employed on campus, and accounting inadequacies in the University treasurer's office.

Treasurer Kenneth W. Johnson said by phone yesterday he has "personally no problem" with Coopers and Lybrand viewing subpoenaed School of Ed records formerly under his control. He said Wood made the decision to allow access "recently."

Collins said delays in the fiscal probes at the School are "casting a cloud about the campus and the delay in finalizing audits only fosters suspicion ... and impairs the quality of education."

The Whitmore waiting game

The Administration seems to be winning the fight with students, using old ploys to delay the decisions on the budget and fees until May when student power will be non-existent.

The tactics are old political ones, call it what you will, "nixonian stonewalling" is perhaps the proper term. Day to day Dr. Gage changes answers, gives an inch and takes a mile, while Chancellor Bromery smiles and hides himself behind optimistic comments about finding the best solution for all.

STUDENT UNITY

The questions still stand though, who is all? And when will those decisions be made?

Mohammad Ali proved that you can win a fight by laying on the ropes and tiring the opponent. Certainly such a strategy is now being planned in Whitmore.

If, in fact, because of time problems and red-tape complications it will be impossible to come out with a clear policy on the question of fees, then perhaps students should be making other demands on the administration. It should be made clear what students will not accept, it should be made clear what students will not pay for under a new fee. A formal statement from the administration is in order, saying that no decisions which students are obviously against will be made this summer.

If such rules aren't laid down now we are all going to find out where we stand next August through one of those "We hope you have been enjoying your summer vacation" letters from the Bursar's office.

Time is running short. There are only about four weeks left to the semester, we have to go pull Whitmore off the ropes and get some answers, some promises as to how things won't happen soon.

Answer to a "dangerous attitude"

To the Editor:

After reading the letter "Male Discrimination", [April 10] I quickly reread the article, thinking perhaps that this was one of those tongue in cheek satires that we see in National Lampoon. When I realized that the letter was serious, I became very frightened. For those of us who saw the film Punishment Park on April 8, Carl Mathewson's letter underscores the repressive mentality illustrated there.

While I do not wish to address the fallacy and bigotry underlying almost all of Mr. Mathewson's statements, I do wish to briefly indicate why I believe his to be a very dangerous attitude.

Leftist analysis and inquiry into the problems our society faces today represents one of the viable alternatives at a time when more conventional solutions to social problems appear less and less effective. Radical inquiry is an exercise of the basic right to intellectual freedom. Publication of this material is freedom of the press.

As for the question, "where is manspace," look around you Mr. Mathewson. The society we live in is male designed, male run and male oriented.

Finally may I point out that Mr. Mathewson's belief in fire and brimstone [his own personal belief] is not a requirement in a society that guarantees religious freedom. The Bill of Rights guarantees personal freedoms. Mr. Mathewson's own personal, moral or religious convictions towards the Gay Women's Caucus or any other group, are totally irrelevant to other people's freedoms practices or beliefs.

I suggest that the "terrible consequences" referred to by Mr. Mathewson, would result from his own repressive mentality and the supression of fundamental rights. The statement, "the more left wing you get, the more right wing I get," clearly shows the reactionary and therefore irrational nature of Mr. Mathewson's statements. He seeks not to improve our society but to blindly protect a value system that is faltering under the weight of history.

To the Editor:

In an upcoming vote on S-66, a major health bill, the U.S. Senate will be asked to vote on a rider introduced by Sen. Bartlett [R-Okla.] that would prohibit the direct or indirect use of federal money for abortion services except when a woman's life is endangered. The Bartlett rider would eliminate Medicaid payments to low-income women seeking abortions. Between 220,000 and 280,000 women annually now receive Medicaid reimbursements for abortions.

The rider also would bring up some complex administrative issues, since many hospitals, health centers, medical schools and universities receive government funds. It is not clear whether abortions could be performed in hospitals receiving federal funds or whether medical students could be trained in abortion techniques.

Not only would the amendment establish a two-class system of medical care, it would deny women their constitutional right to abortion. In 1973, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that women have a right to abortion as a right of privacy.

An official report of the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare issued in December 1974 found that implementation of the Bartlett rider would result in 125-250 deaths annually from self-induced abortions and the hospitalization of approximately 25,000 women due to self-induced abortions. The report also noted that forcing women to carry their pregnancies to term would cost the federal government between $450 and $565 million for medical care and public assistance in the first year after birth. The federal government now spends $50 million on Medicaid reimbursements for abortions.

Passage of the Bartlett rider would not eliminate abortion, but it would prevent poor women from having safe and medically-sound abortions. Congress should vote to make all women equal under the law by voting to defeat the Bartlett rider.

Concord caravans forming

To the Editor:

Three caravans will be leaving from Amherst on Friday, April 18, for the Peoples Bicentennial Commission Rally at the North Bridge in Concord. Two caravans will be assembled at the parking lot on University Ave. across the street from Southwest, one at 9:00 a.m. and another at 4:00 p.m. A third caravan will be leaving from Amherst Common at 8:00 p.m.

People are asked to arrive an hour early as the caravans should not be delayed if possible.

The People's Bicentennial Commission is hoping for a strong contingent from the UMass Amherst Campus, however many volunteers will be needed to organize caravans by the 18th. Posters and banners have to be made, cars are needed and word has to be spread throughout the campus and surrounding communities.

Interested people should contact the Veterans Coalition room 411 Student Union or call 545-0712 or 545-3655.

Action, not rhetoric!

To the Editor:

To Mr. Steve Tripoli, if you don't like what the DVP chooses for speakers, why don't you join them and add your input instead of complaining about their choice of speakers?

If you don't like the status of the Spring Concert, why don't you join the Program Council Music Committee?

Both of these groups are looking for people who are willing to WORK, NOT JUST TALK! If you don't want to work, then stop complaining, or to put it bluntly, SHUT UP!

Rally against budget cuts!

To the Editor:

I'm a soon-to-be-out-of-here-and-glad-of-it senior. I just finished reading a crazy leaflet handed out to me yesterday by the Coalition for a People's Budget. You know, two years ago such a leaflet might have found itself in the nearest trash can. But this one struck me differently — I was actually jolted by it.

"Proposed cuts will," it reads, "double tuition, reduce financial aid, lay-off workers."

Double tuition? That means some of my friends might pay $600 per year — tuition alone! Reduce financial aid? That means they'll have far less of a chance to get work-study, to help their parents pay for school expenses! Lay-off workers? Lord, I know people who wouldn't be able to come back next year with that, much less next Fall!

You know, if I was planning to return here next year and those proposals went through — no way could I make it! And my parents sure couldn't foot the excess. My father, like many fathers and mothers, gets up each morning for work wondering if "today's the day" his employer decides to lay-off.

The way I see it, the state and UMass officials might push these bills at students, saying "Pay it! We're not even going to both proving to you that we can't cut back on our own expenses. You're afraid of our authority, so you won't protest."

Now, think back quickly: Several students got together, legally challenged the dorm requirements, and zap! All the sudden UMass officials say, "Well, we've been thinking of abandoning them anyway."

Think back again: A freshman named Nan legally attacks the Dining Commons requirement, and zap! All the sudden, eating at the D.C. may not be mandatory as of next year, and the officials are saying, "Yeah, well, we've been chewing on that idea for a while now..." How believable.

I'll add two and two together — if they couldn't get it illegally, they'll hand freshly-titled fees to every student and simply demand, "Pay then, whether they apply to you or not!"

You know, those of you coming back next year — don't take this easily! Six hundred bucks is a lot of money!

How are you going to pay for bills like this? And, let's face it, most of our parents aren't made of gold and silver.

The University and the state hasn't proved to any of you that it can't pay up itself — so why must you genuflect to their proposals?

A peaceful gathering to protest such illogic is going on Tuesday, so the leaflet says. It'll be for two short, important hours. Do yourself, and high school seniors in this state, a favor — be there. If those numbers are large, it may have an impact. At least it's one logical way to show we're concerned.

Thus spake Ford

Thus spoke the President. His face, illuminated by the myriad of lights, portrayed a diabolical and insane robot; a robot whose buttons are being pushed with no regard to human life and human morality. His eyes are nothing more than carved stones, sparkless, lifeless, cold, empty. He is blind and he cannot see the pleading eyes of the sons and daughters of America whom he wants to sacrifice in the name of "liberty", "justice", and "humanitarianism". His ears cannot hear the cries, coming from deep inside the barren earth, of the thousands of America's dead youth. He cannot hear the cries of the thousands of burned, maimed, and slaughtered babies — the babies which he wants to "save" by prolonging a lost and unjust war. He cannot hear the curses of mothers without sons, of sisters without brothers, of America stripped of her pride and morals. Blind and deaf, the President has spoken.

Will America listen to a robot pleading for her death? The dark clouds which have gathered over the horizon threateningly cast their eyes upon a power-hungry nation. These same clouds have appeared over many a civilization: Assyria, Egypt, Greece, Rome — they have all seen the clouds, they have all heard the cries of warning, and they have all ignored them. They have all fallen. The clouds have gathered once again. America, can you see them, hear them, feel them? Or, are you too, America, blind and deaf? Are you too, America, willing to listen to a slave of the corporations which are bleeding you to death? Are you willing, America, to become the slave of a slave? America, your President has spoken.

America, are you willing to die? If so, then join hands, close your eyes, and jump into the abyss of meekness, passiveness, and resignation. Send your youth to the slaughterhouse, prolong the inevitable, support tyranny and oppression, ignore the world's indignation with the sadistic role you are playing, always meddling in other nations' affairs, always dictating, directing, coercing, and subjugating. A deadly farce is being played upon you America; look, look, a smiling President and a helpless baby in his arms. The baby's parents are dead, it is alone in the world. The benevolent leader will disregard it as soon as his game is over with, for you to see, the baby is an instrument, a toy, a pawn. "Our friends need our help," cries the President, the orphan in his arms, "we owe it to them, we cannot abandon them, we must save them," the baby still in his arms. The orphan whose parents were killed by the man who is holding it in his arms, and his equally "wise" and "humanitarian" predecessors, will be a decisive instrument towards a new involvement in S.E. Asia. The guilty consciousness, and sentimentality of America are being played upon in order to re-commit ourselves in the never-ending struggle towards the suppression of freedom. It is a farce, America, it is all a farce. The orphan, you, and I, America, we are all pawns, instruments, in a game over which we have lost control. The President has spoken.

The dead are still crying in their graves, the living are pleading for the establishment of reason, the countless lights are still on, and the President has spoken. America, are you ready to die?

OPINION

Boycott the TOC!

By E. PATRICK MCQUAID

Although this commentary may throw some rather unfavorable light on the Top of the Campus club, the author is actually doing the establishment a service. A headline such as the above may be a strong assault upon the reader but it provides a wide variety of intention.

Although this commentary may place the Top of the Campus club in unfavorable publicity it is serving a double purpose in that it also favors the establishment's interests. "Boycott the TOC" is surely a strong assault on the reader but it does hopefully prompt the management into submitting some form of response. We only hope that it is presented in a rational manner and not in the barbaric conduct displayed by a number of the club's employees during a recent confrontation with members of the Collegian staff.

Granted the staff of the Collegian are in a powerful position in the campus media as they have access to the "first shot" and the "last say". Occasionally a personal vendetta may worm its way into the press under the guise of the journalist's pen, however, in the cases to be cited, I feel that it is the obligation of the newspaper to inform the readers of the overt, corrosive malignancy "now appearing at the TOC". An article of this nature is not an uncommon occurrence in the Collegian; they resurrect every semester. Nor is the inescusable treatment of customers by the TOC a foreign subject to students. It is only by chance that this incident is in print and your's isn't.

..The increase in prices has not yet affected the ever-popular TOC saladbar.

In mid-February I made my first criticism on the TOC in a column headlined "Retrospect in Repast". The outrageous boost in prices while students were away over intercession was treated with satirical jest and was received in that manner as there was no comment from the TOC. It would seem then that humor is not the approach to the subject.

The greatest atrocity to come to light in my opinion is that for a period of time the TOC was serving free beer nuts to all its customers. The abrupt end to this seemingly "improvement" warranted an inquiry by several Collegian reporters. It was disclosed by a number of employees that the establishment had been disposing of the commodities that had been gathering dust in a back room of the Bluewall for a "number of years". "You mean that they've been serving us garbage?" queried News Editor Richard Wright. "I'm afraid so," replied a TOC waitress.

Next we come to the issue of a sudden change in glassware. Have the ounce measurements decreased with the shift from average beer glasses to stemware while the prices have remained a stable forty cents?

And the ever-popular dollar deposit on a beer pitcher. Requesting a deposit is surely not too much to ask of the customers; however, refusing to return the money is an outrage.

A short time ago a small assemblage of Collegian personnel were patronizing the TOC and purchased two pitchers of beer paying the required dollar deposit on each. At the end of our stay one dollar was returned to the respective recipient; the other was pocketed by the waitress.

The empty pitcher was brought to the bar and the refund was requested. The bartender refused, stating that the waitress had already refunded us. A short discussion ensued, leading nowhere and we departed tossing the pitcher aside in total disgust. The beer-bellied goon came barreling over the bar shouting indistinguishable Teutonic incantations.

We stood gaping as he recited every curse he could recall concluding with: "You sleeze! Don't eva try 'n' pull somethin' like this when I'm working again!"

We took heed of his advice and made hasty departure in fear of personal assault. We escaped with our lives, but not our dollar.

"Ripped off again, eh?" questioned a cartoonist sometime later. "Hhmm, it could just be that particular waitress. Last week my roommate wasn't returned change for a drink. He asked her what happened and she said, 'I thought it was my tip'. Tip, ha! I'll give them a tip or two!"

¿Que pasa? -- What's goin' on?

The Puerto Rican Coalition of Springfield made several demands to the Springfield Police this past Saturday. If the demands are met, there will be grounds for negotiations, a spokesperson said to newspaper, radio and TV people.

The shooting of an 18 year old Puerto Rican youth by two members of Springfield's 'Law and Order' Police, had created a unity among the Spanish Speaking in the area, that seemed to agree from New York to New England, that it was a 'racist murder.'

Conservative, liberal and radical segments of the Spanish Speaking population considered the murder as a result of racism and a lack of understanding of the American police to those that do not speak English, or belong to a different color or culture.

Cuba is increasing its tourism, said a spokesperson of INIT, (National Institute of Tourism Industry). About 6,000 Canadians visited the island in 1974, and more than 15,000 tourists are expected this year from Mexico, Peru, Venezuela and El Salvador.

Miami's Spanish Speaking mayor, Mauricio Ferre, is encouraging the Latino population to register to vote. "Without the vote," he said, "The relationship needed to demand solutions to the Spanish Speaking population problems cannot be achieved." The city's Spanish Speaking voters is estimated in more than 160,000.

Inflation is hitting the Puerto Rican sports. In the past celebration of the Central American and Caribbean Baseball Games, only 6,000 persons attended the last game, in which the Puerto Rican Cow Boys, overcame the Cubans and Mexican Teams, retaining the championship for the second year.

Despite the facts of inflation and economical recession, the Puerto Ricans are optimistic, and they are working hard in preparation for the next Olympic Games. Many Puerto Rican teams are being trained in the Republic of Cuba.

Despite the fact that many Puerto Ricans have been world champions in wrestling and boxing, the Olympic Team had never got a gold medal. However, Puerto Rico is confident that this year will have better chances in boxing, thereafter they are getting ready to try to beat the Cubans, Americans and Russian boxers...and that is a challenge.

Shirley DuBois to present lecture series

By Black News Service

Shirley DuBois, writer, teacher, and widow of Dr. W.E.B. DuBois will offer this year's DuBois Lectures at UMass. The first lecture will be on Tuesday in Herter Auditorium at 8 p.m.

The subject will be, "W.E.B. DuBois: Father of Pan-Africanism." On Tuesday, April 22 in Hasbrouck Room 20, DuBois will give the second lecture on, "The New China."

Preceding this lecture will be a short color film of a visit to China made by Dr. W.E.B. DuBois and Mrs. DuBois in 1959. The film documents a tour begun in the spring 1959 after the celebration of Dr. DuBois' 91st birthday in Peking. The Chinese made the film and it is a part of the W.E.B. DuBois collection donated to the University by Shirley DuBois.

A resident of Cairo, Egypt, DuBois is much in demand as a lecturer. She recently visited the People's Republic of China, where as their guest, she celebrated with the Chinese Government and people, the 25th anniversary of the Republic. Prior to moving to Cairo, Mrs. DuBois and Dr. DuBois lived in Ghana, West Africa where she was founder and first director of the national television of that country.

And in her varied and distinguished career DuBois has served many years as an educator. She has been the head of the Fine Arts department at Tennessee State College, and a professor of Music at Morgan State College; in 1936-38 she was director of the Negro Repertory of the Chicago Federal Theatre; she has worked as a field secretary for the NAACP and has served as the founding editor of Freedomways magazine 1960-63, and as English editor of the Afro-Asian Writers Journal of Peking in 1968.

Shirley DuBois

Her books have been transalted in over forty languages and have won numerous awards. They include works on the lives of Paul Robeson, George Washington Carver, Phyliss Wheatley. Her biography of Frederick Douglass — There Once Was A Slave — took the Messner-Lionel Judah Tachna award for the best book combatting intolerance in America in 1947. It was translated and published in Moscow and Peking in 1959 and a pocket-book edition was put out by the United States Navy; in 1950 the work was set in braille by the United States Army. Her other books include works on Benjamin Banneker, Pocohontas, Booker T. Washington, a memoir of W.E.B. DuBois — His Day Is Marching On, and on Gamal Abdel Nasser and Julius K. Nyere. Her novel, Zulu Heart, was published last year.

DuBois is presently working on her fourteenth book which will concern the roles of women in the People's Republic of China. She is currently Distinguished Visiting Lecturer in the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies at the University.

The DuBois Lectures is an annual series of lectures presented by the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies in honor of the work and memory of the black scholar and activist for whom the Department is named. The series presents lectures of significant accomplishment in some aspect of the black experience. The first DuBois lecturer was Dr. Herbert Aptheker, historian and long term student, associate and friend of Dr. DuBois.

Aptheker, who was custodian of the DuBois papers and the editor of the second volume of Dr. DuBois' autobiography as well as the author of numerous works in black history, spoke on different aspect of Dr. DuBois' career. Other of the lectures presented Stokely Carmichael speaking on Pan-Africanism and Professor David DuBois, the son of Dr. and Mrs. DuBois who is a novelist, teacher, and editor of the Black Panther newspaper.

Hypertension program offered

The University Health Services and a group of Public Health students will be conducting a screening program for hypertension this week. Special emphasis will be on screening minority students and students over the age of 25.

Hypertension, more commonly referred to as high blood pressure, is a common problem in the United States, being a contributing factor to an estimated 250 deaths each year. Physicians estimate that there are some 23 million persons in the United States that have high blood pressure but half of them do not know it.

This disease while more common in older people, still occurs in people of college age. There are two types of hypertension, secondary and essential. Essential hypertension although the exact cause is unknown occurs more commonly in people with a family history of high blood pressure. Secondary hypertension is a result of a specific disease of physical abnormality and can usually be treated with medicine or by surgical means. The college student probably has a higher percentage of secondary forms of hypertension, — and this age group is not spared the excessive mortality of cardiovascular disease that is proportional to blood pressure levels.

Health series on Women and Alcohol offered

The second session of the Women's Health Series, sponsored by the Health Education Division of the University Health Services in cooperation with Everywoman's Center, will be concerned with the issues of alcohol use and abuse among women.

This session, to be held on Tuesday from 12 noon-1:00 p.m., in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union, will be facilitated by Evelyn Duston of the Division of Health Education.

announcements

Public debate on Uni-Fee tomorrow

The UMass Debate Union will hold, at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow in Bartlett Hall, a public debate on the topic,

"Resolved: That, if dorm residency becomes optional, a Universal Resource Fee should be instituted."

On each side, a representative of the Debate Union.

A raffle drawing will be held in conjunction with the debate.

Raleigh bike to be raffled

What can you get for a quarter? A can of Tab? A vanilla soft-serve ice cream cone?

Would you believe a Raleigh Grand Prix bike worth $150?

The Recreation Society will be selling raffle tickets now until April 26 on the Concourse level of the Campus Center. The winner of the raffle will win a Raleigh Grand Prix bike.

The Recreation Society is the undergraduate majors club of the Department of Leisure Studies and Services. Proceeds of the raffle will be used for conferences, workshops, and guest speakers in the field of leisure.

Open forum on Bicentennial aired tonight

Immediately following tonight's 10 P.M. News, WMUA, 91.1 FM will air a live, open forum with local organizers for the People's Bicentennial Commission, a nationwide group of activists concerned about developing alternative ways of celebrating America's 200th birthday.

Tonight's program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus", WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

The Commission is sponsoring a massive rally to be held in Concord, Massachusetts, on April 19th, exactly 200 years after Paul Revere's now-historic ride to warn American revolutionary forces of the advance of British troops.

French Film Festival set for this week

After last year's success, a second French Film Festival, to include viewings of 6 new feature length films along with panel discussions on French cinema and discussions of his work by one French film director, will be held today through April 16.

The Festival is jointly sponsored by the Five Colleges (Five College Lecture Fund, Five College Student Coordinating Board, Five College French Departments, Amherst College Lecture Committee and the UMass Recognized Student Organizations) and the Cultural Services of the French Embassy in New York.

The Very Feminine Question of Life Insurance

In these liberated times no woman need settle for weak, ineffective financial planning. Developing financial independence and estate security for the future is as important for women as it is for men. Your Fidelity Union Life Field Associate knows that and can help you achieve a College Master® or other program which will meet your needs now and in the future.

Graduate school counseling offered

Two new Pre-Graduate Advisers have recently been appointed by CASIAC to assist students who are thinking about attending graduate school. Pam Nuccio, a nurse and Public Health student, will be able to offer advice about health-related careers and the special problems of women in school; Rick Nuccio, a political science student, will concentrate especially on the Social Sciences. Both are available for any kind of general or specific conversation about what lies ahead after graduation.

Juniors should begin thinking about graduate school if they plan to attend in the September following their June graduation. The formal procedure for admission starts in the fall. However, selecting a school and investigating financial aid sources take much time and should be done before this.

Students, who are undecided about whether to attend graduate school, who have questions about specific graduate programs, or who would like some assistance in the graduate application process should speak with the Pre-Graduate Advisers at the CASIAC offices in Machmer, 5-2192.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, April 14 — Born today, you are highly susceptible to the suggestions of others and because of this you may occasionally be influenced in directions you would not have chosen for yourself had you been less subjected to another's will. You have been gifted with judgment of your own; you have not, however, been equally gifted with the kind of determination it takes to insist upon exercising that judgment. For this reason, it is necessary that you take yourself in hand, to constantly remind yourself of your independence as a person, of your freedom as an individual.

Kind-hearted and sympathetic, you lend a compassionate ear to anyone's tale of woe. You are, however, somewhat disinclined to use the fine head nature placed upon your shoulders and, in doing so, to separate the wheat from the chaff where those tales of woe are concerned. In other words, because you do not employ your powers of discernment, you are at times taken in by untrue tales, fooled by false complaints. Learn to tell the difference between the real and the pretended and you can serve both yourself and others better.

Because of your generous nature, you draw all manner of people to you and your democratic spirit accepts them all and would make of any who was willing a close and lasting friend. Whether clever or naive, good or bad, rich of poor, people can always find a supporter in you.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Tuesday, April 15

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A minor problem along health lines could keep you from moving forward with present plans. Don't begrudge time spent overcoming illness.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Disappointment early in the day must be met bravely, especially should young people be present when a discovery of loss is made.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Make plans now for weekend entertainment. Take into consideration another's wishes, and heed the dislikes as well as the likes of a loved one.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Consider all suggestions before making your next move. You may be inclined to leap before you look; try, however, to reverse that order!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Accept the aid of friends, even if you don't especially need or want it. By doing so, you will be doing another a favor -- just the kind he may need.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Take practical measures and you should be able to have your own way where a new project is concerned. You would do well to admit your ambitions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Before vocalizing your adverse criticism of another person's work, you would be wise to put your own house in order. Otherwise, you may suffer a surprise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Keep to routine matters today, especially during morning hours when a friend seems destined to block your way to the top -- all unwittingly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Make an effort to resolve differences between yourself and higher-ups on the employment scene. You can make career progress if you succeed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A number of details may escape your attention during morning hours, but so long as you keep the general picture in mind, all is well by evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — A decision for change may make this an exciting day both at home and on the employment scene. Opinions vary regarding your work.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Hold off on the launching of new projects. Be sure that all is in order on the employment scene before you take on new responsibilities.

CPB plans rally to fight UMass budget cuts

The Coalition for a People's Budget (CPB) has planned for tomorrow a campus-wide rally to oppose proposed University budget cuts. The rally is scheduled from 1:00 to 3:00 p.m. in front of the steps of the Student Union.

Principal speakers will include Samual Bowles of the Economics department, John Bracey of Afro-American Studies and Peter Donahue, co-ordinator of the CPB. Other guest speakers will include Norma Faris, Student Senate Committee on Human Rights; Ken Grayson of one of the employee unions; Milton Kirstein of the Union of Student Employees; Miguel Rivera of the Bilingual Program; a representative of State Human Services; a representative of the University Women's Caucus and a representative of graduate student teaching assistants. In addition to the speakers there will be entertainment, including guerilla theater and singers.

Following the rally, several workshops will be conducted from 3:00 to 5:00 in the Campus Center. Workshop topics include: organizing with respect to the State Legislature; unionization of employees, students employees and students; the political economy of the budget cuts; and the impact of cuts on teaching assistantships and financial aid.

The rally has been endorsed by the many campus groups. In addition, more than 3,000 individuals have signed petitions in support of the rally.

Ocean Options lecture series begins tonight

The Coalition for Environmental Quality, in cooperation with DVP & Program Council presents Dr. John Teal in a lecture entitled Health of the Oceans. The lecture will be tonight at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom and will include a slide presentation.

Teal is currently a staff member of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute where he is involved in continuing research on the ocean.

The lecture by Dr. Teal is the opening lecture of the Ocean Options program. Ocean Options is a week long program of films and lectures on the ocean presented by CEQ, DVP, & Program Council. PC will present films of Jacques Costeau on Tuesday & Wednesday, and on Thursday will be a lecture by Tom Horton entitled Undersea Worlds presented by DVP. All presentations will be in the SUB.

Radcliffe drops crew woman

By TERESA HANIFIN

The Women's Varsity Crew team, stroked by co-captain Debbie Kirchmer, was defeated in their debut race with Radcliff College by nearly five lengths on the Charles Saturday.

A seasoned Radcliffe crew breezed to the finish in 7:06, while UMass was 19 seconds behind at 7:25.1.

Radcliffe's varsity jumped out in front early, having nearly a three-length lead by the halfway mark.

"We anticipated this," explained coach Bob Spousta. "However, we expected to row a good strong body and get it up on them."

One reason the crew didn't catch up was the stroke rate. "We try to row 30 to 31 strokes per minute," Bob stressed. "But the stroke rating went up around 33 or 34, and there was no power to match it."

The Cliffies were no easy opponents, being the national collegiate champos of two years. Bob saw the race as "the hardest one-on-one UMass has ever had to row."

But he was not disappointed in the effort. "They tried hard," he claimed. "They just did not row their best race."

In an earlier race, the JV crew finished third against four Radcliffe boats, despite a broken fin incurred halfway through the race.

Radcliffe lightweights finished the 2,000 meters first in 7:33. Second was their JV heavyweights at 7:37, third was UMass in 7:56, Radcliffe third varsity came next at 8:03.5, and bringing up the rear were the Cliffies' JV lightweights, in at 8:17.5.

"There is no question in my mind that they would have finished several lengths faster," commented Spousta. But he stressed that he is not blaming the equipment. The women had hit the fin as they put the boat in the water, so as a result, it fell off. The boat took an abrupt turn which had to be compensated for, and the rudder had to be used for steering.

Next Sunday, the crew team will face Connecticut College, and a B.U. team fresh off a victory over Syracuse, UPenn, and Williams.

Men's crew powers way to four wins

By BOB NORTON

The Men's Crew powered their way to four decisive victories this weekend with what coach Bill Mahoney termed "a good performance by everyone."

The rowing conditions were next to perfect on the Hudson River with fast conditions in the early races and an increasing tide to slow times down as the morning progressed. Marist College and New York Maritime College (N.Y.M.C.) provided the opposition, but as the results later proved, not much competition.

The varsity heavyweight eights raced first since the conditions were most favorable at that time. They started out at 42 strokes per minute (S.P.M.) and settled after thirty strokes to a 36. The race was nip-and-tuck with the boats still even at about the 1000 meter mark. At that time, coxwain Andy Burton called a "power twenty" and the varsity gained the lead for good. With intermittent "power tens and twenties," the crew increased their lead to a length and a half with 500 meters to go. As the S.P.M. went up over that last stretch, the margin continued to grow until UMass crossed the finish line with a time of 5:40.5 for the 2000 meter course. Marist finished 6.0 seconds later, with a length of open water between them and the victors. N.Y.M.C. finished about seven lengths behind the UMass eight.

The victory margins for UMass increased as the J.V. and freshman eights remained unbeaten. Jim Bouzianis stroked the J.V.'s to a fifteen second and three length win over Marist and N.Y.M.C. The frosh eight continued the impressive showing by besting their counterparts by 10.5 seconds and two and one half lengths. In the varsity four event, Marist didn't have an entry but UMass assumed control in upending N.Y.M.C. by fourteen seconds and three lengths of open water.

The second freshman eight for UMass was split up since last week into a four and pair event. They fell prey to inexperience with these boats as the four finished 12.5 seconds behind Marist and the pair lost their early lead and finished ahead of N.Y.M.C. but behind Marist's duo.

Mahoney said that he "was very pleased the way everyone responded after so much shifting around. We needed to, and did get some good races under our belt." Shifting around is putting things mildly; only two oarsmen rowed in the same seats as last week. The three top boats had only three days together before Saturday's race.

Mahoney singled out several fine individual performances in last Saturday's regatta. Jon Hill took over as varsity stroke and Doug Frost filled in at three seat in the varsity. Seniors Jim Bouzianis and Bill Vose adjusted well; Jim to J.V. stroke and Bill shifting twice within the week. Also cited were Dave Assad in his change from starboard to port in the varsity four and Bob Norton for his performance after a month off the water due to injury.

Black hurls no-hitter as JV's sweep doubleheader, 8-2, 5-0

By CHAS O'CONNOR

A 13 strikeout, no-hit performance by Bob Black provided a 5-0 win for the UMass JVs Saturday afternoon over New Hampton Prep after Tom Ferris had hurled an 8-2 victory in the first game of the doubleheader, also whiffing 13.

Black's gem was the first no-hitter of his career and came in the freshman's first appearance in a UMass uniform. He had been warming up on several occasions in the team's opener last Wednesday, but had failed to get in.

Coach McKay was not aware of the no-hitter and had planned to lift Black in order to get Chip Warren some work in the sixth inning. While Warren was making his warmups, Black mentioned the no-hitter to McKay, who told him to "get back out there". McKay was impressed with the way that Warren took it. "Warren showed class", said McKay.

UMass scored a run in the first inning as Bill Hendy doubled, stole third and scored on a groundout by Al Lopriore. They added another in the third when Peter Bannon walked, stole second and went to third on a throwing error, and scored on a single by McLaughlin.

The Minutemen tallied three times in the fifth inning with RBIs going to Kevin Finnercane (single), Mike Sullivan (single), and Scott Aye (a bases-loaded walk).

Nine bases were stolen by the team in the second game, after they had stolen four in the first, a six-hit route performance by Ferris, sophomore transfer from Salem State.

Massachusetts scored twice in the second, twice in the fourth and four times in the fifth to take an 8-0 lead. New Hampton Prep scored their two runs in the final two innings.

Mark Wyner had two hits in the game, a single in the first and a double in the fourth.

June 2-August 22 15 credits

An intensive 12 week program in social ecology and environmental sciences, exploring alternative technologies, a no-growth economy, organic agriculture, urban decentralization, the politics of ecology, and the design and construction of experimental models for wind, solar, and methane-powered energy production.

Goodard is located in a rural Vermont community, rich in both natural and human resources, in a state noted for its progressive environmental legislation.

The summer program is directed by MURRAY BOOKCIN, author of Post Scarcity Anarchism, Our Synthetic Environment, and Limits of the City. Visiting Faculty will include outstanding national experts in the fields of alternate technology and communities such as KARL HESS, Community Technologies, SAM LOVE, Environmental Action, JOHN and NANCY TODD, founders New Alchemy Institute, WILSON CLARK, author of Energy for Survival, STEVE BAER, Zomeworks, JOHN SHUTTLEWORTH, publisher of Mother Earth News, ROBERT REINES, Integrated Life Support Systems Labs, and STEWART BRAND, publisher of The Whole Earth Catalog.

'Destructive reporting'

To the Sports Editor:

This note is in response to an article named: "Israeli Sports" appearing in your April 10th issue.

At the beginning of this article I was quoted by your reporter, Mike Berger, as follows:

"If an Arab athletic team knew they would be competing against an Israelis team, they would withdraw from the game rather than play the Jews. Maybe it's a good thing. For if they could, they would kill us then and there."

The first part of the quote is an unfortunate fact, and an accurate quote. The second part of the quote not only never crossed my lips, it also never crossed my mind. Also, I fail to recall any statement I made, remotely resembling the said quote, so that a misinterpretation could have resulted.

As a survivor of the horrid 1972 Munich Massacre, in which 11 Israeli athletes were killed by a group of Palestinian Guerillas, you might agree with me that I am entitled to somewhat extreme and emotional opinions about the subject of Arab-Israeli relations. Still, it is my belief that any Arab athletes participating in an international affair, do seek athletic improvement and not an opportunity to kill Israelis.

This article is an example of unprofessional and destructive reporting all around. Destructive for me, for it badly distorts my personal image. For the cause of peace, it is destructing since it generates hatred where it is least needed. Destructive for the paper since the paper's professional reputation is at stake, and last, your public is misinformed.

While the misquote I have been relating to in this note was not the only one, it was the most farfetched and destructive one. Let's trv to hear it next time from the horse's mouth and not from its interpreter's mind.

Sincerely,
A. Melamed (Beinush)

O's dump Sox, 11-3

BALTIMORE [AP] — Brooks Robinson scored four runs and drilled four hits, including a two-run triple, leading the Baltimore Orioles to an 11-3 victory over the Boston Red Sox Sunday.

The Orioles collected 10 of their 15 hits off Luis Tiant, who had a 10-3 record against them since joining Boston, and provided Mike Torrez with a victory in his first American League start despite his giving up 11 hits.

Ken Singleton, who came to the Orioles from Montreal along with Torrez, drove in three runs and had one of Baltimore's five doubles. Dave Duncan, another newcomer, and Mark Belanger also had two RBI apiece.

Baltimore scored two runs in the second, three in the fourth and three more in the fifth when Robinson's fly ball fell safely in right-center as outfielders Fred Lynn and Dwight Evans backed off at the last moment.

The Orioles added three more runs in the seventh off reliever Dick Pole. Fred Lynn drove in all of Boston's runs with two singles and a sacrifice fly.

Gorillas play host to improved Huskies

By TOM CROWLEY

The UMass lacrosse team will try and go over .500 when they meet the Huskies of UConn today outside Boyden Gym at 3:00, postponed from an earlier date due to rain.

Against the Minutemen, the Huskies' bark is worse than its bite. They have yet to beat the gorillas in nine tries. The closest they had ever come was a 11-10 loss two years ago.

Last year they lost 16-3.

The Huskies are an improved team though. They received votes in the rankings and when they were originally supposed to play, they were twentieth in the nation.

The improvement is due to the type of team and style of play they have. Six of the ten starters are either freshmen or sophmores and the majority of players on the roster are the same.

This abundance of youth has given rise to the type of game they play: a close body-checking game. UConn plays a hustling sixty minutes of lacrosse.

The team is led by two seniors and a junior. Senior Gary Harris and Junior Mike Hogan, both attackmen, pace the team in scoring. Goalie Ross Blecchman captains the team and acts as a sparkplug with occasional charges from the crease.

The Huskies almost knocked off Washington & Lee, a nationally ranked power, but lost 9-7 after being up 7-5 at the end of three periods.

UConn ripped MIT and Holy Cross, 16-3 and 15-3 respectively. However, they lost to Brown, the top ranked team in New England and ninth in the nation, 17-10.

"They always come up here psyched," Coach Garber said. "Coach (Nate) Osur lives for the day he beats us. He was a class and teammate of mine."

The Minutemen are bringing a two game winning streak into the contest. The gorillas knocked off highly ranked Cortland State and two tough games are on tap this week. The gorillas face Harvard Wednesday and BC Saturday.

Aside from the loss of co-captain Bill Collins and assorted minor injuries, the UMass is in good physical shape and ready for UConn.

Water poloists submerge Ivies

By DEBBY HOXSIE

The UMass men's water polo team scored their most important victory of the year on Saturday by defeating Yale 13 to 6 in a tournament which included Yale, Dartmouth, and UMass. UMass also beat Dartmouth 15 to 6. Last fall Yale won the New England's Division 1 title and has been unbeaten in the east for several years.

UMass surprised Yale with a strong defensive press and a barrage of hotting. Russ Yarworth put UMass ahead in the first quarter with a backhand shot that the Yale goalie never saw. He scored again before the quarter ended to give UMass a 2 to 1 lead.

In the second quarter Duncan Lomas scored two goals, one a powerful swing shot that caught the Yale defense by complete surprise. Todd Eachus lobbed in another goal, but at the half the score was still close 5 to 4. In the third quarter Yale was held scoreless while Henry MacLean, Ron Boucher, and Russ Yarworth put in goals for UMass. The fourth quarter saw UMass put the game away 13 to 6.

Goalie Mark Gordan played a fine game stopping 10 of 16 shots fired at him by Yale, 6 of which came in the last quarter. Total individual goals scored by UMass were: Lomas 3, MacLean 3, Yarworth 3, Boucher 2, McGinn 1, and Eachus [illegible]

Immediately following the Yale game, UMass defeated Dartmouth by a commanding 15 to 6 score. The game was dominated again by strong UMass shooting and swimming. Kevin McGinn racked up 9 goals, 4 of them coming in the third quarter MacLean scored 2, Lomas 1, Boucher 1, Yarworth 1, Latter 1, and McCafferty 1.

Comeback bid fails, baseballers split

By BOB HIGGINS

The stage was set for a storybook ending.

Things were looking bad for the UMass baseball team in the second game of Saturday's doubleheader with Northeastern. It was the bottom of the seventh and they were down 2-0. After Jim Cullen and Paul Abramowicz flied out, they started taking the numbers and the 200 fans began to drift out of Earl Lordenfield.

Suddenly, UMass came alive with three straight singles, and it was 2-1, men on second and third, and clean-up hitter Jerry Mondalto was at the plate with a chance to be the hero.

But it was not to be. Mondalto gave it a shot, but grounded to short, and the Minutemen had to settle for a split after taking the first game, 9-1.

UMass took an early lead in the first one, jumping on Northeastern's ace hurler Jim Walker in the first. Pete Backstrom, Mike Koperniak, and John Seed, the first three Minutemen batters, each singled. Mondalto reached on a fielder's choice, Jim Black singled, and after designated hitter John Healy grounded out, Steve Wright and Jim Cullen singled and Charlie Wright came in to pitch for the Huskies. He struck out Paul Abramowicz to end the inning, but the Minutemen had a quick 4-0 lead.

The other big inning for the Minutemen was the fourth. After two were out, Mondalto and Black reached on errors by Northeastern shortstop Joe Marani, Black on a disputed call at first. Healy then belted one that rolled to the wall in left-center, and by the time the left fielder finished bobbling the ball, Healy had scored and it was 8-1.

Wright followed with a walk, stole second, and scored on Cullen's single. The other UMass run had come in the third when Mark Fontaine pinch hit for Abramowicz and hit a sacrifice fly to bring in Healy.

Jeff Reardon pitched the first six innings of the first game, and while he wasn't untouchable, he pitched well. The only Northeastern run came in the second on a walk, a base hit, and a scratch infield hit which shortstop Cullen threw away. He was helped by some fine infield defense, as the Minutemen turned three double plays to prevent him from getting into too much trouble. John McManus pitched the seventh, and gave up just one infield hit.

The second game was a bit of a disappointment for the Minutemen, according to Coach Dick Bergquist, because "the pitching wasn't that good against us." But Bergquist's hitters couldn't do anything against Northeastern southpaw Jim Powers doing their damage in the seventh off reliever Mark Krentzman. The Minutemen came close to scoring in the first when, with Mike Koperniak on second and two men out, Mondalto was robbed of a hit on a superb diving catch by Huskie left fielder Mark McHugh.

Again UMass got good pitching, this time from freshman Rich Kelly, who worked the first six innings. The only inning in which he had trouble was the second, and that was the difference in the game. He walked Northeastern DH Mel Siebolt, then gave up a hit to Dave Modugno, followed by another walk to catcher Ron Wilson. After Rich DeCristoforo struck out, Jim Cullen bobbled a Joe Marani grounde. as one run scored, and another run scored on an infield out.

Other than that, Kelly pitched well. "The pitching was good, though not as good as I had hoped," commented Bergquist. But meanwhile, the UMass bats were silent, as ohey collected only four scattered hits before the seventh.

BALLS AND STRIKES... Bergquist is having trouble giving his pitchers all the work they want and need. Neither Reardon nor Kelly had pitched since returning from their Southern trip two weeks ago... Jerry Erb pitched the seventh inning of the second game, throwing a scare into everyone by giving up two singles before wrapping it up...

Trackmen edged by Dartmouth, 95-91

By MIKE BERGER

As expected, Saturday's track meet vs Dartmouth lived up to its expectations of a "seat squirmer" and a track meet of championship caliber. But unfortunately for UMass, the seat was a little more uncomfortable for a couple of reasons. The final score was Dartmouth 95 — UMass 91, and Colgate 6. In addition, the injury bug began to reach that of epidemic proportions. Combinations of muscle, groin and ankle pulls prevented Ken Adamson, Mike Geraghty, and sprinters Dave Hinds and Joe Martens from performing in Saturday's meet. Also Todd Holt, UMass No. 1 javelin thrower may be lost for the season with a spring football knee injury.

Although Coach O'Brien was discouraged that his team lost such a close meet, he was extremely disappointed that these injuries could hinder the above performers for competing in the Yankee Conference which will be 3 weeks hence. However, O'Brien was quite impressed with the intense desire and competitiveness that the whole team displayed throughout the meet.

Dartmouth had come into its first outdoor meet, ranked among the top outdoor track teams in New England, and having some of its sprinters, quarter milers, milers and weight men enter the prestigious Florida Invitationals.

As for the meet itself, the final result was not determined until the mile relay — the last event of the meet. Both teams kept seesawing the lead. For example, UMass held a 78-67 lead after the 440 Intermediate Hurdles. But Dartmouth came storming back with a 22-10 point spurt in the 220, discus, and 2 mile to regain the lead 90-88 before the mile relay. UMass, bolstered by the excellent leg of 5:5 Tom Beland, gave Dartmouth a scare after the first leg. But the succeeding Dartmouth legs of under 50 seconds for each ¼ mile opened up an insurmountable lead over UMass.

This wasn't to say that UMass went without any superior performances. Tony Pendleton came through with a much needed 1st place in the long jump and second place against a tough Dartmouth corp of sprinters.

Racqueteers just miss edging defending champions Vermont

By PETER NALAK

The UMass netmen came within one point of upsetting the defending Yankee Conference champions Saturday, losing to Vermont 5-4.

"We scared the hell out of them," said Coach Kosakowski.

Solid UMass performances in the singles tied the match at 3-3 but Vermont's doubles superiority put all chances of an upset out of reach.

David Abramoff, at first singles, played better than his score indicates, losing 4-6, 0-6.

At the second spot, Chris Post ran up against Vermont's number one singles player last season. Post kept it close the first set but finally succumbed 4-6, 0-6. It was his first defeat this season.

"He was serving and volleying real well, and I just couldn't run down his shots," said Post.

This was the case with many of the matches. The Catamounts were used to the fast, concrete courts where the teams played.

On concrete, the balls skidded and bounced very low, ending points quickly and producing "fast" tennis.

Third singles netman Bill Karol pulled his come-from-behind routine again, dropping the first set 1-6. He came back convincingly in the second 6-2, and appeared on his way to a smooth victory. The third set turned out to be a dogfight though, with the score staying close. Tied at six games apiece, the players were forced into a best of nine point sudden-death tiebreaker.

Karol fell behind 1-3, in the tiebreaker, tied it up at 3-3 and then fell behind again 3-4. He saved a match point against him to tie it up 4-4, sudden-death match point for both players. A well placed lob gave Karol the game and match 7-6, keeping his undefeated season intact.

At fourth singles, Barnaby Kalan kept UMass' hopes alive by winning 6-4, 6-3.

Fifth singles went to UMass just as easily when Marc Ouellet won 6-2, 6-4.

At one point, it appeared that UMass would have a nearly unbeatable 4-2 point lead. Kevin Garrahan, playing sixth singles and perhaps his best tennis this season, won the first set 7-5. His opponent recovered though, and fought back for a 6-0, 6-2 crucial win for Vermont.

The applause and cheers of the Vermont crowd echoed through the hockey rink where the matches were played. Spectators applauded wildly for points won by Vermont while UMass talent was met by total silence.

The first doubles team of Karol and Garrahan host to the defending Yankee Conference second doubles champions, 3-6, 4-6.

Post and Ouellet, at second doubles, lost to an equally tough team 4-6, 3-6.

The netmen's only success in doubles came at the third spot. Abramoff and Kalan won 7-6, 4-6, 6-3 but Vermont's victory had been clinched by the time they walked off the courts.

"Under the conditions, we played very well," Kosakowski said.

Defenses crushed, fall of Phnom Penh imminent

PHNOM PENH [UPI] - Khmer Rouge rebels smashed through Phnom Penh's defenses yesterday and all but sealed the city's fate as the first capital to fall to the Communists in the Indochina war.

Government defenses deteriorated rapidly on Camboda's Buddhist New Year's Day and Phnom Penh's fall - and with it the fall of Cambodia itself - appeared imminent, perhaps only hours away.

In a broadcast monitored in Saigon, Phnom Penh Radio said last night Communist - led insurgents pierced the city's northern defenses and battled to within "several hundred" yards of the French Embassy in the heart of Phnom Penh.

A government armored squadron headquarters was stationed just north of the French embassy, but the radio report did not indicate whether the camp itself was attacked.

In Belgrade, the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug said Prince Norodom Sihanouk was awaiting only fall of the capital and that he would return to Phnom Penh within days or possibly hours. Sihanouk was deposed as Cambodia's chief of state in 1970 and has lived in exile in Peking since.

Rebel forces pushed into deserted Pochentong village, between Phnom Penh and Pochentong Airport which has been the city's lone supply link to the outside world for more than two months. UPI Cambodian newsmen said they swept behind government defenders on the crumbling western defense line.

Insurgents set refugee slums afire and sent thousands of families fleeing toward what seemed certain to be only temporary safety closer to the center of Phnom Penh, only to be turned back by military police at the city limits.

Recoilless rifle shells fired by rebels less than 500 yards away hit the University of Phnom Penh faculty of letters building, at the western edge of the inner capital city, wounding two students.

A dissident Cambodian air force pilot, identified as Lt. Khieu Yossavat, bombed - but missed - the high command headquarters in downtown Phnom Penh.

Unconfirmed reports said government artillerymen turned their guns toward the city and joined rebel forces in heavy shelling barrages.

The government clamped a 24-hour curfew on Phnom Penh and threatened arrest of civilians and court martial of soldiers if they were caught on the streets.

Radio Phnom Penh appealed for calm and said U.S. aid would arrive soon by parachute, in broadcasts interspersed with music such as "Marching Through Georgia" and "Old Folks at Home."

American supply planes quit landing at the airport with the U.S. pullout of Saturday, but U.S. civilian-flown jets began airdropping food, fuel and ammunition to Phnom Penh's defenders during the weekend. The worsening situation yesterday all but closed the airport even to Cambodian military planes.

Acting president Sak Sutsakhan, pleading for calm, said "I and military and civilian leaders are actively continuing to work without fear in order to lead our republic toward achieving our final goal."

Only hours earlier, Sak Sutsakhan was appointed to head a last-ditch "High Committee of the Khmer Republic," to lead he nation and to try to negotiate with the insurgents. There was not even a pause in the fighting.

UMTA, administration agree on co-op

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

The campus administration and the UMass Tenant Association (UMTA) agreed last night to start procedures so that a cooperative self management program can be instituted as soon as possible in Married Student Housing.

UMTA agreed to turn over the $26,000 rent strike monies, presently being held in escrow, in exchange for the administration's promise to sign the cooperative management agreement on May 23. In addition, the administration agreed to request a letter of support for the co-op plans from UMass President Robert Wood.

The administration and UMTA are going to work together to produce a management agreement by May 17, allowing a week's time for consideration before the signing of the agreement and turnover of the rent monies.

This agreement will be "skeletal," according to Douglas Forsyth of the Chancellor's office who represented Chancellor Rnadolph Bromery at last night's meeting. All efforts will be made to produce a fully workable agreement by September 1975.

The administration also conceded to UMTA demands which called for the University to pay off the $140,000 in outstanding loans on the apartments, and to assume responsibility for the costs of faulty construction at North Village.

In addition, the administration will provide funds to pay for the creation of assistantships during the summer to aid in the setup of the cooperative. An energy survey of the three apartment complexes will also be provided. Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage called this action "a demonstration of good faith on the part of the University" toward the tenants.

However, the implementation of the cooperative proposal will be contingent upon the solution of legal questions that exist in regard to the Building Authority and bondholder agreements. The Building Authority is a state-appointed corporation, set up to erect buildings on campus and is the legal owner of the apartment complexes. The Board of Trustees would be able to delegate management responsibility to UMTA, but the Trustees have no power over the Building Authority.

"Our chief difficulties will lie in getting this type of plan through that bureaucracy," said Forsyth. "These issues demand a clearly articulated process, and if we can do that we can move far down the road towards the cooperative self management plan," he added.

It was agreed that the University should hire outside legal counsel to assist in working out the details of these legal concerns. "The first major step should be a feasibility study," said Residential Life Director Kenneth Dean.

This study may include help from members of the co-op at the University of Minnesota. UMTA plans to model their cooperative somewhat on the Minnesota idea. Campus administrators agreed last night to provide traveling expenses for UMTA to visit this co-op.

Under the terms of the proposed co-operative, UMTA would lease the apartment complexes from the University. Co-op members would be responsible for managing the apartments. UMTA feels that this system would eliminate the alleged mis-management which exists now in married student housing.

Tenants voted Sunday to support the co-op proposal. In a canvassing of North Village that night, UMTA gained approximately 70 new participants in the rent strike. These tenants agreed to deposit their rents into UMTA's escrow account until the co-op agreement is signed by UMTA and the campus administration.

Corwin denies allegations; 'I never received a penny'

By CHAS O'CONNOR
Staff Reporter

Bruce Corwin, Treasurer of Rainbow Productions, said in a telephone interview last night that "I never received a penny for anything connected with Rainbow Productions."

Corwin is being charged by the Student Judiciary for allegedly ignoring RSO financial regulations. A contempt of court charge has also been filed against him.

The hearing for that charge will be tonight before the trial resumes.

The contempt charges were filed after Corwin walked out of last Tuesday's trial procedures. Before he left, Corwin read a statement in which he called the trial a "mockery of justice."

In last night's interview, Corwin stated that he felt that the Student Judiciary was not acting under precedents set by state and federal courts. "I can't understand how anyone could get a fair trial," he said. "The judges aren't following the law, they are making their own law."

He pointed out that Cindy Iris, student attorney general, selects the judges in all the cases and she also selects the defense advocates, in addition to handling the prosecution herself.

Another reason why Corwin feels he is not being treated fairly is that the assistant prosecutor was allowed to take the stand for the prosecution during the trial." He is obviously biased," said Corwin.

Corwin also holds that Iris has been supplying his defense advocates with false information. "It's become apparent to myself and my defense advocates," said Corwin, "after talking to (Vice Chancellor) Gage and Dean (of Students) Field, that the information that she has been giving them is false."

Corwin said he called Gage to verify that Iris had talked to him and Gage had replied that he didn't. "I have never talked to her about your case," Gage said to Corwin.

According to Corwin, Iris also told his defense advocates and him that she was convening the Faculty Advisory board, which reviews student judicial action, when in fact she does not have the authority to do so.

Corwin maintains the charges against him should also be charged against every RSO group because the RSO office repeatedly allows things like multiple purchase orders to occur. "If you are going to prosecute one RSO group for violations of the financial policies, then you should prosecute every group because it is a denial of one's due process," Corwin said.

Corwin feels that all charges against Rainbow Productions should have been dropped because at the time of the alleged violations, it was not an RSO group.

Student leaders deplore budget cuts, tuition hike

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

This is the first article of a two-part series. Nine student leaders agreed recently that a budget cut at UMass is "unrealistic" and that a proposed tuition hike is "absurd."

Recognizing a significant and important period in UMass history, the Collegian recently convened a special meeting with many of the student leaders. Those invited to the meeting included Student Government Association President Rick Savini, Student Senate Speaker Cindy McGrath, Graduate Student Senate President Jim Lindsey, Commuter Assembly President John O'Keefe, Academic Affairs Committee Chairman Joe Beals, Greek Area Council President John Tata, Sylvan Area Government President Rich Hazelton, Northeast Area Government President Chris Bunnewith, Orchard Hill Area Government President Mark Kaizerman, Southwest Assembly President Craig Sanderson, Central Area Government President Tim O'Brien and Chairperson of Governmental Affairs Craig Ghidotti.

Lindsey and Bunnewith did not attend the meeting.

The following questions were asked of the leaders — Their responses are listed alphabetically.

1. How do you feel about the 10 per cent budget cut proposed by Secretary of Education Paul Parks? Do you think the cut will affect student programs and academics? How do you feel about a proposed tuition increase?

Beals — It's just plain unrealistic. There is no way a 10 per cent cut can fail to have impact on academic programs, regardless of who says it won't. A tuition hike is absurd. It conflicts with the idea of making low-cost higher education available to everyone.

Ghidotti — The proposed 10 per cent budget cut proposed by Parks will definitely affect student programs. BDIC, Outreach, UYA and probably Everywoman's Center would be affected the most. The tuition hike is...absurd. The school is a public institution and should be as accesible as possible for all people. A tuition hike is very contradictory to that whole philosophy.

Hazelton — I am a bit upset with the proposed budget cut, because I feel it will have a major effect on student programs and academics. The tuition hike should not be used to make up what is not gained in the budget cut. The whole idea of public education is being neglected. The people who can least afford the hike are going to hurt the most.

Kaizerman — I feel that at least 50 per cent of UMass' budget can be termed administrative and therefore Secretary Parks must be able to find all of the 10 per cent budget cut within the true administration without affecting academics. There should be no tuition hike — cut funds from the administration.

McGrath — Realistically speaking, members of this university community cannot pretend that they live in a vacuum, untouched by the worsening state and national economic situation. We must all share the burden, and if this means budget cuts, then it means budget cuts. The key is to identify accordingly. It might be interesting to note that if all full-time personnel salaries were equalized to $14,400.00 per year (NOTE: this would increase the salaries of most, decreasing a minority of staff to a comfortable middle-class subsistence), nearly 2.1 million dollars could be saved. Granted, this may seem extremely absurd to all red-blooded capitalist Americans. I am merely trying to point out that cuts can be made without necessarily eliminating entire academic or human service programs.

O'Brien — If Parks can make the cuts where he says, there should be no problem. However, I doubt that the whole 10 per cent will come out of the administration, so the cuts

Students net credit for inmate experience

By DEBBI DiMASSIMO
Staff Reporter

The UMass Model Education Program offers an unprecedented educational experience to students interested in sociology, law, or psychology: the chance to go to jail for 90 days for 15 credits.

The only requirement for students who opt for the program is that they keep a journal while "enrolled" in the Berkshire County House of Correction in Pittsfield. The students are subject to the same restrictions as actual inmates of the institution, according to William F. O'Leary, a coordinator of the student inmate program.

O'Leary, a junior from Pittsfield who is majoring in legal studies, spent his spring semester last year as a student inmate.

The program, the only one of its kind in the United States, was developed by Dr. Lawrence Dye of the School of Ed., who was once an inmate himself. Dye was released from a California prison ten years ago and has since reached national prominence for his work in the field of correctional reform.

The goal of the Model Education Program is to open correctional institutions to the community and to offer education as an alternative life-style to offenders. Inmates are allowed to take courses at Berkshire Community College or at UMass through University without Walls (UWW). A guard accompanies the inmate to his classes, and returns with him to the jail each night. Courses are also taught in the jail.

"The mere presence of a student in the cellblock is a visible means of illustrating alternatives," said O'Leary. "A college education didn't seem feasible to the inmates before the inception of the program in 1973."

Four inmates within the past year who took advantage of the program to take courses at UMass have since been released and are now enrolled as full-time students, said O'Leary.

The average age of inmates in the Berkshire County jail is 22, and 60 to 80 per cent of them were convicted on drug or drug-related charges, according to O'Leary.

"Every student inmate who has gone into the jail has reacted differently," said O'Leary, "but most of us found that we were incredibly naive."

"The inmates have a body of knowledge and a perspective on deviance and institutions which is unique to them. In a lot of ways, I learned more from then than they did from me," said O'Leary.

Presently, two UMass students, Stephen Crawford and Roy Johnston, and Richard Yarmey, a Berkshire Community College student are "locked up" in Pittsfield. They have completed 62 days of their 90-day terms.

Although a student inmate can leave the program at any time if he is willing to relinquish his credits, all of the students who went into the jail prior to this semester have completed 90 days. Of the 14 students who have served time in the past year and a half, seven were male and seven were female.

No expectations are placed on students entering the jail. They are free to become involved in any program open to the inmates. Most of the students have contracted with professors for independent study credits beyond the 15 credits they receive from the School of Education.

A series of workshops on the Model Education and Student Inmate programs will be held on Thursday, April 24, as part of the School of Education Marathon.

Men or women interested in becoming student inmates should contact Bill O'Leary by calling 545-3622 or 256-0602.

Tenants meeting disrupted

By MEREDITH MANNING
Progressive News Service

A tenant's meeting held last week in Village Park apartments to discuss a rent increase and other problems was disrupted by a management employee.

Notices about the meeting, distributed in advance, had specified that only those tenants who are not employees of Village Park would be welcome. One woman reported that a maintenance man stormed into her house on the day of the meeting, and refused to leave until she explained why the employees were excluded from the meeting. Other sources say that the man was so enraged that they feared he would, "...take a swing at somebody."

Single mothers at Village Park have been trying to organize a tenant's union for a year, yet harrassment of this sort has continually blocked their efforts. The complex is subsidized by both federal and state governments for low and moderate income tenants. Since these apartments are the least expensive in Amherst, the waiting lists are long and the conditions of the units are commesurate with the low rents.

Despite the large number of small children, there are no recreational facilities except for one sandbox.

Last February, 1974, rents increased $10. Tenants complained that the increase justified improved facilities. Single mothers, particularly, hoped for a meeting house large enough for tenants to assemble, while their children occupied themselves with whatever amusements the Board of Trustees could provide.

There now exists a "Community Center" located in one of the vacant apartments. It is sparsely furnished and too small for meetings. There are two rooms upstairs: one is empty; the other is used for a dark room. Although the manager has offered to teach children the skills of his hobby, tenants render it useless. Most Village Park children are between the toddling stage and five years of age. Even if the children were old enough to be interested in photography, most single mothers and married parents cannot afford the necessary equipment.

This is one example of how the management attempts to manipulate people who are prescribing to their services; exerting their power by virtue of their monetary influence. Tenants also believe that the management has violated the guidelines of a policy that was originally designed to maintain a "balance" of tenants.

No SATF increase slated

For the first time in three years, the Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF) will not increase.

The SATF, collected on the student's semester fee bill, will remain at this year's rate, $55.50 for next year (fiscal '76).

Kevin Muldoon, chairperson of the Student Senate Budget Committee, said yesterday, "We were able to hold our budget despite an 11 per cent cost of living increase. We also estimated the student population at 17,500, that's 200 more than was budgeted for this year."

"By keeping the tax the same, said Jon Hite, member of the budget committee, "we've actually cut the budget 18 per cent considering inflation and increased costs."

The entire outlay, slightly higher than this year, is $1,009,905, including a one percent across-the-board cut in all funded organizations.

"We discovered we overbudgeted by $8,011," said Muldoon, "so we either had to increase the SATF by 50 cents a person or cut 1 per cent across the board."

"We decided to cut because it wouldn't damage any organization and would save students money."

The total outlay for student groups in percentages is: Area Governments, 17 per cent; Student Services, 69.5 per cent; Third World Services, 5.6 per cent; Community Services, 6.3 per cent; Student Organizations, 1 per cent.

The area governments receive "$10 a head right off the top from the SATF." said Muldoon.

Student Services include Spectrum, Legal Services, Collegian, Credit Union, Index, Room to Move, Student Auto Workers, Student Center for Educational Research, Student Organizing Project, Student Government Association, and The SS Transit System.

Third World Services are Afro American Society, Ahora, Asian Americans, Black Mass communications, Black Scientists Society and the Drum.

Community Services include the Veterans Coalition, University-State Communications Council, Belchertown and Boltwood Projects, Citizens for Environmental Quality, JOE, Northern Educational Services, WMUA, and COP.

Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) at $239,479 represents the largest part of the budget, followed by the Area Governments who receive $175,000; The Collegian at $72,022, Student Senate Transit Service at $74,250 and Student Organizing Project at $52,351; Index at $47,053; WMUA, $38,413; Legal Services Office, $37,912; and the Student Center for Educational Research, $28,379 are the groups receiving the largest amount of funding by the Senate.

All figures include the one per cent cut.

The budget was overwhelmingly passed by the Student Senate Sunday night.

People's Market doubles business

By RICK HANAUER
Staff Reporter

The People's Market, now in its fifth semester as a non-profit, student-run operation, has been feeling growing pains, according to coordinator Ruth Fritsch.

"We're doing about twice the business we did last semester," Fritsch said, "each semester we have to request a space again, so I requested more."

Fritsch, who worked for the market last semester and graduated from UMass in January, is the store's only full-time, non-student worker. A change in the market's policy of hiring only students was made in creating her position, she said.

Recognized Student Organizations (RSO), an arm of the administration which monitors student enterprises, keeps the market's accounts but allows it considerable autonomy.

"We have complete freedom to decide who we deal with and RSO understands this," Fritsch said.

The market's aims, Fritsch said, are to create student jobs and provide a cheaper alternative to on-campus stores such as Munchys. She termed it a "semi-cooperative," to which every student belongs without paying dues.

Two to four students man the market at a given time, making a total of 14 employees, none of whom may work over 10 hours for wages. But many of these, Fritsch said, put in extra service on a volunteer basis to keep things running smoothly.

In addition to cashiering, she said, workers must price and stock freshly delivered goods from 15 distributors and keep the store clean. Because the store is cramped for space and understaffed, she added, cashiers are finding it harder to give personal attention to customers, especially during peak hours and deliveries.

The market's low average mark-up of 16 per cent is due to the fact that it pays no rent, and RSO uses all the proceeds to pay bills and wages, Fritsch said. The present "debt" of about $4000 probably reflects money paid out for unsold goods, and "should be cleared out by the end of summer," she said.

Fritsch emphasized that customers' spilling and munching of food add up to considerable losses and may drive up the store's prices even though it cannot be measured. "A lot of people come in and eat their way around the market," she said.

Will the People's Market expand? "Being responsive to the needs of the community, we'd like to," Fritsch said. More volume and types of food could be handled, she said, and meat sales might be possible if space and cooling units could be obtained.

In general, Fritsch said more volunteer help and awareness of the market's ideals are needed from students who shop there.

AAUP supports collective bargaining campaign

By DAVE KOWAL

Members of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) show nearly two-thirds support for the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) campaign for collective bargaining, according to a recent AAUP poll.

Loren Beth, a UMass political science professor, said the MSP defines collective bargaining as, "faculty organization into a unit similar to a labor union, and able to bargain for working conditions, salaries, and other necessities."

Beth said the AAUP had three alternatives: to organize collective bargaining on their own, to support MSP organization of collective bargaining, or to vote "no agent," against collective bargaining.

Beth said, "The advantage of supporting MSP is its affiliation with the Massachusetts Teachers Association, which is a powerful, well organized state agency with full time staff and lobbyists. Therefore, many people believe the MSP would be more effective."

Those arguing for the AAUP, he continued, say it is the only organization which presents only the interests of university professors. The MSP represents public and private schools.

"The AAUP offers a more single minded approach to collective bargaining. Because the AAUP deals only with universities, there are no conflicts of interest," Beth said.

"The question for the UMass AAUP chapter," he added, "is whether it would be better to enter as an alternative or just to support the MSP."

Beth said the collective bargaining campaign, if accepted, will include the basic AAUP principles of academic freedom and tenure.

Under AAUP policy statements adopted in 1940, the teacher is entitled to "full freedom in research and publication," as well as "freedom in the classroom."

Beth said tenure policies are generally based on a seven year probationary period.

"After this period," he added, "it is decided whether the concerned party will become a permanent employee or not. Once tenure is obtained, it is difficult to fire the person, except for special reasons."

The results of the AAUP poll show 59 people in support of the MSP and 31 people against support out of "about 200 people," Beth said.

Forty-one AAUP members voted for AAUP as "a potential bargaining agent," while 48 members voted in opposition.

In response to the question, "Should AAUP refuse to take any active part in a collective bargaining election at this time?" Twelve members voted "yes", while 76 members voted "no".

When asked if AUUP should form a coalition with MSP with their consent (the poll said this would be unlikely), 38 members answered "yes," and 47 members answered "no."

South Vietnam expands defense line

Communists blow up Saigon ammunition

SAIGON [UPI] — South Vietnamese forces yesterday expanded their territory around the battered province capital of Xuan Loc in the sixth day of a battle which may hold the fate of Saigon.

But Communist gunners, striking 14 miles from Saigon, blew up an ammunition dump near the vital Bien Hoa airbase which houses what remains of the South Vietnamese air force.

The explosion, one of several blasts felt in Saigon last night and early today, shook buildings in the capital. There were no immediate reports of casualties or damage at the sprawling, American-built airbase.

Field officers said government troops had enlarged their defense perimeter around Xuan Loc 38 miles northeast of Saigon. But North Vietnamese forces had the devastated city surrounded and rained rocket, mortar and artillery fire on the defenders.

Xuan Loc was vital to the government as a key point on one invasion route to the nation's capital and as a morale boost to a nation hungry for a victory.

The Communists already control 19 of South Vietnam's 44 provinces and two-thirds of its territory.

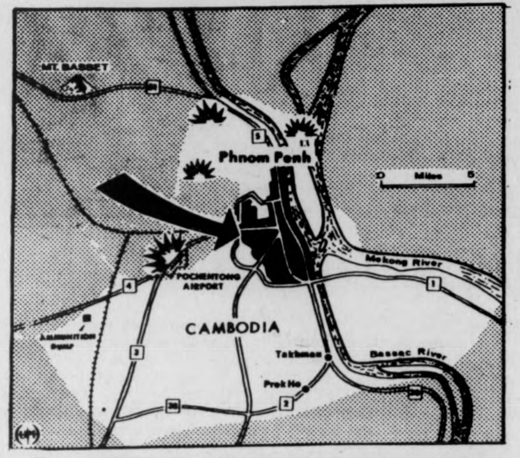
In addition to Saigon itself, the battle for Xuan Loc was important to the defense of Bien Hoa itself. Should Xuan Loc fall, Bien Hoa could be next on the Communist target list in any preparations for an assault on Saigon.

Government commanders at Xuan Loc told UPI correspondent Charles R. Smith the North Vietnamese had pulled back rather than make an all-out attack against the elite paratroop units defending the city.

But the province capital was cut off by land and could be reached only by helicopters. Communist gunfire shot down one A37 Dragonfly jet bomber and endangered scores of government helicopters resupplying South Vietnamese units with food, ammunition and medicine.

Helicopter crewmen also tossed loaves of bread and cases of instant noodles to homeless civilians left behind with only the clothes on their backs. Thousands of the refugees were Roman Catholics who had fled from northernmost Quang Tri Province, now under Communist control.

Nine miles to the west, a force of North Vietnamese soldiers cut vital Highway 1 near Trang Bom and constructed deep bunkers around the area.



Phnom Penh's western defenses crumbled yesterday as the Khmer Rouge entered the Cambodian capital from the west. The fall of the capital seemed imminent. (Story, page 1)

Ford appears to win support for Viet aid

WASHINGTON [UPI] - President Ford apparently won agreement from key senators yesterday for speedy consideration of his emergency requests for military aid to South Vietnam and contingency powers to help in any evacuation.

Sen. Clifford Case, ranking Republican on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee which met with Ford for 90 minutes at the White House, told reporters the panel was working to give President Ford "a degree of discretion" in providing limited military aid to Saigon.

Earlier in the afternoon, Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield told the Senate Democratic caucus that South Vietnam could not expect anymore U.S. aid if it insisted on continuing the fighting rather than seeking to negotiate with the Communists.

Asked if the committee was ruling out President's Ford's request for $722 million in military assistance, Case said: "I would not rule it out if you don't use that high a figure. I think we would allow a degree of discretion for the President.

"There is not a disposition to be stiff-backed on the part of the Congress or over-instence on the part of the President."

Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., told reporters, "I came away with a strong feeling that this is a serious situation which the President and Congress would try to come to agreement on within the time limit set."

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill, who earlier in the day urged the resignation of South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thiew, said the Senate had decided to give top priority to Ford's request for military and humanitarian assistance, plus clear authority to sue U.S. troops to evacuate Americans and possibly South Viitnamese.

"We have decided to move this up, to try to meet his deadline April 19," Percy said.

Indochina developments

Thieu names Cabinet

SAIGON [UPI] - South Vietnam President Nguyen Van Thieu, vowing never to surrender to the Communists, yesterday presented a new 30-man "war government of union" to lead the country in its battle for survival.

Thieu also asked the Communists to return to the negotiating table, but said the talks must be conducted along lines set out in the Paris cease-fire agreement of 1973.

Evacuation plan due

WASHINGTON [UPI] - A State Department official told Congress yesterday a plan would be ready in two days for evacuating what one congressman estimated to be as many as 400,000 South Vietnamese whose lives would be endangered by a Viet Cong victory.

Philip C. Habib, assistant secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs, told a closed session of a House Immigration subcommittee that part of the planning problem was in arranging for other nations to share in the asylum plan for Vietnam evacuees.

Laos body dissolved

VIENTIANE [UPI] - King Savang Vatthana signed a decree yesterday dissolving the Laotian national assembly to pave the way for a new legislature giving equal representation to right-wing members and pro-Communists, Vietiane Radio said.

Prime Minister Prince Souvanna Phouma said a new legislature would be installed within three months in accordance with the constitution.

Brown students strike over proposed budget

Compiled from Wires

Brown University students voted overwhelmingly last night to boycott classes the remainder of the week in protest of the administration's proposed austerity budget.

The students voted 2,956 to 763 to continue their boycott until Saturday when a committee of the Brown Corp. is scheduled to meet on campus to review the budget proposed by Brown President Donald F. Hornig.

Hornig on Sunday rejected virtually all student demands that he restore funding in certain areas of next year's budget directly affecting students.

The Student Coalition, the negotiating body for the students, has demanded that money be restored for financial aid; students services; faculty positions; and programs affecting minorities.

"We've got one big gun and that's all. If we don't use it now we might as well hang it up — we can forget about student input for the next 10 years," Student Government President Tony Affigne said as he called for what the students termed a strike.

"I do want to say that I think our students are doing a very wrong thing," Hornig said on the eve of the action. "I am conscious of the adverse impact that any strike will have on our relations with the community, with our alumni, with our friends. But I think they are doing it with very sincere motives, a deep concern for the university.

"It is a deep concern with issues that we are also very, very deeply concerned with and this is what makes this whole experience very, very painful," he said.

Hornig said the budget cutting is required because the nation's seventh oldest university has been losing $4 million per year "and this plainly can't go on."

"What we are trying to do and what we must do within the next three years is get our feet on the ground. This means cutting $2 million in expenditures right away without impairing the quality of our education," he said.

Students voted to strike by a four to one margin Friday but gave the administration until Sunday evening to respond. The second vote was on whether Hornig's response was acceptable. He rejected virtually all demands for shifting funds.

The students seek budget increases totaling about $350,000 for financial aid, minority programs and admissions and student services.

After the trustees — the Brown University Corp. — meet Saturday, the students planned to consider the budget actions and vote to return to class or continue their protest.

Most faculty members planned to hold classes as usual for interested students but there would be no official discipline for students not showing up.

"The disciplinary action against students really is in the sad form that when you lose a piece of your education, it's lost and very hard to regain," Hornig said.

Dukakis to announce proposals for cutting welfare costs today

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis will announce today his plans for cutting more than $300 million from the welfare budget — a figure larger than the one discussed last week.

The governor discussed the plans with senators at a caucus yesterday morning, and he scheduled similar meetings with members of the House in the afternoon.

Sen. Jack H. Backman, D—Brookline, said Dukakis told the senators that, even with the welfare cuts, he could not promise that increased taxes would not be requested during the fiscal year beginning July 1.

The final plans will exceed the $290 million in welfare cutting options announced by the administration last week, a Dukakis spokesman said, by including some proposals which at the time of the announcement were still under study by the Welfare Department.

One of these proposals would exclude all employable persons under 40 from the $100 million-a-year General Relief program.

It was not clear yesterday that Dukakis had embraced this restriction, and such a change in eligibility standards would require legislative approval.

But Backman said that although Dukakis was not specific in the Senate caucus, "He indicated that there would be a cutback in General Relief, and it might be between the ages of 18 and 40."

Glomer Explorer plans to get at sub again

LONG BEACH, Calif. [AP] - The Glomar Explorer, which reportedly recovered part of a sunken Soviet submarine under a CIA contract last year, plans another excursion into the Pacific later this month, according to a spokesman for the operators of the vessel.

Corbett U. Allen, a vice president of Global Marine, Inc., said Sunday a giant barge, which is supposed to be a key element of the salvage operation, will accompany the deep-sea exploration ship when it sails from Long Beach.

President Ford, according to earlier published reports, had authorized another voyage of the Explorer this summer to complete the salvage attempt and to try to recover nuclear warheads believed aboard. The CIA also wanted to retrieve code books in an attempt to crack the Russian code, the reports said.

There has been no official comment on the matter since the cover of the Glomar Explorer, initially described as a sophisticated ocean mining vessel, was blown by publication of details of last summer's incomplete recovery.

The object of the expedition was a Russian submarine which exploded and sunk off Hawaii in 1968.

Connally takes stand

WASHINGTON [UPI] — John B. Connally emphatically denied at his bribery trial yesterday that he accepted $10,000 to help milk producers win a price support increase in 1971 while he was Treasury secretary.

"I did not," Connally replied to repeated questions from defense attorney Edward Bennett Williams, who put him on the stand after presenting an array of character witnesses including Lady Bird Johnson and evangelist Billy Graham.

Court backs minorities

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The Supreme Couut yesterday let stand a lower court ruling requiring Massachusetts cities and towns to abolish the statewide examination for firefighters and hire more blacks and Chicanos.

The justices refused to hear an appeal by the state civil service director, who said the examination was a reasonable test of probable success as a fireman and that federal law prevented fixing of racial quotas in hiring.

Guerrillas clash

BEIRUT [UPI] - Lebanese troops in armored cars yesterday moved into the Beirut suburb where armed clashes between Palestinian guerrillas and Lebanese rightwing commandos sparked Labanon's worst civil strife in two years.

Estimates of the dead ranged from 22 to 37.

Premier Rashid Solh's government met in emergency session. A general strike shut most shops in Beirut, Sidon and Tripoli, Lebanon's three largest cities.

Abortion laws upheld

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Proposed anti-abortion constitutional amendments would create chaos in the legal system and begin a process of undermining civil rights guarantees, the U.S. Civil Rights Commission said yesterday.

The commission, in a 111-page legal study, called on Congress to reject the proposed amendments and to repeal legislation already on the books that prohibit the use of federal funds for abortion.

will hurt both student programs and academics. A tuition hike is a shabby and disgraceful tactic to raise money without raising taxes.

O'Keefe — I feel Parks 10 per cent budget cut would be disastrous. Massachusetts has never given adequate support to higher education. When cuts do come they are usually made in student programs. The purpose of state schools is supposed to provide low-cost education. Raising tuition would force out the low income people the university is supposed to serve.

Sanderson — The budget cut can do nothing except hurt public higher education...and hurt student programs. I don't feel that an increase in tuition will provide the necessary funds.

Savini — If the 10 per cent cut is held only to administrative costs, it may be the best thing that could happen. However, that doesn't seem possible, and inevitably student programs may be cut. There is no guarantee that a tuition increase would increase monies to the university.

Tata — I am disappointed that the Commonwealth does not pride itself in the existence of its state institutions of higher learning. Rather than request cuts here and allocate monies to the support of private institutions, I believe the primary concern should be the increase in the quality of its own charges.

2. What do you see for the future of UMass?

Beals — If students become unionized, it will be a long-needed recognition of the students' right to be an active part of their educational process. If not, UMass will probably rumble on, cranking out UMies who will make more potential UMies who will do the same damn things their parents did, with the same results.

Ghidotti — For the future of UMass, I see a lot of optimism. This is a high standing state university with many great programs. If only students could better come together, than more could be demanded and therefore more could be attained.

McGrath — What I see for the future of UMass and what I would like to envision for the university are unfortunately, two different things. The trend of traditionalism is rapidly returning to this campus...and the vibrant experimental programs that have developed here are being replaced.

O'Brien — The future of UMass depends on what the students, the faculty and the administration do. Present trends indicate that the quality of education at UMass will deteriorate and the cost will go up sharply This can only happen if we allow it. I hope and believe we can prevent it.

O'Keefe — The future of UMass depends on the students' ability to get it together among themselves and confront the oppressiveness of this competitive structure and system.

Sanderson — The university will continue pretty much the way it has in the past for the next few years until obviously some cuts in student programs or some increases in student fees are instituted. With the advent of a student union and a faculty union, the complexion of the university will change.

Savini — The future of all higher education is somewhat bleak. I think UMass will become more traditional with the classical departments gaining strength, and the more experimental programs losing strength. Student government will probably be dissolved especially if the union comes off.

Tata — With fee increases etc., I see the university as losing its public educational mission by discriminating against low income people.

★Tenants' meeting

The criterion for selecting a balance of residents at Village Park includes marital status, race, number of children and financial status. This selection process, tenants say, is inherently discriminatory. One woman recalled when, at one point last year, approximately ten apartments were vacant. Several applicants were told that Village Park was, "all filled up."

Evidence suggests that both Black and Puerto Rican applicants have been ignored a number of times. In another case, one pregnant single woman who applied a year ago has still not received a reply. It is rumored that one tenant overheard the manager saying, "All children of single mothers are emotionally disturbed."

Tenants in Village Park plan future meetings to discuss the problems of discrimination, poor facilities and the pending rent increase.

Bicentennial group plans Concord rally

By JOSEPH COTTER
Progressive News Service

The Peoples Bicentennial Commission will be holding a meeting tonight at 7:30 p.m. in room 917 Campus Center.

The purpose of the meeting is to co-ordinate people as caravan aids and marshals for the rally at Concord this Friday. Anyone who feels they can devote some time and energy toward making a successful representation from the UMass Campus is asked to attend. People are needed to contribute cars, to make posters and banners and especially to spread the word to the rest of the community. In view of the National Economic situation and particularly the probability of cutbacks in Mass. public education, including this university, there is a need for people to show their support for alternative solutions at every level.

People going to Concord Friday night are advised to bring warm clothes, rain gear, food, water, hot beverage and a ground cloth.

There will be orations from the Revolutionary Era, music and speeches. Pete Seeger, Holly Near, Arlo Guthrie, Richard Dreyfus, Barry Commoner, George Wald and many others will participate in the town meeting and rally. A Declaration of Economic Independence will be read and there will be a calling for a new Continential Congress.

Although the PBC has a permit until 8 a.m. Saturday morning, there will be a break in the rally between 5:30 a.m. and 7 a.m. to allow some of the traditional celebrations to take place. A soup kitchen will be operating at that time until 7 a.m. when the rally will resume.

Everyone is urged to attend as an enormous showing is necessary to convey the gravity of the situation to the rest of the country.

For additional information check WMUA and Collegian as well as other local media. There will be a table this week in the Campus Center or you can contact the Veterans Coalition, room 411, Student Union or call 545-0712.

Field, Somers to debate fee

The Debate Union will present, at 7:30 tonight in the Colonial Lounge, a debate between Dean of Students William Field and Senator Ken Somers on the topic, "Resolved, that if dorm residency becomes optional, a Universal Resource Fee should be instituted."

Debate Coach Tim Hynes will moderate.

demand for a rent rollback in favor of the co-op plan when they were informed last week of another possible rent increase next year.

"The only way we can deal with another rent increase is to take this action," said UMTA spokesperson Karen Forsgard.

"I'm heartily in favor of moving this proposal forward as rapidly as possible," said Gage.

If the legal questions are resolved, Married Student Housing will operate as a co-operative in September. This will end the year long rent dispute which arose over a previous rent increase.

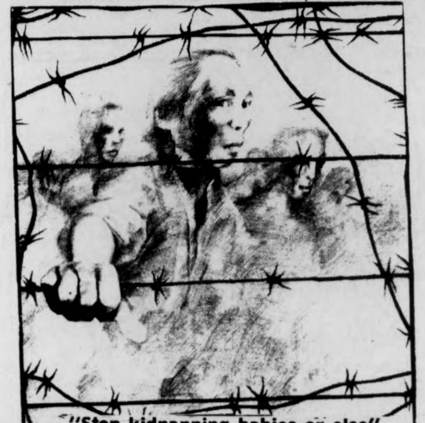
Vietnam: progressively

By CHAKA AMIN

Recently there has been a lot of debate in the Bourgeoisie Media pertaining to humanitarian aid to the peoples of South Vietnam. Part of this humanitarian aid is in the form of air lifting orphans to a "Better" home in America. A good number of these babies were fathered by brothers fighting a war to maintain democracy, are entity which they themselves haven't been fortunate enough to experience in America this so-called cradle of democracy.



"Stop kidnapping babies or else"

The justification for kidnapping these black babies the false assumption that these kids will have a very hard life under the reign of the Revolutionary government of Vietnam, who the media declares to be a racist people.

There are millions of black babies in this country up for adoption who these so-called humanitarian people will not adopt. There are millions of starving babies and little children in this country and there is never any debate pertaining to humanitarians for these babies.

So then there must be some other reasons besides humanitarian efforts for the kidnapping of these babies from Vietnam.

How can a country that spent $150 billion dollars in the destruction of the peoples of Vietnam, talk about humanitarians. How can a country which unleached such devastating B52 bombing of the Vietnamese people utter the word humanitarianism.

How can a country which supports fascist dictatorship all over the world talk about humanitarianism. The peoples of Cambodia were happy self-sufficient people until Hitler in the form of Richard Nixon, invaded their country, destroyed it and now the people are starving.

The news media has convinced the peoples of this country that Hitler is dead. Hitler isn't dead Hitler is alive and kicking in the European minds mentality. Hitler manifested what Europeans have always done to the peoples of color. Look what they did to Africa. Millions of Africans killed, maimed, enslaved, and nations of people rendered living dead.

Vietnam, key for Black struggle in America

By TIM JOHNSON
Black News Service

B.N.S. Editor's Note: The Black News Service has determined that the just struggle of the [VPA] Vietnam People's Army is to be commended for their triumphant victories in bringing peace to Vietnam, thus freeing the World.

Prof. Tran Van Dinh, a veteran of the Vietnamese liberation struggle, spoke at the Malcolm X Culture Center in Southwest, Thurs., April 10, 1975. His topic was "The Vietnamese and the Black Liberation Struggle."

He also shared the platform with Associate Prof. Bill Bricklans, of the W.E.B. DuBois Afro-Am Dept., in discussing "Pan-Africanism" and "Marxism" on Fri., April 11, '75.

Prof. Tran Van Dihn pointed out that the Vietnamese conflict and the repression of the Black community were a pacification campaign waged by the United States government. He proceeded to draw several interesting parallels between the two struggles.

He stated that, 1. "both are undeclared wars;" 2. "each are elements of racism." 3. "Drugs have been introduced to confuse the people." 4. "And the often policy being enforced to cause assimilation of the people :integration)."

Tran asserted that the similarity between the Vietnamese and Black struggles is not an isolated phenomena. These dynamics exist wherever imperialist aggression is confronted by the resistance of the colonized masses.

The discussions Friday were more idealogically oriented. The question posed was whether class or race is the principal contradiction in U.S. society. Both Prof. Dihn and Prof. Strickland stressed the idea that any ideology that is not grounded in the reality of a people, is doomed to failure. They went on to agree that in view of the U.S., racism is the principle outstanding contradiction therein.

This question has polarized the progressive sections of the Black revolutionary movement, causing a recent split in The Black Scholar magazine, and in such organizations as the "African Liberation Support Committee" and others. For these and many other reasons, this is a question that must be studied, theorized, debated, and practiced, until a logical conclusion is reached. Prof. Dihn argued convincingly that new truths can only be arrived at through struggle. Practice and theory are interconnected and indispensable, he explained.

Prof. Strickland defined racism as a system whereby privileges are granted to one group for the exploitation of another group. He continued, class exploitation is defined as a system where one class exploits another, (classes being defined by their relation to the means of production). A principle contradiction is one whose existence and development determines or influences the existence and development of other contradictions within a complex thing, situations, etc.

Both racial and class exploitation are contradictions within U.S. society. Given the above definitions, the questions becomes; will the end of racism, determine the existence or development of class exploitation, or vice versa?

An important point to remember is that the end of these contradictions will not automatically solve the other problems. Those who say that the end of racism would solve the problem of class exploitation of Black people are as mistaken as those who would have us discount our Blackness, and join the forces of the white working class in their mystical "historic mission", agreed the speakers.

Black people must organize and fight in the Black community against racism and class exploitation, with the realization that in the final analysis, our success depends on what happens in U.S. society as a whole. Self-determination for Black people will never be a reality in capitalist America. Only in a "socialist" America does this possibility exist.

The Black Panther Party explained these dynamics in their position on "Liberation in the Black Colony; Revolution in the Mother Country," and their analysis still holds true.

There must be struggle from both places. It is very possible that Black people, fighting in the Black community, could promote destruction on the whole country. However, revolution is not only about destruction, but its reconstruction and the creation of a new order.

Cutbacks, Cutbacks, Cutbacks

By JAMES LEAS

Jerry Ford is sitting on a huge pile of money. He is currently wasting 61 per cent of the Federal budget on the military. He is, in effect, asking us to make sacrifices so that he can continue those expenditures. We totally refuse. This university needs those funds. The unemployed need those funds. All the social services currently being cut back need those funds. We are not going to watch silently as the university gets axed while the military budget grows.

On the state level the hypocrisy is also intense. In a year of huge corporate super profits never previously achieved, the state government is refusing to tax the corporations to pay the bills for education. In fact the Governor is proposing even lower taxes for the corporations. This government is squarely on the side of big business — the same big business that has caused massive unemployment of 11 per cent in this state. The same big business whose racist practices account for the fact that unemployment among black youth is near 50 per cent. Business corporations benefit directly from educational institutions and they should be made to pay.

The government and administration can deal with us as individual students. They can stand us in long lines and put us through red tape and then callously push us onto unemployment lines. But, together, as a massive social force, we can't be brushed off. That is why a RALLY is scheduled for TUESDAY, APRIL 15 at 1 p.m. on the Student Union steps. We need to mobilize our forces to defend the quality of education we have now.

The government is gearing up its immense power and political trickery to shove these cutbacks down our throats. We can't stop them individually. We can't stop them by lobbying. Reasoned arguements, negotiations, meetings with the Governor have been tried and they are not enough. We are dealing with people who won't listen to the most eloquent and convincing points unless we have some muscle to back them up. What's needed is for students and faculty to mobilize the only power we have — the power we hold in our numbers. Through joint, united, massive, political action as an organized force we can make this government back down.

The rally Tuesday is a first step. We will continue with a program of rallies, demonstrations, teach-ins, and picketlines against the cutbacks. By organizing massive actions by confronting the state and federal governments en masse, by exposing for what it is the lie that there isn't enough money, by using this university as a base to reach out to the people of Massachusetts, we can win.

Our actions will set an example for the unemployed and all those people victimized by the current economic crisis. We are setting an example of how to mobilize and combat the cutbacks in education, social services, in welfare benefits and in unemployment support. The threat of mushrooming public outcry against their policies will add to the pressure on the legislature and on Congress.

To wage an effective fight against the cutbacks will require resources. Essential is the active participation and leadership by the student governments, the Faculty Senate, the area governments, campus organizations and departments. The Daily Collegian should expand its coverage of student and faculty opposition to the cutbacks. Funds, printing facilities, mailings to parents and other interested citizens around the state will be necessary to wage the campaign.

Through the course of this movement decisions should be made democratically by the broadest possible participation of individuals and campus organizations. Now is the time to unit. Let's make some noise against these cutbacks. All out on the steps of the Student Union this Tuesday!

After long silence — 200 years

"The American War is over, but this is far from the case with the American Revolution. On the contrary, only the first act of the great drama is at a close." Benjamin Rush 1789 member of Continental Congress. Called for abolition of slavery.

If the Patriots were alive today, they'd be raising all kinds of Hell!

While inflation continues to chip away at whatever security most Americans felt they had, rapidly expanding unemployment is casting more and more workers into a "poverty level" existence. For the poor, the coming depression portends disaster as deficit-trimming politicians zero-in on "social service" budgets. As if that weren't enough, there are deep and dangerous divisions among those who should be uniting in the face of this crisis. In Boston, people who feel that they are losing control over their lives are coming into conflict with those who never had it.

All this at a time when America is entering the "Bicentennial Era." Where do we find ourselves 200 years after the American Revolution? Of what relevance is it in our lives today?

The Bicentennial is going to bring a massive corporate-financed campaign to sell us their version of American History. In addition, it is quickly becoming a meaningless and self-congratulatory orgy of profiteering corporations hawking their "1776 Bread" (ITT Continental), their Bicentennial Realty Exposition (in Boston) and the plastic-laminated, imitation-wood Bicentennial Toilet Seat.

The American Revolution is as relevant as we choose to make it. The principles of democracy, equality, government of, by, for and by the consent of the people have yet to be put into practice. Yet they remain the basis for movements for economic, social and political change in our day.

The People's Bicentennial Commission believes that these principles should be the explicit foundation for political organizing in this country. The history of our people must provide both justification and motivation for contemporary action.

Since 1971, PBC has been involved in developing a broad educational and social action campaign. We are reaching into "middle America" with the word that the American Revolution was more than a series of battles carried on by figures of mythological proportions. It was a movement of the people. Before a shot was fired, there was a decade of protests, boycotts, rallies and riots. The Sons of Liberty in Boston were mostly unemployed sailors, artisans, indentured servants and free blacks. Tom Paine was a corsett-maker, Sam Adams a bankrupt brewer.

200 years ago, the monarchy and its wealthy supporters were the sources of oppression. Today it is the giant corporation. The power concentrated in a few hands through the corporate system makes King George look like a petty tyrant. It is self-evident. They are unrepresentative of, unelected by and unresponsive to the people. They do not govern by our consent. They are the cause of our misfortune and our divisions, and they profit from them. They use us to protect their interests.

As John Taylor, one of Alexander Hamilton's main opponents, said: "It is said that paper systems, being open to all, are not monopolies. He who has money may buy stock. All then is fair, as every man (meaning every monied man) may share in the plunder. Every man may enlist in an army, yet an army may enslave a nation."

Rally against cutbacks on Student Union steps today from 1 to 3 p.m.

Today, 200 years after the establishment of principle (if not the fact) of political democracy, it is far past time to extend democracy to our economic institutions.

Across the country, PBC has been bringing this theme into focus. Our literature speaks directly to this need. Local PBCs have been involved not only in educational activities, they have engaged in direct action against oil companies, banks, corporations colonizing Puerto Rico, etc.

April 19 is the 200th anniversary of the battles of Concord and Lexington — "the shots heard 'round the world." PBC will be conducting a rally at the North Bridge in Concord (where the red-coats were turned back). The theme is "Send a Message to Wall Street." There will be mid-night rides, oratory and music. We will be reading a Declaration of Economic Independence. We encourage all to join us there, to support the call for Economic Democracy.

Recognizing the urgent need for unity, we will soon be issuing a call for the convening of a new Continental Congress. The purpose of this is to bring together all of the various groups and individuals who are opposing the present corporate system in all of its manifestations, those who are working towards alternatives to it. The Congress will first revolve around issues and then will meet as a whole to consider a basic statement of principles, goals and grievances. It will be held around Thanksgiving of this year in Washington.

For these and other projects, PBC needs your ideas, your help and your money (if you have it). We need to be in contact with as many organizations and individuals as possible. For more information contact us at 490 Beacon St., Boston, Mass. 02115, (617) 247-1851.

In the words of Ben Franklin, "We must all hang together, or most assuredly, we shall all hang separately."

And it is written in the Great Book, that "the United States shall never lose a War, be it an incursion, or an invasion of the Greatest Proportions ... " Book Three Verse 11. And for hundreds of years, the Great Priests and Ministers of our State have been very pious in the observance of this great decree. For thousands of seasons, our Priests have celebrated in the glory that is the military might of this nation, beating our plowshares into guns, and our pruning hooks into Phantom Jets.

One of the holiest and most righteous of the Great Priests was the saintly Theodore Roosevelt who added his sacred interpretation: "Walk Softly and Carry a Big STICK." Yea and verily was this Big Stick continued in the hands of many Great Priests who ascended after Him. Harry Truman used it in Korea. Lyndon Johnson valued it and Richard Nixon fashioned it into a great Golden Idol and worshipped it diligently.

And the Cult of the Big Stick lingers on. High Priest Gerald Ford is a devout disciple along with Great Minister of Might-Is-Right — Henry Kissinger. Together they pray religiously and endeavor to lead the life of a good Stickist, as it is written in the Great Book.

The greatest story ever sold

But those of the Stickish persuasion are being persecuted. They are being persecuted overseas, and they are being persecuted in their own homeland. Overseas those enemies that the Stickish have tried in vain to proselitize have risen up, thrown off their yoke, and are preparing to hurl the Stickish, and those who do the Stickish work, into the Sea. For the unholy Cambodians, and the infidel North Vietnamese are battling the Holy Stickish Legions and mercilessly destroying them.

And things are not well in the homeland. Hordes of infidel Warhaters gather in the streets and shout tumultuous cries of Peace. For Peace is their unholy symbol and they perform unclean dances and earthly rituals to it.

The Peaceniks have risen and taken control of the Great Temple and threaten to beat out all the Stickish. They have taken the gold and silver away from the Stickish and have called them hateful names and evil slanders. They have hounded the Stickish away from some of their strongholds, and dragged them through the streets. It is a black time for the Stickish.

But the High Priest and Great Minister stand true to their faith. They do not budge. They endure all the wrath and mockery of a nation befallen into the hands of the Peaceniks. They undergo all forms of torture and deprivation with gritted teeth and hardened minds. The High Priest and Great Minister continue to arm their Missionaries with Great Bombs and Everlasting Missiles, in order to hold off the infidels until the Angel of Death doth beckon. No Man Of The Stick will dare give in until he hath breathed no more. For even though the legions of Stickish Missionaries are being hurled aside by the enemy, and are being threatened with a fatal deprivation by the Peacenik movement, Our High Priests and Minister remain holy to the end, firm in the belief that God is on their side.

GOD BLESS US ALL!!!!

"I THINK IT'S TIME TO TOSS IN THE TOWEL, GERRY!"

Ellen Gavin

Who is the orphan?

By ELLEN GAVIN

"It's nice to see you Americans are taking home souvenirs of our country as you leave — china elephants and orphans. Too bad some of them broke today, but we have plenty more."

This remark was that of a South Vietnamese Army Lieutenant as reported in the New York Times on the day after the plane crash which killed a hundred Vietnamese orphans. Even though he is coming from a different place, his bitterness strikes a chord deep within me. For him, bitterness arises out of the realization that an erstwhile ally, with its high ideals and almighty facade is rapidly reducing its links to his collapsing country. For me the bitterness arises out of my being a daughter of America — a misguided nation of superficial people, ruled from above by numb, self-motivated, arrogant men. A land where true human feeling is short-circuited by the television sets which damage our psyches by allowing us to experience the tragedy of Vietnam, ring-around the collar, a collapsing economy, and happy endings all in a fragmented one hour time slot. America — where emotions are so crippled, and reactions so short-sighted that "look at the cute little babies, I'd love to take one home" is the typical response to the mass evacuation of thousands of confused, frightened VIETNAMESE children.

The children of a country which ours destroyed with napalm. The children whom Calley gunned down in cold blood. The children who we calmly watched every night on our T.V., weeping for their mothers, their fathers, their brothers and sisters. The children who deserve to play in the Vietnamese fields that are not glutted with mines, to run and play games that children play on lazy summer afternoons — without fear of napalm and B52's.

But what do my countrymen and women do? In a flood of sentimental response, tainted by a something resembling crass consumerism, the desire to adopt Vietnamese babies is a national fad. "Yes, I'd love one," giggles Betty Ford, "but Jerry thinks we have too many kids already." And Hugh Hefner sends his Super Playboy jet to pick up a load, "with genuine American bunnies to cuddle them on the way home."

"We always wanted a son," says Mrs. Moritz to the N.Y. Times, "and now we have Tom." And Nguyen Thi Thu Cuc becomes Kathleen Marie Flanigan, filling the gap that another American family had for a little girl; they couldn't get an American child through the usual channels. Am I sounding too cynical, or are their reasons too selfish, too simple, too horrifying in the wake of a devastating human tragedy?

As these children grow, who will teach them who they are, why they are here? Who will explain to them why their homeland was ravaged? When the day of their arrival is recounted, who will tell them of how American corporative executives, driven to the airport in their Mercedes-Benz and Peugots made their Vietnamese servants pack their endless baggage including tennis rackets, only to leave them behind?

'Yes, I'd love one,' giggles Betty Ford, 'but Jerry thinks we have too many kids already.'

A few parents, those who truly understand the implications of the Vietnam horror will tell it like it was. But I'm afraid the American cover - it - up - and - will - go - away mentality will prevail. We will have a new national minority searching through the rubble to find their roots in oppression.

Dr. Lucien Pye reacting to the American response to Operation Babylift said recently, "What strikes me is this amazing psychological phenomenon, this outburst. The guilty feeling is very deep, cutting across hawk and dove alike. We want to know that we are still good — still decent. Who is the orphan?"

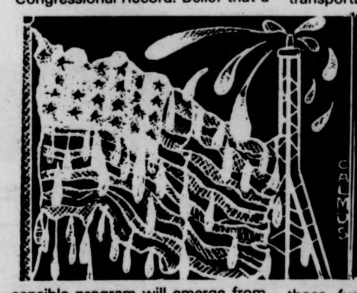
Nationalization -- now or never!



Commentary on energy

by Gregg Wilson

As the domestic economic situation deteriorates, further concern has arisen here over the future of America's energy policy. Petroleum, our main energy source, is subject to the unscrupulous dealings of the giant oil corporations and the volatile policies of Middle Eastern governments. The Federal Energy Office is about to institute court proceedings against some of the oil producers for overcharging electric utilities during last year's crisis. Overseas, Iran recently announced that it may soon discontinue accepting the inflated U.S. dollar in exchange for the precious resource.

The formulation of a national energy policy, like so many other unsolved problems of the past decade, has fallen victim to the ravages of Indochina. Once again the American public has been besieged by images, portrayed through the Administration and network T.V. of fallen dominoes, swarming Communist invaders and the plight of refugees. Energy, the topic of so many fiery debates just a few months back, has slowly faded into the background.

When this column was begun at the start of the semester it was this writer's belief that energy policies, proposals and innovations would emerge in a constant stream, so as to provide ideas for interesting and controversial articles. Yet in looking back it has been anything but that. No brash or startling ideas have surfaced. What did emerge has fostered an extremely cynical attitude on my part. The best conclusion I can draw from the recommendations that have come forth is that they are explicit in their intention of protecting the status quo.

Sure, every once in a while you hear that the "Democratic Study Group" has just formulated an all encompassing plan, but in the long run these ideas will become insignificant entries into the Congressional Record. Belief that a sensible program will emerge from our policymakers on Capitol Hill ignores the real factor behind all their policymaking, the protection of corporate interests.

It is the oil companies that hold the upper-hand on all energy decisions. Unbelievably, despite last year's oil emergency, the only information government policymakers have about oil reserves, production, refining, transportation and retailing are those furnished by the industry. The nation's energy problems stem not only from dependence on insecure and exhaustable supplies, but from their control in private hands. If we are ever to arrive at an energy solution the control the corporations influence must be relinquished.

Last week, the British government made such a move. They proposed the establishment of a government oil "cooperation to drill, refine, and distribute rich oil deposits recently discovered in the North Sea. A similar action here would be a sensible step towards a worthwhile energy policy.

The times demand a change. The oil companies influence on the economic and political atmosphere of this country has grown out of hand. An indictment is forthcoming against the producers for overcharging utilities during last winter's shortage of oil. It prompted the use by utilities of the "fuel adjustment clause" to further tax the consumers' wallet. Also in the past month, officials of the Shell and Phillips oil corporations were indicted on charges of campaign contribution violations. During the 60's, Shell maintained a secret fund, reported to be in the vicinity of 10 million dollars, to finance campaigns of Congressmen sympathetic to their needs, the same lawmakers who will dictate our future energy priorities.

The discovery of oil in the frontier areas of the outer-continental shelf provides an excellent opportunity to establish a national oil company. Environmental concerns would also be considered in a more sympathetic manner than the treatment they receive from private companies. Greater governmental control can only enhance our welfare and security in the future.

It's frustrating and disheartening to perform this show before a basically empty house. A play is a mere rehearsal without an audience. We need your support otherwise the efforts made by the faculty and theatre students are fruitless.

Back to the barracks

To the Editor:

The Veterans Coalition is amused rather than distressed with the prospect of being forced to live in dormitories next year. At the April 2 meeting of the Board of Trustees, Dr. Gage was confronted with the question. At that time he categorically denied that the matter was being considered, or would be considered.

It is ridiculous for the administration to contemplate such an act; vets have been forced to live in barracks [without an alternative lifestyle] during their years of service, and refuse to be re-incarcerated to barracks life while at the University. This matter is ill-conceived, absurd, and unacceptable!

To the Editor:

I was bothered that a front page article on discrimination against women chose to conclude with the statement that waitresses had been asked out by managers. The follow-up article was even more odd. Asking a woman out is far from "atrocious behavior." It indicates an interest, an acceptance, not a lack of respect. Granted, a balance between professional and personal relationships is often awkward, but this seems a far more acceptable approach to one's personal contacts than a club scene or other forced extensions of contact. Perhaps individual personalities make this situation uncomfortable at the Campus Center, but that doesn't make this into an example of discrimination or oppression.

It is difficult, instituting a system of justice or fairness. Those in power would like to remain so. Those out of power use distortion and exaggeration as means of improving their state. We cannot expect equality, for none of us are equal in our abilities or our needs; and we cannot, ultimately, rely on quotas or statistical balances, as these would lead to individual injustices. Any eventual system of justice would rely on individual rationality and common sense. The over reactive approach shown by Ms. Gavin is, however, the basic stuff of which discrimination is born.

Ticket, towing or both?

To the Editor:

My car was towed last week from the Orchard Hill parking lot. I admit I was parking there without the correct sticker and I suppose I fully deserved the $10.00 parking ticket. However, why was I towed all the way to North Amherst with an additional $18.00 fee?

I was in no way blocking an entrance or another vehicle. In Lot 23, where my car was towed from, there were easily 30 more spaces, so I wasn't preventing others from using the lot. Being practical, the ticket would have been enough, the tow was quite unnecessary.

Is there something "going on" between the UMass authorities and Amherst Towing? I suggest the administration take some initiative to make sure that the cars being towed are really causing a safety problem. The students have had enough of this shit.

A correction

To the Editor:

This is to correct a misstatement carried in the April 10 issue of the Collegian announcing Roger Moody's speech that day on the situation in southwest Africa. Neither the Collegian nor Moody was responsible for the comment that he had "recently returned from Namibia." He had not and said so during the session. I am sorry to have misconstrued information on Moody's background which I received in a phone conversation with a friend of his and to have passed that information on to the Collegian.

Locked out?

To the Editor:

As one of the approximately 8000 commuters, I find dissatisfaction with the current Commuter Assembly policy of assigning the approximately 150 commuter lockers located near the Hatch out to students without: 1] attempting to notify at least the majority of the commuters that such lockers exist, 2] assigning them after school has begun so that the majority of commuters will be here and have a chance at them, 3] trying to assign more than one person to each locker until more lockers are put in.

My discussions with the paid staff persons and president of the Commuter Assembly made it clear to me that 1] their friends have lockers, 2] they wanted me to wait till next semester to write to the Collegian.

Veteran's affairs opens nights

Evening office hours have been established recently to assist veterans. The evening office will be located in Rm. 100, Hills House North in the Division of Continuing Education on Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 5-7 p.m.

"Many students who work days would have to take time from work if they needed help from the Veterans' Affairs Office", stated Stephanie Bourbonnais, assistant director of Veterans' Affairs. "Hopefully, evening hours will provide more accessibility for these students", added Bourbonnais.

Rich Quinlan, a member of the Veterans' Coalition, and an evening office staffer commented, "This service will of course be available to full-time day students as well as evening part-time students."

Veterans discharged between April 3, 1970 and August 1, 1974 may also be eligible for up to five years of non-renewable term insurance from the Veterans' Administration. Veterans' who have been discharged after August 1, have 120 days to apply after their separation from service. Interested vets should contact Paul Neville, a veteran representative at 5-1346, or at the Veterans' Affairs Office, 239 Whitmore

Print dealer to speak

William Struve, private dealer in contemporary American graphics, will be the speaker at an open meeting of the seminar History of Graphic Arts at the Smith College Museum of Art today. The seminar will meet at 3 p.m. in the Print Room, where a selection of contemporary prints from the Museum's collection will be on exhibition to illustrate Struve's discussion of Some Contemporary Printmakers.

The exhibition, which concentrates on works of the last decade, was selected and hung by Carmen Aleman, Kit Fitzgerald and Filippa Marullo, all students in the seminar, under the direction of Professor of Art and Curator of Prints and Drawings Elizabeth Mongan. It features works by Andy Warhol, Robert Motherwell, Louise Nevelson, Helen Frankenthaler, Jasper Johns, Robert Rauschenberg, and many other outstanding American artists involved in the graphic arts.

The seminar is open to the public without charge.

14th century music recital Wednesday

Collegium Musicum: Music of the 14th Century will be presented by the University of Massachusetts Department of Music on Wednesday, in the Recital Hall at 8 p.m. The program which includes works by Landini, Cordier, and De Vitry will be directed by Dr. Wayne Abercrombie and Dr. Charles Lehrer. A featured piece will be The Mass of Tournai, performed with full accompaniment.

The recital will capture and relive all the color and sparkle which is so characteristic of 14th century music. A collection of ballads, rondeaus and sacred and secular music will be played on such authentic 14th century instruments as the recorder, Krummhorn, cornetto and sackbut in much the same way that they were some 600 years ago.

The 14th century was a very complex time period musically. Composers sought mathematical relationships in music. There was a flair for the eccentric and the intricate. The writers of the day were employed by the noblemen and clergymen to write musical selections either for enjoyment or for a special Mass or ceremony. The composers of the presented works in the Collegium Musicum are representative of the best of the 14th century music writers. They were the writers of the "Hit Songs".

During the time when this music was written, musicians who wanted their works to be heard sought to have them presented as part of the Ordinary of the Mass, which was then the main vehicle for music to be heard by people. Up until this time the Proper of the Mass was the principle musical stage. This change in presentation marks one of the characteristics of the music of the 14th century. Songs for the Ordinary were written in vernacular. Likewise the Collegium Musicum will be in the Latin, French and Italian languages.

This recital of music of the 14th Century provides an excellent opportunity for the general audience to enjoy some of the most pleasurable compositions written in the musical past. The presentation is open to the public without charge.

Credit Union to sell food stamps

The UMass Student Federal Credit Union is pleased to announce that it will now be able to sell Food Stamps to all eligible persons. Food Stamps will be on sale every Tuesday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in Room 166 of the Campus Center.

Students and other persons eligible for membership in the Student Credit Union are reminded that this program is a service to everyone. The sale of food stamps also generates income for your credit union. Profits are paid back to members in the form of dividends.

County Committee to assign plots

The Hampshire County Garden Committee will hold its second public meeting today at 7:30 p.m. in the Little Theater of Northampton High School.

The Committee is presently administering assignments of some 200 potential garden plots to any Hampshire County residents willing to farm the land this Spring.

According to Vickie Phillips, chairwoman of the Committee, the agenda will include the designation of final plot assignments, a presentation of technical data on garden preparation by John Howell of the Agricultural Extension Service, and a discussion on seed-buying.

All Hampshire County residents interested in gardening to cut down on food bills are invited to attend Tuesday's meeting. People interested in obtaining further information about the garden project may contact Phillips at 586-2762 or John Lawlor at the County Commissioners Office, 584-0557.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, April 15 — Born today, you have an exceptionally acute sense of the dramatic. You know precisely when and where to accent a word or a deed so as to gain from it the maximum effect. You know where your benefits lie and how to make even the most mundane of situations or circumstances yield them up. In addition you are an excellent judge of character and know in a moment the kind of individual you are dealing with. Even so, you do not allow your immediate judgments to color your views; you are always willing -- on the off chance that you might be wrong -- to wait and see.

Although somewhat given to melancholy, you have learned the importance of not giving in to disappointment when failure strikes. Therefore, though as a youngster you may at times brood over things, as an adult you will be ready and eager to being again on any project falling short of success. You carry this attitude into your personal relationships also, never allowing one to fail without a considerable effort to reverse the tendency.

Basically an idealist, you expect a great deal from life. But you also expect to give a great deal in the interest of making life really worth living. You are artistic in feeling, though you may not have been gifted in the practical sense. Thus, though you may never be able to paint or write or compose on your own, you may well spend time, money and effort furthering the careers of those who can.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Wednesday, April 16

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Personal interests are to be followed up without delay. Insist upon an opportunity to study the facts and figures necessary to your progress.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Take advantage of an opportunity for an increase in income.

You may have to persuade another of your seriousness, as well as of your ability.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Only if you are willing to put time, energy, and enthusiasm into an ambitious endeavor will you be able to rise to the top — eventually! Begin now.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — This is no time to turn your back on another's need. The favor you do another at this time will be returned at a time when you most need it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Where domestic issues are concerned, be sympathetic. Loved ones look to you for advice; don't turn a deaf ear. Youngsters bring joy at evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Make today's demonstration of your ability a good one. Results rather than promises are what count today; remember this in the afternoon and evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Unless you have also changed your ultimate goal, you would do well to think twice before changing your method of operation. Time is on your side.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take a rest from complicated affairs of the morning. You may become confused if you insist upon keeping up your present fast pace.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — If you take the time you need to get away from the present scene so as to replenish your spirits and your enthusiasm, all will be well by evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Reason joins with intuition today in the interests of several business operations. Good judgment pays off handsomely by evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Take care that your enjoyment of new operations on the employment scene doesn't cause you to become so distracted that you fail to exercise caution.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Though you may seem to be moving slowly, you are actually ahead of the game at this time. Use some time today to refresh your memory.

School of Ed lists flexible curriculum

Listed below are Education Learning Experiences that are now available under the School of Education's Flexible Curriculum. The purpose of the Flexible Curriculum is to provide alternative choices when developing a program of studies. By maintaining a modified record-keeping and scheduling system within the School of Education, which supplements the University's system, it is possible to have courses which break away from the three-credit, full semester standard. Registration is in Room 151 Hills South. For additional information call the Flexible Curriculum Office, 151 Hills South (5-1557) or Academic Affairs Office, 123 School of Education (5-0236).

Bosox face Yanks today

NEW YORK [AP] — The Boston Red Sox welcomed a break in the American League schedule Monday after winning two of three games from the mighty Orioles in Baltimore.

The Red Sox needed the break after defeating the Orioles in two extra-inning marathon games before dropping the series finale 11-3 Sunday.

The team flew to New York for a two-game series with the Yankees Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons. Boston has a 3-2 record, tied with Detroit and Milwaukee for the East Division lead. The Yankees have won only one of their first five starts and are last, two games behind.

Southpaw Bill Lee, who lost his initial start against Milwaukee in Boston last Wednesday, was nemd to open the New York series. The Yankees plan to counter with millionaire right-hander Catfish Hunter, a loser in his first start against Detroit.

The pitching also is lined up for Wednesday's game. Boston's Rick Wise, who pitched nine impressive innings Friday at Baltimore, is listed to start against New York right-hander Pat Dobson.

Despite the clobbering in the Baltimore finale, Manager Darrell Johnson had no complaints as the Red Sox flew to New York. He would settle for two out of three from the Orioles all season.

Ace Luis Tiant and reliever Dick Pole were tagged for 15 hits by the orioles, but Johnson shrugged off the performances.

"It was one of those days," Johnson said. "They hit some balls hard for hits and they hit some bloopers for hits. It seemed that everything they hit fell in."

Knicks grab Brave's GM

NEW YORK [UPI] — — Eddie Donovan returns as General Manager of the New York Knicks Tuesday and one of his first priorities is the securing of another Dave DeBusschere or at the very least another Bob McAdoo.

The Knicks called a noon news conference to announce that Coach Red Holzman no longer will carry the duel role as New York GM. That job now goes to Donovan, who worked miracles at building both New York and Buffalo into title contenders from league doormats.

The remarkable deal that brought DeBusschere from Detroit resulted in NBA championships for New York in 1970 and 1973. When Donovan moved to Buffalo, his talent scout computer flashed "must" for McAdoo, a star at North Carolina applying to the league as a hardship case.

Donovan's contract as Buffalo GM expired April 1, but 10 days earlier he informed the Braves to forget about him for next season. At the time Donovan said he had no immediate plans for his future. However, in the last 10 days speculation centered on the Knicks as Eddie's next base after reports Red Holzman would relinquish his GM job and concentrate on coaching.

RALLY TODAY AGAINST BUDGET CUTS at the STUDENT UNION 1 p.m.

Today the Coalition for a People's Budget is holding a rally on the steps of the Student Union to protest the proposed cuts in the UMass budget. Given the present distribution of power at the University, such cuts would primarily affect us, the students. Special programs, human services, faculty-student ratio, financial aid, assistantships, student jobs — all will suffer.

The Student Organizing Project joins the Coalition, the Student Senate, and other groups in opposing budget cuts for the University. We urge you to attend the rally today as a demonstration of your concern.

After the rally, your active participation is needed. Over the next three weeks, the SOP in cooperation with many other campus organizations, will be canvasing all students. We will be asking questions about what the concerns are. Proposed budget cuts? Increasing tuition? Fee and rent hikes? Mandatory housing? Academics? Quality of life on campus? We will distribute background information on all of these issues.

And we will also be explaining the idea of a student union and of student collective bargaining. A petition will be available for you to sign if you want to join other students in supporting student unionization and petitioning the Board of Trustees to recognize our right to collective bargaining.

We need your help for this canvas and petition drive to be a success. Please call 5-2416 or 5-2415 and volunteer to help canvas your living area or department.

Sprinter Beland hopes to rebound

By JAY LUPPOLD

Senior Tommy Beland is out to leap tall buildings at a single bound, halt onrushing locomotives, and to be an integral cog in the New England champion UMass spring track team machine.

This spring is the time for UMass to stave off the rest of New England as defending champs. And for tri-captian Tom Beland it will be the spring for an overall rebound performance from a disappointing 1974 spring campaign that saw the 5'8" - 155 lb. sprinter not even qualify for the New Englands' after placing 5th and 4th in the 220 yard dash in his freshman and sophomore seasons, respectively.

"I was in the best shape I had ever been in when the season started last year, but as the season rolled along and the New Englands came up I realized that I had burnt myself out and just didn't have anything left", explained Beland, who at times has been referred to as "the smallest sprinter in New England."

Beland, once a member of the Student Senate, competes in the 440 yd. relay and the 220 yd. dash and has been a tri-captain since last spring. In 1973 he ran first position on the 440 yd. relay team that set the UMass record. And as a freshman he set the 300 yd. indoor record for first year sprinters.

Running track four years at UMass has been a learning experience in itself for the physical education major who has aspirations of getting into teaching and coaching the sport. "Just from running track up here I have learned so much about it and realized that being a track coach isn't as easy as I had thought. Coaches O'Brien and Mike Muska (asst.) have really set an example for the whole team and myself", Beland explained.

Beland, from the fair city of Lowell, Mass., had a shining career in Class A high school competition where he captained the winter, spring and cross country teams. He was the Most Valuable Track Athlete in Lowell in 1970 and 1971 and he won the Class A 440 yd. dash as a senior.

Beland related an interesting outlook on the season that he claims he picked up from Coach O'Brien. "We don't go out to lose the smaller meets (Yankee Conference), but peeking at the NE's is always in the back of our minds. We still go all out at the meets but at the same time we are relaxing and getting ready for the New Englands. You don't want to burn yourself out by the time the New Englands come up", he pointed out. One thing for certain, the compact Beland has realized how to learn from previous mistakes (i.e. last spring).

Tri-captain Beland can almost see the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow for this season. "I really believe this year's team will be better than last year", he said, "we have five great sprinters (Tony Pendleton, Joe Martens, Larry Whitfield, Skip Cobb and Beland) and some of the best distancemen and jumpers in New England", he added.

Women gymnasts were strong despite losing star performers

By BILL DOYLE

Last year the UMass women's gymnastics team finished third in the nation and then lost top gymnasts such as Anne Vexler, Betsy East, Margie Combs, and Heidi Armstrong to graduation. Jodi Hitt also did not return this year to the team.

Of course the women gymnasts did even better this season despite the loss of five strong performers, finishing second in the nation. This year the team loses Jeannine Burger, Gail Hannan, and Marian Kulick to graduation. Another gymnast, exchange student Ann Olson, is leaving the team also to go back to Oregon.

Whether the team can again compensate for the loss of the departing gymnasts is unknown. Coach Virginia Evans said that she thinks the team can.

She stressed the fact that Burger and Kulick were the team's co-captains and that both of them along with Hannan helped the team for four years when it needed it most. Evans also said that Ann Olson would also be missed but that the team's strong point, its depth, would still be intact.

"We were inexperienced this year," Evans said, "but our depth compensated for it."

Susan Cantwell, the team's best all-arounder for most of the season, will be back as will Cheryl Smith, whom Evans cited as the most improved gymnast on the team.

"Her first scores of the year were 8.25 in vaulting, 8.15 on beam, and 8.25 in the floor exercise," Evans said. She finished the season by scoring a 9.0 in vaulting, an 8.9 on beam, and an 8.9 on floor."

Evans said that Smith would try competing in the all-arounds next season. She didn't compete on the uneven bars this year.

Big things are expected from Margie Magraw in the future, Evans said. Magraw had an up and down year because of injuries, Evans explained.

Two gymnasts who are presently injured, Pam Steckroat and Alicia Goode, are being counted on for next year also.

Steckroat is out for two months with a compressed fracture of the vertebrate and Goode suffered a partial dislocation of her elbow during spring break but she still competed in the nationals unaware of the injury.

Evans said that all Debbie Law needed "was a little polish" and she would be one of the team's best on floor and bars. Evans said she was expecting a lot from Keeley O'Rourke also.

"I anticipate her putting it all together next year," Evans said of the freshwoman all-arounder.

GYM GEMS: The highest score of the season in any event was Cantwell's 9.25 on the beam against Towson. Only Cantwell and Burger broke in to the 9's during the regular season but Evans said that the team probably had more scores in the high 8's than any other team that she's coached.

Celts cop

BOSTON [UPI] — John Havlicek scored 30 points to lead seven Boston Players in double figures Monday Night as the Boston Celtics beat the Houston Rockets 123-106 in the opening game of their NBA quarterfinal series.

The Celtics, ahead by five points, 53-48, with 1:50 remaining in the half, outscored the Rockets 24-8 through 6:34 of the third period to win the game at Boston Garden. It gave the defending NBA champs a 1-0 lead in the best of seven series.

Jo Jo White added 24 points to the Boston assault, while Rudy Tomjanovich led Houston with 30 points.

It's quiz time again

"The only loser when it comes to intramurals is the non-participant" — Ted Schmitt, Director of Intramural Activities.

If someone walked up to you and asked you to tell them the history of the intramural program here at UMass, wouldn't you be stumped? This quiz is designed to help you out if such a situation should ever arise. Grade yourself, and no cheating. Looking over your neighbor's shoulder will result in your paper being taken away, and you will receive a zero (no, I don't mean a new roommate). In each case, choose the most correct answer.

A. Intramurals began here: 1. before World War I 2. before W.W. II 3. before W.W. III 4. before most of us were even conceived.

B. At the time, UMass was 1. located in Rockland, Mass. 2. located in Rockland, Maine. 3. not located in a specific spot. 4. known as Mass. Aggie.

C. As the 1st state supported school, people wondered: 1. If Aggie students could compete with Harvard students on the sports level. 2. where to build the Bluewall. 3. If UMass would be a better name for the school. 4. If girls were smart enough to attend college.

D. The men of the school decided: 1. girls weren't smart enough to attend college. 2. to challenge the Harvard boys to a race. 3. the B'wall shouldn't be built yet. 4. that men weren't smart enough to attend college. 5. both 1 and 4 (and thus 5 also).

E. What kind of race was the Aggie-Harvard event and who won? 1. rat race (like the one in Athol), which the rats won. 2. crew race, which naturally we won. 3. human race, which ended in a tie.

F. Was this influential in starting sports programs? 1. Nah 2. Uh huh 3. Maybe 4. Let me peek to the answers.

G. Intramurals then were called interclass, which meant 1. Black students played the white students 2. the middle class students played the lower class students with the upper class students drawing a bye in the first round 3. only people with classes could play 4. seniors vs. jrs., freshman vs. sophomores, etc.

H. Intramurals: 1. developed because of student interest 2. were funded through students funds 3. were under student control 4. all of the above

I. The fact that intercollegiate baseball grew because of students interest in IM softball (baseball team disbanned) is: 1. a truism 2. a falsehood 3. a blessing in disguise — unfortunately interest in the sport returned

J. Softball is played instead of baseball 1. because the school doesn't have the money for more baseball fields 2. so that girls could participate 3. so more people in general could participate 4. to keep Yaz in Boston

K. The first Collegian article regarding IM sports was written: 1. better than this one 2. in Oct. 1947 3. on the front page of the Globe 4. in the centerfold of Playboy (no one on campus missed it)

L. Intramural basketball games were played in the Cage. 1. True 2. False 3. Both 1 and 2

M. Intramurals: 1. provide for a good time 2. are a Communistic plot 3. gives me something to write about

N. Women began playing intramurals 1. unfortunately 2. about five years ago 3. because during their games, their boyfriends were on the next field 4. they got sick of sitting around in the dorms gossiping (hard to believe)

O. This article about intramurals was 1. great 2. excellently written 3. fantastic 4. all of the above and more.

Answers: A.1 B.4 C.1 D.2 E.2 F.2 (bad English) G.4 H.4 I.2 J.3 K.2 L.1 M.1 N.2 O. your choice

If you got all 15 correct — you cheated ... 11-14 right, you're alright in my book ... 8-10, you did as good as I did ... 5-7, wait for the final exam ... 2-4, what are you, a freshman or something? ... 1, you didn't read this article ... 0, you either got caught cheating or you're super dumb and a lousy guesser.

Gorillas laugh UConn cries

By TOM CROWLEY

Using a close checking defense, the UMass lacrosse team clobbered the UConn Huskies yesterday 16-3 behind Boyden. The crowd of about 1500 and numerous passers-by were treated to excellent weather and a romp for the Gorillas who have yet to be beaten by the Huskies in ten attempts.

UConn goalie Ross Blechman made 23 saves while Bob Durland made only nine. Blechman's movements were also severely curtailed by the forechecking of UMass. Blechman sallied forth a couple of times at the beginning of the first period, but got into a lot of trouble and stayed in the crease for the rest of the game.

The two leading scorers for UConn didn't tally at all due to the work of defensemen Kurt Oldon and Bill Blaustein.

Coach Garber praised the defense: "The offense was mediocre, but the defense was good."

Offensively, the fastbreak worked well for the Minutemen all afternoon. Three goals were scored after just two passes starting from Durland.

The offense started out slow though, as the Gorillas were only up 2-0 at the end of the first quarter on goals by Jeff Spooner and Bill Arnold. The defense played well in this period though, as UConn was in the UMass zone only three times and had only two shots.

UMass slowly took control of the game in the second frame as they applied offensive pressure. They grabbed a 6-0 halftime lead.

UConn finally scored in the third period but the game became more of a laugher as UMass scored five points to UConn's two.

It was "garbage time" in the final quarter as the Minutemen scored five goals with relative ease and occasionally made UConn players look foolish.

Andy Scheffer, Frank Garahan, and Kevin Patterson had three goals apiece, with Patterson having three assists. Jeff Spooner had two goals and two assists. Bill Arnold, Bill O'Brien, Steve Pappas, Vin LaBello, and Peter Connolly scored a goal apiece.

Craig Holbrook, Adam Simon and Gordon Sanit were the only Huskies to score.

Senior Huskie Frank Sabo, defenseman, was victimized several times, particularly by Bill O'Brien on his goal and his two assists.

Frank Garahan had a pretty tally as he scored with his back to the goal mouth by shooting backwards over his shoulder.

The loss kept UMass's record unblemished against UConn in lacrosse and raised it to 10. The final score was also the same as last year's.

The next lacrosse game is tomorrow at Harvard at 2:00.

Batters seek consistency Eagles set to claw UMass

By BOB HIGGINS

The UMass baseball team will be travelling to Chestnut Hill today to take on the Eagles of Boston College in a key non-conference battle.

Craig Allegrezza, 1-1 on the season and coming off a big win against American International College last week, will be the starting pitcher for the Minutemen.

According to Coach Dick Bergquist, Allegrezza reached a groove in the middle innings of the AIC game that was the best the coach had ever seen him in. "He has the potential to be a real good college pitcher," said Bergquist.

BC, coached by former Red Sox player Eddie Pellegrini, is always one of the top New England teams. Last season, the Eagles came to Amherst and dumped the Minutemen in UMass' first game of the season (excluding the Southern trip), 9-4. In that game, BC's All-New England shortstop Tom Songin belted two homers to pace the Eagles. He'll be in the lineup again today for the Eagles, who are coming off a 13-3 thrashing at the hands of UNH.

The Minutemen will be trying to break the one-run jinx that has been following them all season. They have a record of 4-6 now, but four of those losses, including the second game of Saturday's doubleheader with Northeastern, have been by one run.

On Saturday, the Minutemen received some good pitching in both games. Sophomore Jeff Reardon upped his record to 2-1 in the first game, pitching six innings and giving up just one run despite six Northeastern hits. And in game two, freshman Rich Kelly pitched six innings, allowing just four hits and two runs. Kelly has now pitched fourteen and a third innings and has a phenomenal ERA of 0.62.

The offense was inconsistent on Saturday, as the Minutemen banged out 13 hits in winning the first game 9-1, but could only muster seven hits (three in the last inning) in the 2-1 second game loss. Senior co-captain John Healy came up with the big hit of the day, a triple to the wall in left center, which he was able to score on when the left fielder had trouble picking the ball up.

SCRATCH HITS ... Statistics released yesterday point out a very interesting fact about the Minuteman infield. They have turned in 14 double plays in 10 games to their opponents two, a fact which is very encouraging to Bergquist ... Jim Black has upped his average to .400 to maintain the team leadership

But B,C teams prevail

UNH surge downs ruggers

By NEIL KELLY

The UMass rugby club continued on the losing path, bowing to the University of New Hampshire, 23-10, in a game played here on Saturday.

Although the final score indicates a lopsided match, the Minutemen weren't really out of the game until the final few minutes. Trys by backs Ricky Lopes and Jay Appleman, and a two point conversion kick by David Richardson enabled the ruggers to find themselves down by only three points at halftime, 13-10.

For the first three quarters of the second half, UNH seemed to have control of the game but were still unable to score. Then, with only a few minutes to play, UNH scored two quick trys and added a two point conversion and chances of a UMass comeback were all but impossible. The loss was the fourth in a row for the club's A team.

Captain Charles Sherwood feels that "the forwards inability to control the ball is what has really hurt us in our last few games. Another thing that really hurt us this weekend was that a number of our key players suffered minor injuries early in the game and were unable to play up to 100 per cent of their ability for most of the game."

For the B and C teams the afternoon was a different story. After going scoreless in its first four games the B team really put things together and trounced UNH's B side, 18-3. Outside center, Jeff Stefani ran hard all day and helped to set up three of the Minutemen trys with some long runs. In what was probably the prettiest play of the game, Stefani combined with inside center Chris Crown for a try early in the second half. Stefani got the ball on the run and booted it through the New Hampshire backline into the endzone where Crown, after streaking past the UNH backs, pounced on the ball for the try.

The C team won its game 16-0 against a C side from Harvard. The inexperienced C team's ability to control the game and put some points on the board was very encouraging to the more experienced members of the club. Captain Sherwood feels that "many of the first season players are really starting to come along. The number of players in the club has really increased over last season and this should help us find a winning combination. Rugby is a club sport and anybody who is playing well can move right in and take a position on the A team."

The club will travel to Boston this Saturday to take on the Mystics, and on Sunday will battle Williams College, at Williams.

Duffers face Cats: Expect unexpected

By RON ARENA

The University of New Hampshire golf team visits Hickory Ridge C.C. today to provide the opposition for UMass in a Yankee Conference match at 1:00.

The Minutemen will enter the match expecting anything. They've received no reports on the UNH team and the squads did not meet in the fall. According to Coach Fan Gaudette, "They had a good team two years ago but they've lost some people. All I can assume is that they haven't played much, but neither have we."

The Minutemen did get on the course yesterday, though, for a practice round. Joe Artman, bad finger and all, continued his amazing play with a one-over-par 73.

Howie Terban shot a 77 while Tom Toski came in over 80 once again. Evaluating Terban's score, Gaudette said, "I'm still looking for him to be 75 or better."

Toski, after an 87 in the Yale-Colgate match, has been struggling the most.

Artman, Terban, and Toski will be joined by John Lasek and Rick Olsen today.

The other two slots are still open, although Glenn Sullivan will probably fill one. Senior Dave Grochmal will definitely be out, being bothered by a sore wrist. The last slot may be filled with either Jim Moriarty (80 yesterday), or Tim Kurty (82).

Campus committee advocates student walkout

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

Issues raised by a group of about fifty UMass students calling themselves the Student Strike Committee will be discussed at a Student Town Meeting scheduled for tomorrow night.

The Town Meeting is open to all members of the campus community, but only students attending will have voting power.

According to one member of the group, Alan Vangile, the purpose of the Town Meeting is to get input on the issues from the students on this campus. "However the Student Strike Committee, although open to alternatives, is advocting a student strike as a resolution of the issues," he said.

The Town Meeting is scheduled for 9:00 and the committee is working to get the Student Union Ballroom as a location.

The Student Strike Committee came together as a result of a "call to action" issued by Milton Kerstein, speaking at the Coalition for a People's Budget rally yesterday.

Kerstein advocated a strike or a freeze on student payment of fees as a resolution to the following issues compiled yesterday by the Strike Committee:

—No cutbacks in minority enrollment,

—An equitable resolution of the parking situation; access to information concerning students and student programs; student inclusion in decision making; participation in academic decision making; student inclusion in university decision making; student unionization; workers' unionization; student monies for cultural programs; affirmative action; and any other issue of importance to the university.

The last and biggest question on the list of issue demands is whether students should strike over these issues.

"What we're going to do", said Rick Savini, another member of the group, "is read off the issues and say to the students, 'Do you want to strike on these issues?' "

A referendum is being planned for students to vote on whether to have the strike, according to the committee.

"This is not a final list of issues", said committee member Cathy Tumber. "It can and hopefully will be tightened up at the Town Meeting, according to the will of the students."

Before tomorrow's meeting, the committee will try and contact by phone as many students on campus as possible. It plans to set up a table on the concourse today and tomorrow, send letters to all faculty asking them to attend, hold emergency dorm meetings, and have students speak on the UMass buses.

WMUA will broadcast tonight an open forum at 6:15 to discuss and answer questions about the town meeting and proposed strike. It will feature four members of the Committee — Sue Rivest, Ellen Gavin, Milton Kerstein, and John Pepi.

The Student Strike Committee will meet again at 9:00 a.m. for further planning, and will also send a proposal to the Student Senate tonight asking for its support for the Town Meeting.

1000 rally against budget cuts

By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

An estimated 1,000 students and faculty rallied outside the Student Union yesterday to protest the proposed budget cuts of Governor Michael S. Dukakis.

Peter Donahue, a speaker for the Coalition for a People's Budget which sponsored the rally said, "If you can't afford to go to school here because of budget cuts you'll have to apply to Financial Aid, which you probably won't get either."

The rally was held to inform the students of the present situation concerning budget cuts and make them aware of the possible consequences that could result.

Donahue went on to say that everyone must organize — students, faculty, alumni, labor groups and let Boston know the peoples' need for human services must come before property.

According to Sherry Flashman, moderator of the proceedings, April 15 was chosen as the date for the rally because it is "tax day," and would be an appropriate day for such an event.

Sam Bowles, professor of Economics, mounted the platform amid cheers from the crowd and said, "We must ask why there are these budget cuts, and why now?" He also said that we have a school system which is an arena wherein two different types of people meet, those who are working people trying to make decent lives for themselves, one worth living — and those that are capitalists, not having the same type of worries. Bowles added "Elite institutions of all types should not be homogenized in the name of egalitarianism."

John Bracey, department chairman of Afro-American Studies said, "This school's budget has been cut silently for years, they say cutbacks now because the budget is tight, but the budget is always tight. When were the good old days for us?" He added that there is a prevalent myth that college people are not in the real world and are not a political force, "but there are more than 20,000 people here, that's more people than there are in most of the towns in this state — and they're considered a political force."

Ken Grace, organizer for the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees said that deteriorating services can be directly related to the hiring freeze.

The crowd of students, who were attentive and responsive throughout the rally, then listened to speakers from student government.

Norma Faris of the Student Senate said, "It is our human right that we have access to higher education, and our government is responsible to us."

Bi-lingual Collegiate representative Miguel Rivera drew a strong reaction of approval from the crowd saying "this is the beginning of the end of the capitalist system."

Sue Rivest, chairperson of the Student Organizing Committee said we are educated on the premise that we are in control of our lives but we have no way of being adequately informed, and right now students have no legal rights in the decision making processes that govern us.

There will be a meeting on Thursday of this week at 7:00 p.m. for all interested and concerned students. The meeting room is to be announced.

Rainbow's Corwin found guilty of contempt

By DEBBI DIMASSIMO
Staff Reporter

Bruce Corwin, treasurer of Rainbow Productions was found guilty of contempt of court last night as the Student Judiciary reconvened his trial on eight alleged violations of the Code of Student Conduct and the Recognized Student Organization (RSO) financial policy act.

Corwin has been placed in "jeopardy" as a penalty for the contempt finding which resulted after he left the courtroom during the second session of his trial last Tuesday night.

According to the SGA Code of Student Conduct, jeopardy is a "suspended suspension" from the university. If Corwin is found guilty of any violation of regulations before his case is fully resolved, the suspension will be declared in effect.

Prosecutor Cindy Iris recommended the jeopardy sanction "given the seriousness of Corwin's offense and the context in which it occurred."

"Corwin willingly submitted himself to the trial by the Student Judiciary but at the point he was to defend himself he chose to ignore student jurisdiction over his case," said Iris.

Corwin's defense, which rested its case last night, focused on testimony by Steven Leed, a member of Rainbow Productions; and Paula Leed, president of the group.

Four residents of Butterfield House also testified that it was a policy of Rainbow Productions to allow Butterfield residents free admission to Rainbow films.

The defense used these testimonies in an attempt to discredit alleged discrepancies between actual revenues and those deposited by Corwin with RSO.

Steven and Paula Leed both corroborated Corwin's testimony that Lee Frank was nominated and appointed as vice-president and secretary of Rainbow Productions "pending his agreement upon notification." Corwin contended that he "drove to Frank's house on two occasions" and tried repeatedly to reach him by phone.

Iris introduced as evidence last week a statement by Frank that his name had been used without his knowledge or consent. This

No improvement noted for CC women workers

By ELLEN GAVIN,
and JOANNE FEISTER
Progressive News Service

The 1975 statistics which compare the number and grade of female and male full-time employees in the Campus Center-Student Union complex, recently compiled and released by the Campus Center management, show no significant improvement in regard to women workers.

Also released for the first time by Personnel Manager and Affirmative Action Director Tim Cox was information comparing the average hours, hourly wages and salaries of male and female student workers in the Campus Center.

As of April the number of the professional women in the Campus Center has remained constant, with three positions out of 18 filled by women (excluding the RSO personnel which technically comes under the management of the Student Government Association).

Electric car may soon provide student taxi service

By BILL PARENT
Staff Reporter

That little yellow electric car commonly seen humming quietly through the streets of Amherst may soon be taking students from place to place as part of a half rate taxi service.

Pat Kamins, a local real estate dealer who is promoting the 16 battery CHW electric auto, has recently been issued a taxi cab license by the Amherst Board of Selectmen.

Kamins said "We will be able to take two students from the center of campus to Brittany Manor for about 65 cents by around the first of June if all goes well."

Kamins is optimistic about the car and has been driving it regularly around the area as his regular means of transportation. A former UMass student, Channal Waterman, who built the car, has dedicated the past five years experimenting in an effort to make his the most efficient electric car on the market.

Some of the advantages of the car include no polluting emissions, no noise factor and a cost of less than a quarter of what it takes to run an internal combustion car.

However the car has some drawbacks. It only has a sixty mile limit before it runs out of juice, and its top speed is about 45 m.p.h.

Kamins said that this shouldn't cause any problem for a local taxi service though. With a thirty mile area to cover, a fleet of cars and a few strategically placed electricity outlets, electric taxis could meet the needs of the community quite well.

Kamins feels that this idea, the first of its kind in the country, could revolutionize cab service. He went on to say that he would like to see students take an avid interest in the idea.

"We are going to need students for all kinds of jobs as we get this thing off the ground, drivers, managers as well as marketing and laborers. This might well mean the birth of a whole new local industry. I would even like to see women as the cab drivers, it would give taxis a whole new image".

Presently, an electric car costs about five thousand dollars but as soon as they can be produced on a mass level that price will be much lower which would put them in a market with economy cars.

Kamins also said that he feels this is what the country needs to slow down its pace.

"If people had cars which only went 45 mph, there wouldn't be any problem with speeding on the highway."

Even Governor Dukakis has expressed interest in the idea, recently the governor paid Kamins a call to arrange a test ride.

So next year, when you are looking for that cheap late night ride to McManuses, just call a cab and bring a long extension cord.

Student leaders discuss representation

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

This is the conclusion of a two-part series on the reaction of student leaders to a Collegian reporter's questions. Yesterday's paper listed the participants. Responses to questions are listed alphabetically.

Does your office effectively represent the students?

Beals — No. This office, with the exception of the chairperson, consists entirely of unpaid volunteers and is severely limited by manpower and energy constraints. We simply cannot effectively represent the academic interests and needs of all the students all the time.

Ghidotti — Yes. It is my committee that has review of all RSO groups and applications... So far this year there has been a high enrollment in the senate with much activism.

Hazelton — I feel that my office represents the students to a certain degree, but it is not enough. The students do not care what we do until something is done wrong. Then, all the bitching starts. We need the people's backing, and if we don't have it, we cannot effectively represent them.

Kaizerman — Yes, because, surprising as it may seem, I do care about the rights and activities of the students ... and I try to work as efficiently as possible.

McGrath — No office effectively represents the constituencies by whom they are supposedly elected. The UMass SGA is no different. We try to communicate with the student body (and) elicit opinions from all segments of the campus community, (but) there is still a long way to go.

O'Brien — No. The students want us to make decisions for their benefit, but area governments are prevented by both Student Affairs and Senate from having a big impact in the areas. We are dedicated and what we can do, we do.

O'Keefe — At this time, the Commuter Assembly is attempting to represent its constituents' needs. I feel we serve as many student needs as possible, but not as well as we could or would like to.

Sanderson — Probably not, due to the fact that I am not directly elected by all the students of Southwest. However, I do attempt to use the viewpoints, ideas and suggestions that students give to me.

Savini — No, because of the lack of (student) participation. Many committee appointments are not made due to apathy in the student community. If the question had been rephrased to ask if there is an attempt to represent students, then the answer would have been a definite "yes."

Tata — I honestly believe the office is representative of the collective interests of the Greeks on major issues such as the URF (Universal Resource Fee).

What is the relationship between your office and the administration?

Beals — Marginal to fair in terms of communications and lousy in terms of how we perceive and agree on problems.

Ghidotti — My office has no direct relationship with the administration.

Engineering dean seeks rise in minority and women students

By BETH DOWLING
Staff Reporter

Increased recruiting for minority group students and women has become a chief interest for the UMass school of engineering according to its dean Kenneth G. Picha.

Citing a predicted increase from 29 to 40 minority students for next year, Picha rated the drive a success. The reason for the growth is placed upon the school's introductory summer session for interested high school students.

When asked about the effect of proposed budget cuts on the engineering school, Picha remained optimistic pointing to the large amount of federal and industrial grants which allow for greater flexibility. The school's one problem lies in the possibility of not filling seven to eight new and old teaching positions for next year.

Picha stressed projects his engineering students were undertaking with regard to current energy problems. A solar-heated home with a windmill-driven generator is being immediately started by graduate and undergraduate students through the aid of a National Science Foundation grant. Engineering students have also aided in the designing of recreational equipment for the mentally retarded at the Belchertown school and of the UMass campus bus system.

Picha spoke of the growing need for engineers today and indicated a 20 per cent increase in UMass engineering applications from high school students, transfers and liberal arts baccalaureates returning for an engineering degree.

Student Alumni Phonothon ends this week

By SANDY CARLIN
Staff Reporter

The UMass Student Alumni Phonothon comes to an end this week after a five week period of trying to raise money for the University from its past graduates. The UMass Phonothon, which is the largest of its type in the country, is now in its second year of operation.

According to Phonothon Director Brenda Rau, the monetary goal of the phonothon was to raise $50,000, but she estimates now that the program will raise approximately $40,000.

Rau feels that one of the most important goals of the phonothon was to get as many students as possible involved in the program. Rau estimated that over 650 students were involved in this year's phonothon. She said, "Hopefully the students who participate in this program will be more sensitive to these types of calls in the future." Rau also said that she hopes the program will stir some enthusiasm and the students working in the Phonothon will come back next year.

There is also a competitive element to the Phonothon. The individual who raises the most money from the alumni receives a UMass rocking chair. This year the top two money raisers are Ed Menders and Marily Schmidt raising $2600 and $750 respectively. There is also team competition and this year Crabtree House has raised the most money.

Rau said, "A person who is a good recruiter and can raise a good deal of money can usually recruit a winning team."

According to Rau, 30 per cent of the people who are called during the phonothon will usually pledge a contribution. Between 82 and 85 per cent of the pledges actually send in their contributions. Rau also said, "Most of the people who we call during the Phonothon are very young, in their mid-twenties, since 50 per cent of UMass alumni have graduated after 1967 and we are very pleased with their responses."

Chairman of the Phonothon, Stephen Sadler, said that in the past many schools have been sceptical about students calling for contributions rather than the alumni, but he feels that the idea will increase in popularity.

"We are very, very tired," said Sadler, "and are glad that it is coming to an end." Sadler also said, "I think everybody had a good time participating and would like to thank all those who participated as well as those students who were turned away because we did not have enough phones for them."

Rau said, "I am very happy with the results so far and feel that the Phonothon has been incredibly successful."

There was one estimate that 75 cases of beer had been consumed during the Phonothon.

Puerto Rican singers perform

Latin American week celebrated in Herter

By DOROTHY MULLER
Staff Reporter

Singing of "the imminent revolution for the recreation of man" two Puerto Rican singers of the "protest song" played to a packed auditorium in last night's Herter Hall concert. It was the second in the week-long events of Latin American Week.

Ernesto Luis Neftin and José Nogueras, both members of Puerto Rican Professional for the independance of Puerto Rico, sang the "song of protest" which urges the working man to fight against injustice. Nogueras said, "I sing of a future denied for so long of a sincere cry for revolution." The new Song or Song of Protest has become the folksong of Puerto Rican and other Latin American Socialists.

"We are not just singers. We are not special. Our song is integrated with socialist practice. We sing the emotions of the people — with sincerity and with humility. What motivates all of us is the search for the new man," said Nogueras.

"Currently our unemployment rate in Puerto Rico is 30 per cent," said Neftin. He sang. "I am a man of the people, desperate to work. Why can't I work? Let us unite against oppression. Let us unite. In Unity lies our true strength. "Although the statistics note that our unemployment is 30 per cent that only includes those people who actually ask for assistance. That does not include the under-employed on the island," said Nogueras.

Commenting on the U.S. ownership of most of the businesses and industries in Puerto Rico, and the constant cash flow from the island, Nogueras said. "I have a land which belongs to nobody — at least not to us. Working man, industrial man, it is for you I sing my song. You who only tries to preserve the life you live." said Neftin.

Field cites lack of effective governance

By BILL PARENT
MDC Staff

William Field, Dean of students said last night that "what this university lacks is an effective, fast governance system which allows students and the administration to come together on matters which they basically agree on."

Fields comments came last night during a debate over the proposed Universal Resource Fee sponsored by the UMass Debate Union.

Arguing with Field was UMass student John Roche for the fee and students Joe Hearn and Kenneth Somers against.

Both sides agreed that there were "costs which have to be met," however, Somers made the allegation that Whitmore has made no effort in the past to meet with students and discuss possible alternatives to the fee.

Field responded to this with the statement that one of the problems is that there hasn't been any long range planning in the past and there doesn't seem to be any going on now.

"You talk of Whitmore, Whitmore has no brain, it is just made up of a lot of mouths" said Field, in an effort to point out the failure on both sides. Field went on to call for a "long needed summit" between all members of the community.

Yet Field said that he was behind the fee because all students must share the cost of the resources of the university.

Though both sides agreed that communication was the problem, no solution was proposed during the debate.

At the end of the debate the winners of the Weekend in Hyannis raffle was announced to be Joan Konigny with the other prizes going to Roy Reed, Pam Harnois, Arthur Barry and Mrs. R.W. Burnett.

constitutes "representing improperly and not by error the identity of any other member of the university community" as well as "knowingly submitting false information for incorporation into official records."

Corwin was called to the stand twice during the proceedings to testify in his own behalf. While under cross-examination by Iris, he defended his use of RSO purchase orders to pay for "business dinners with film distributors" held at area restaurants and the TOC.

The prosecution maintained that Corwin signed two separate purchase orders in the amount of $29.47 each to pay for the same dinner for three persons at the TOC. RSO was billed $58.94 for the dinner.

Corwin pleaded the fifth ammendment when asked by Iris whether he had in fact used purchase orders in multiples, thereby violating RSO financial policy.

Paula and Steven Leed both testified that they were present at the dinners. Steven Leed said that there were five persons at the TOC dinner he attended but later ammended his statement to say that he was unsure whether he attended. The purchaee order filed by Corwin said that only three persons ate at the TOC.

After the defense rested its case, Iris read a seven page summation detailing the charges against Corwin and citing the numerous documents she submitted as evidence. "It is Senate policy that an RSO runs on good faith and trust...Bruce Corwin violated that trust, often and flagrantly," said Iris.

Defense advocate Carey Halkiotis summed up Corwin's defense, contending that the prosecution had failed to "prove beyond the shadow of a doubt" the allegations.

The judges will reconvene next week to enter a verdict.

Phnom Penh shelled from two sides

Top government army retreats five miles

PHNOM PENH [UPI] — Communist-led rebels bombarded Phnom Penh from two sides yesterday. The government's best army division destroyed its own supplies and retreated five miles to try to protect the capital in the dying hours of its defense.

Military sources said the rebels were a bare 10-minute drive from the heart of the city. Collapse appeared imminent.

Khmer Rouge insurgents swept into the northwestern suburbs and hammered the eastern fringes with barrages of artillery and rocket fire, touching off fires and turning residents into refugees.

A message on the UPI leased news wire between Phnom Penh and Saigon-Hong Kong at 5 a.m. EDT said: "Situation seems to be very critical and unsure there will be any more messages because of circuit break . . . SOS." Then the transmissions ended.

In Paris, a spokesman for exiled Cambodian chief of state Prince Norodom Sihanouk said Khieu Samphan, who directed the day-to-day war from the rebel side, would administer a new government once Phnom Penh fell. Sihanouk said in a radio interview he envisioned only a figurehead role for himself.

In a broadcast monitored in Saigon, the rebels said, "Phnom Penh is now on the point of collapse, and the liberation forces have liberated almost all of the country."

The government's 7th Division, rated by military experts the country's best abandoned its headquarters at Doeum Ampil, nine miles to the north of the capital, blew up its American-provided supplies and fell back five miles to try to shore up Phnom Penh's desfenses and stave off its imminent collapse.

This left Phnom Penh open to short-range mortar fire from all sides.

Field reporters said six Cambodian T28 propeller-driven fighter-bombers struck back at insurgent forces assaulting armored personnel carrier corps headquartered miles west of the capital. This indicated that, at least temporarily, the city's airport was in government hands.

Rebel radio broadcasts monitored in Saigon said the insurgents had seized the airport at Pochentong and a nearby radio transmitting station.

Reports reaching Saigon said 50 foreigners, including a handful of American newsmen, and Cambodians who worked for U.S. firms in Phnom Penh were trapped in the capital and unable to get out.

An aircraft chartered by a press pool in Saigon flew over Pochentong airport yesterday and talked with three Americans on the ground by radio. The plane did not land.

New York Times correspondent Sydney Schanberg, who with the others elected to stay behind when the United States evacuated its embassy Saturday, said the situation was "critical." He said the French embassy had approved use of its courtyard for a helicopter evacuation but there was no indication such a mission could or would be attempted.

US embassy in Saigon to reduce personnel

WASHINGTON [AP] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger acknowledged yesterday that the U.S. embassy in Saigon has been instructed to reduce the number of Americans in South Vietnam to an essential minimum.

Privately, U.S. officials said the figure would be cut to 1,000 or even less. Kissinger told the Senate Appropriations Committee there are well below 5,000 currently in the beleaguered country and no "supernumeraries" would remain.

As Kissinger testified in support of the administration's plea for almost $1 billion in military and economic aid, an apparent compromise emerged.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee began drafting a legislative package authorizing funds for evacuating Americans and some South Vietnamese. Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said the figure would be closer to the $300 million requested by the administration in January than President Ford's new appeal for $722 million in military aid.

An initial outlay of $250 million is also being sought for "humanitarian" purposes, including the care and feeding of South Vietnamese refugees.

Kissinger told the appropriations committee that the administration would be satisfied with a catch-all contingency fund, but that it should include the full military aid requested to permit "a modicum of military stabilization" in South Vietnam.

With new U.S. aid to Saigon "the possibilities for a negotiated settlement will improve," Kissinger testified.

Communists bombard South Viet air base

Compiled from Wires

SAIGON — Communist gunners, wheeling mortars and long-range artillery to within about 30 miles of Saigon, bombarded South Vietnam's major air base yesterday and grounded more than half the country's jet fighter-bomber force.

Two government planes that did get off the artillery battered runways, a pair of A37 Dragonfly jets, were downed by Communist ground-to-air SA7 missiles and their crewmen killed near Ben Tranh, 36 miles southwest of Saigon.

Tension heightened in edgy Saigon after an attack on the Bien Hoa air base 15 miles north that set off explosions at an ammuniton dump early yesterday.

Viet Cong sappers were reported to have made their way into the base after about 20 rounds of artillery fire struck the sprawling air facility.

Bien Hoa over the years has been a favorite Communist target. It also is headquarters for the government's military command for the Saigon area and houses one of two remaining U.S. consulates outside Saigon. The other is at Can Tho, 75 miles southeast of the capital.

The Communist forces that attacked Bien Hoa bypassed the besieged provincial capital of Xuan Loc, 38 miles northeast of Saigon, where fighting has raged for a week. Military strategists said the attack against the air base might signal the start of a major drive against that keystone of Saigon's defenses.

Despite the evidence of a Communist push toward Saigon in recent days, there was no indication the 5,500 Americans still here were hurrying to leave.

Indochina developments

Arms losses counted

WASHINGTON [AP] — A key Pentagon official says that about $780 million in U.S.-supplied arms, ammunition and other vital military equipment was lost or destroyed in the recent retreat of South Vietnamese troops.

Erich von Marbod, who surveyed the situation for President Ford, told an interviewer that the total could go higher when losses in support-type equipment are finally calculated.

Sihanouk denies role

PARIS [UPI] — Exiled Prince Norodom Sinahouk's role in a Communist-run Cambodia likely will be that of a figurehead and any new government will be directed by little-known rebel leader Khieu Samphan, a spokesman for Sihanouk said yesterday.

The statement was telephoned from Peking and broadcast here by Radio France, as the fall of the Cambodian capital of Phnom Penh to the rebel Khmer Rouge (Cambodian Red; appeared imminent.

Ford shows optimism

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford said yesterday America will emerge from its Indochinese ordeal stronger and wiser.

"We should not fall into the trap of blind nostalgia — of persuading ourselves that America's best years are behind us. There is a lot of negative talk like that going around," Ford told some 3,600 delegates to the 84th Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

"I think it can be answered in one word: nonsense."

Brown students continue boycott

Students picket outside classrooms

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — Students boycotted classes at Brown University yesterday amid the atmosphere of a spring festival on the Ivy League campus.

On the first day of the week-long boycott hundreds of students roamed the college green, distributed leaflets for various causes, picknicked or formed singing and poetry reading groups.

Pickets were set up outside several administration and classroom buildings.

The students, unhappy with the administration's proposed budget cuts for next year, voted by 3 to 1 Monday to boycott classes this week. The trustees will meet on campus Saturday to take final budget action.

During a convocation and rally at Sayles Hall, which the student coalition renamed "People's Hall," student leaders called for solidarity and urged students to oppose the administration's "shallow logic" in explaining budget cuts.

Brown Chaplain Richard Dannenfelser began the rally with a prayer for the end of war in Southeast Asia. He said he supported the student action.

"Brown is a good place. The students want to make it a better place," he said. "They want to be a part of the decision making process."

Brown President Dr. Donald Hornig said $2 million must be sliced from next year's budget because the nation's seventh oldest institution of higher learning had been losing $4 million yearly.

While saying the strike is a "very wrong thing," Hornig expressed admiration for the student interest.

"They don't always come out where I do, but I really like that in them. I think that they are genuinely concerned in making their concerns felt and are articulating them," he said.

The students want increases for financial aid, minority programs and student services. In all, the increases they demand total about $350,000.

"We agree that some budget cuts have to be made," said former caucus president Dick Joslin, "but where we disagree is where the cuts are being made."

During the rally, Joslin read a statement from a department head which said faculty members were to conduct their classes and give lectures, even if not one student attends. The memo said the subject matter of the lectures given during the boycott should make up a great deal of the final exams.

Some of the school's 3,787 students did attend classes. Administration officials said those who did were mostly in the sciences.

"Kids in the sciences, pre med and stuff like that, tend to worry more about tests," said caucus member Mike Fischer, a junior.

Dukakis plans to cut welfare rolls by 15,000

BOSTON [UPI] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis announced plans yesterday to cut welfare expenses by $311 million a year and eliminate 15,000 persons from state welfare rolls.

The plan, parts of which will need legislative approval, would force all able bodied persons less than 40 years of age off the state funded general relief program.

In addition, the plan would eliminate $84.5 million in costs of living increases for welfare recipients.

Net state savings would be $205 million. Federal costs would be sliced $106 million.

Other major cuts include elimination of an initial needs program for new welfare recipients; a requirement that Medicaid recipients pay 50 cents to a dollar for all out-patient services; and establishment of a photo identification card system for all recipients.

A key factor is an overall 12 month freeze in all hospital costs for both welfare recipients and private citizens. That will need legislative approval and could face court challenges.

Dukakis said he had no choice but to recommend the cuts due to the rising cost of welfare programs.

"The cost of public welfare in Massachusetts has escalated beyond belief," he said. "In short we must act . . . and we must act before public welfare makes Massachusetts a fiscal basket case."

Lawyers rest cases in Connally payoff trial

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Both the prosecution and the defense rested their cases yesterday in the trial of former Treasury Secretary John B. Connally on charges he accepted a $10,000 bribe from a milk producers cooperative.

The attorneys ended their cases after Connally, the last of 11 defense witnesses, completed two days of testimony in which he emphatically denied charges he accepted a bribe in 1971 for his help in convincing President Richard M. Nixon to increase federal price support for raw milk.

The jury of five men and seven women presumably will begin deliberations in the case late today.

While the defendant was still on the witness stand, prosecutor Frank M. Tuerkheimer charged during cross-examination that Connally repeatedly gave Watergate investigators wrong information during their initial investigation of the so-called milk-fund scandal.

Tuerkheimer focused much of his attention on Connally's grand jury testimony in November, 1973, in which he failed to mention a meeting he had on Oct. 26 — only 19 days earlier — with milk producers lobbyist Jake Jacobeson about the alleged $10,000 payoff.

Connally mentioned only that he had met with Jacobsen on Oct. 29 about an unrelated Texas bank charter.

news summary

Fighting continues

BEIRUT [UPI] — Palestinian guerrilas and right-wing Phalangist commandos battled in Beirut yesterday with mortars and machine guns for the third day. Government efforts to restore peace were fruitless.

Reliable sources said at least 90 persons were killed and 150 wounded since Sunday. There were no late official reports from either side or the government.

Parts of Lebanon's capital city were virtual war zones, deserted of all but armed men shooting at one another. There were bomb attacks, too.

Lisbon cabinet meets

LISBON [UPI] — Prime Minister Vasco Goncalves' new Communist-influenced cabinet met yesterday in its first full working session to discuss nationalization of Portugal's basic industries in an atmosphere of mounting labor unrest.

Government officials said the new moves would affect business firms in the industrial, communications and transportation sectors.

'Dum dums' advocated

HARTFORD [UPI] — A coalition of police and sportsmen's groups said yesterday they should be allowed to use so-called "dum dum" bullets in Connecticut because criminals are using more powerful weapons.

"The police must be able to adequately protect themselves and the public from the criminal," the two groups said in a statement.

The proposal would make it a felony for anyone, including police and corrections officers, to use expanding or hollow nosed bullets. It would also ban hunters and target shooters from using the bullet.

Gun brings one year

NORTH ADAMS [AP] — Calvin Hebert, 18, of North Adams was convicted of illegally possessing a firearm and sentenced in North Adams District Court yesterday to one year in jail.

Judge Ernest Rosasco [illegible] at $1,000 after Hebert gave [illegible] he would appeal the conviction to Superior Court.

Hebert was arrested April 1, the day a new state law went into effect prohibiting possession of firearms without permits or firearm identification cards.

Yo Yo sets record

COLUMBUS, Ohio [UPI] — Rick Burge, 16, who wanted to get his name in the Guinness Book of Records, yo-yoed for 71 hours and 15 minutes, breaking the record Monday. But afterward, he had to be hospitalized.

He sat down for a five-minute break and could not get back up. He was given oxygen and taken to a hospital for examination.

Burge was one of 234 persons who began yo-yoing Friday night in an endurance contest at a shopping center, and he was the only one left after 66½ hours.

The old yo-yoing record was 56 hours.

the total work force was reduced from the previous year to a total of 152, with five less women and one more male employee.

Since December 1973 the date of the last report, the percentage of women in the lowest grades — grades 3, 4, and 5 has increased from 60.2 per cent to 63.4 per cent, reflecting the decrease in the number of female workers, and the lack of upward mobility among the remaining women. The weekly salary range of grades 3, 4, and 5 renges from a minimum of $113.80 to a maximum of $147.40 which is a grade 5 salary after seven years on the job.

There remains only one male in the salary grade of 4, with no male employees reported in grades 3 and 5.

The only other statistical differences since December 1973 are the addition of one female to each of the grades of 9 ($146.50 for the first year) and grade 11 ($162.70 for the first year). There are five less women reported in grade 6.

On the other end of the spectrum, 33.8 per cent of the male workers were at a grade level of 10-14, with salaries up to $245.30 weekly. Only 6.5 per cent of the women workers are in this salary range.

And while 27.1 per cent of the men are a grade 11 and above, only 2.1 per cent of the women are.

When asked about the inequities, John Corker, manager of the Campus Center cited the existing union seniority structure as a factor. "When the jobs are available, they are open to the workforce as a whole", he said. The applicants are chosen with seniority and job skills as the deciding factors. Men are generally in better positions, hence they have acquired more skill in relation to female employees, he said.

Crissy Emerson, membership coordinator for the Union of Student Employees said, "The problem is not the number of women workers, there are plenty, the problem is that women are locked into low paying jobs. There are no routes established to give women any upward mobility."

The 1975 statistics on student workers' earnings in the Campus Center also show inequities.

According to Tim Cox, personnel manager for the Campus Center and affirmative action director, there are 483 students working in the C.C., 221 females and 262 males.

A female student averages 9 hours a week, while a male student averages 11 hours a week. She earns an average wage of $2.18 an hour, while her male counterpart earns on average $3.04 an hour. According to Cox a comparison of their weekly salaries shows that female workers average $19.65 and male workers average $33.50 weekly.

In response to the inequities among student workers, Craig Stuart, business manager of the C.C., pointed out that the tips of the eighteen waitresses were not included in the overall female averages. The average wage of a waitress is $2.75 an hour including tips. This would bring the average wage of females up to $2.27, a difference of nine cents.

Recognizing that inequities exist, Craig Stuart was asked if he saw any change forthcoming. He emphasized the fact that people in the same job earn the same wage. He said, "We do have women in the lower paying jobs and we haven't put together a good Affirmative Action program. We are working on that."

Hazelton — The office's relationship with the area administration is a very good one. I feel that this is essential to provide a more beneficial residential environment for the students.

Kaizerman — The administration doesn't really care about the students. The lower-level administrators on Orchard Hill are cooperative when the issues are in their hands, but if the issues are too big, the bureaucracy of the UMass administration doesn't allow for administrative cooperation with students.

McGrath — I think we've done more than ever before to shake the foundation of the university administration. A real dichotemy presently exists between solicitation of "student input" and direct (student) participation in the decision-making process.

O'Brien — Our relationship with the administration is poor. Basically, Student Affairs does not care about student needs.

O'Keefe — We feel the administration has absolutely no interest in commuters other than collecting their fees. The administration has refused to deal with students as equal and refuses to acknowledge that we exist. A complete change in administration and goals are essential.

Sanderson — Not very good. I find very little or no support from the administration for ideas Southwest Assembly has asked me to bring to them.

Savini — Relations with "on-campus" administration appears to be poor. The administration's relations with Student Affairs is totally dissolved.

Tata — An excellent rapport exists between my office and our area director. He is extremely receptive to innovative ideas and proposals concerning the area.

When asked if they were forced to cut student programs, which would they be willing to eliminate first, only three of the leaders answered.

McGrath said she cannot justify any student program cuts. "The answer may be in the combination of several prcgrams within the various schools and departments on campus."

O'Brien agreed with McGrath saying, "Student Affairs, the chancellor's office and the president's office could take a big, big cut and no students would be hurt."

Total.
Made especially for people who use spit on their contact lenses.

You really think you're saving something. Like the time it takes for proper lens care. And the cost of different solutions.

But in the long run you may wind up paying for short cuts. There's a chance your contacts will become contaminated. They'll probably feel uncomfortable and bother you. You may even get an eye infection. So why take chances with saliva?

Now there's Total® The all-in-one contact lens solution that does it all. Total® wets, soaks, cleans and cushions. And you only have to use a single solution to get the whole job done.

There are two good ways to buy Total®—the 2 oz. size and the 4 oz. size. Total 2 oz. has a free, mirrored lens storage case, and the new economy 4 oz. size saves you 25%.

Total® is available at the campus bookstore or your local drugstore.

And we're so sure you'll like Total® that we'll give you your second bottle free. Just send a Total® boxtop with your name, address and college name to:

Who are they?

LIFE/STYLE

By WALTER HAMILTON
Staff Reporter

Did you know that 600 of your fellow students toil away for you every day? Have you seen them pushing brooms, flipping hamburgers, serving drinks, and punching cash registers? Observe them while you're in the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center sometime.

Up on the seventh floor they worked as a team. Pushing a cart loaded with clean linen and towels, a box of assorted spray cleaners, brushes, mops, trash bags, and a vacuum cleaner, Wendy Doering and Susan Pelletier were there to sweep shine, straighten, and switch clean for dirty.

"Bankers are the neatest," said Wendy referring to their personal habits and not her personal preferences. "A bottle of booze in a briefcase every time."

"And the bands that play downstairs are the worst," said Susan. "Slobs and they never leave tips."

They agreed that students who stay there for various purposes are the biggest partyers. They divided the chores. One tackled the bathroom while the other set to work making the beds.

"Lots of times the guests leave behind books, booze, dirty magazines, and clothes," said Wendy.

"Sometimes tips," said Susan. "I once got a bottle of bourbon."

In a matter of minutes the hotel room was ready for a new occupant and they moved on down the hall.

Back downstairs on the concourse level, Gerry Joseph stood beside a huge washing machine in the hotel's laundry.

"Those sheets and towels can get pretty gross," he said. Gerry's job of washing, drying, and pressing the hotel's linen is "tiring, mechanical, and repetitious. Like factory work."

Not too far away from the laundry room, tucked away in a maze of rooms partitioned with chicken wire was the man responsible for maintaining the Center's audio visual equipment. Surrounded by boxes of lightbulbs, tubes, wires, transistors, and disassembled electronic gear, he was puttering around with a slide projector. Jon Garvey likes his job, and because of his skill earns more than the average CC employee.

"$2.60 an hour isn't that much when you consider that someone doing this work on the outside makes between $10 and $12 an hour," he said. Jon was one of the only CC employees who kept his job over the intercession. "The repair work here is never ending." His department is responsible for maintaining projectors, tape recorders, sound and lighting equipment used in the Campus Center. "I got into this when I was in the Army. I never had any formal training, most of it was just getting into it and sometimes getting my fingers burned," he said. A representative for the proposed Union of Student Employees (USE), he said that it will install "a sense of community" among workers, who for the first time will be "a collective body to handle grievances."

"I get a little embarrassed when I have to serve shitty food, and it's not my fault," said Jane Levin. Jane works "on the line" in the Hatch and does not claim responsibility for those dessicated stomach bombs they call Hatchburgers or the greasy potato shreds they call french fries. She blamed the higher up management, and not her immediate supervisors. "Student input and suggestions are ignored," she said. She echoes many of the other student workers when she said that the student employee union would protect the workers from arbitrary firings and cutbacks. "Hopefully," she added, "The union will make student pay a little more equal with the full time workers." Jane currently earns 86 cents an hour less than a full time employee doing the same job.

And there to clear away the remains of the delicious fare you spent your precious resources on is the Hatch busperson, Mary Jameison. "The job should be unnecessary," she said. "But I can't blame people for leaving a mess because the food is awful." She felt mildly thankful for having a job when there are so many looking these days and feels that management takes advantage of this. "There's always the knowledge that you can be replaced," she said. "The hardest thing about being a busperson is getting cigarette butts out of full coffee cups. I have to fish them out before I can empty the cup and throw it into the trash compactor. Disgusting!"

"Somebody spills a drink, pushes somebody, a guy pinches another guy's girlfriend, that's enough to start a fight," said John Muise, a Bluewall bouncer. Friendly and smiling, he doesn't resemble the stereotype of the swarthy enforcer whose fist can smash bodies with one might Karate chop. Bouncers try to talk people out of fighting. "I tell them if they want to get arrested they can keep fighting. "I tell them if they want to get arrested they can keep fighting. If they want to fight outside, that's their business. Just mentioning the word, 'arrested' is enough to break it up," he said. Recently the management of the Campus Center tried to cut back on the number of bouncers on duty to make up for financial losses incurred in other areas of the Center. Muise called this a mistake and said it was through the efforts of the Bluewall personnel that this was averted. "There's strength in numbers. When a troublemaker sees six or seven Bluewall jerseys around him, he calms right down," he said.

Susan Curreir buzzed back and forth between her tables in the Top of the Campus restaurant. A waitress here since the building was completed in 1971, she gets a very low hourly rate, but makes up for it in tips from the students, businessmen, faculty, and staff who lunch there.

"Business has dropped a little," she reported. "I think it has something to do with budget cuts. There just isn't the money to wine and dine on expense accounts like there used to be." She said the menu had its strong points, some things are consistently good, but other things are sometimes not the best. "There's a problem with management. All the food is ordered through the purchasing department. They have very little idea what goes on up here."

Top of the Campus cooks Peter Willwerth and Peggy Pastore didn't know how many people had been driven away by management's new policy of buying packaged convenience food for the restaurant, but agreed that business had declined in recent months.

"Purchasing has been experimenting with prices," said Peggy. "They're looking for cheapness and disregarding quality. They're losing customers because of cheap food." Both complained of the inadequate kitchen facilities, explaining that the restaurant was originally designed to accommodate far fewer customers. As a result much of the cooking is done in a kitchen downstairs on the tenth floor.

"Our ideas are welcome," said Peter, "but only as far as our immediate supervisors."

Peter and Peggy spoke well of their head chef, Ed Anderson. "Ed is proud of his work and never lets anything bad go out," said Peter. "He should have more to say about the food. They agreed that the restaurant should serve less convenience food and make more things from scratch.

"That way costs could be cut and the same number of employees could be kept working," said Peggy.

In the lonely, silent midnight, Jerry Mullen pushed a broom over the poolroom floor.

"I have no problem with layoffs and cutbacks," he said. "The students will be back tomorrow and make a mess. The place always needs a janitor to clean it up." When asked which areas of the Center were the ones needing the most attention he said, "It's a tossup between the poolroom and the Collegian offices." Slovenly pool players and journalists keep him in a job.

Where to go in the great outdoors

By NORMAN ROBINSON
Staff Reporter

With spring here and warm weather hopefully to follow, it's time to get outside and enjoy the many scenic areas around UMass. Whether truck, van, car, motorcycle, or bicycle, there are plenty of places to visit. Highlighted here are some of the better places to visit and how to get there.

Mt. Toby — Located off Route 47 about 4 miles north of Sunderland center. This is a great place for hiking or for dirt motorcycles. There are many trails to the top for hikers and a dirt road available for dirt bikes. Also there is a ranger tower at the top which people are allowed in, and the view from there is awesome.

Crossing a river in the Quabbin envelopes one's spirit into the total experience of not getting wet.

Mt. Sugarloaf — located just past Sunderland Center on the right hand side of 116. There is a steep and winding road to the top, but most vehicles have no problem making it there. At the top there is a lookout house, snack bar, and picnic tables. A good view of the Connecticut River.

Mt. Holyoke-Skinner Park — located off Route 47 in Had[illegible] this features a historic old hotel, picnic areas, and another [illegible] the Conn. River.

Mt. Tom — on Route 5 in Holyoke. Near the ski slopes is Mountain Park, featuring rides and amusements. North of the slope area about half a mile can be found many car and hiking trails, a small museum, a tower, and picnic areas.

Look Park — located off Route 9 in Northampton. A traditional picnic site for UMies and other five-college students. Among the many forms of entertainment are: the large picnic areas, ball fields and tennis courts, a pond with paddleboats (small charge), a snack bar, and a large swimming pool (small charge).

Quabbin Reservoir — located off Route 9 past Belchertown, this region features a vast area for sightseeing. Windsor Dam, the Quabbin Dike, picnic areas, a tower, and great views of the reservoir are among the many assets of Quabbin.

McLaughlin Trout Hatchery — is just past Quabbin on the right hand side of Route 9. This is run by the state and is the breeding site for thousands of trout. There are many pools full of trout that people can walk along, and in the main building historical and scientific sketches of the trout fish are on display.

Old Deerfield — located on Route 5 in Deerfield, there are many historical houses and places to visit. The museum and show houses require a minimal fee. Behind Deerfield Academy is the old cemetary depicting many historical graves.

Mohawk Trail — this runs from Greenfield to North Adams on Route 2 and is great for a car or motorcycle ride. There are many gift shops to stop at, also one can hike to the Hoosac Tunnel or get a magnificent view of the Berkshires from the tower on the top of the Summit (Mt. Greylock). The Deerfield River parallels the Mohawk Trail for many miles and is quite scenic.

Rte. 9 to Pittsfield — after Northampton, Route 9 is a nice ride for those who dislike crowds and traffic. Along this ride are such places as the D.A.R. State Forest, Windsor State Forest and Windsor Dams, and overall, a quiet ride through the scenic Berkshires.

Exam aches? Try CSC academic support

Examinations are coming up! Courses are ending! Papers must be finished and assignments written! Have you thought of using the academic support system offered by the CSC? This is a free university service and can help students develop the basic communication skills needed to keep up with course work and to hand in clearly written and carefully organized term-papers at the end of this semester. The CSC offers individualized assistance which can be tailored to meet specific needs in some of the following areas:

—grammar - spelling and punctuation.

—organization of sentences and paragraphs.

—development of a logical argument.

—use of cogent and relavent illustrations.

Students can learn the skills to make this end of the semester a simpler process at the CSC, Goodell 609, tel. 545-0924.

Enthusiastic dancers sought for five-college concert

In conjunction with the opening days of the new Fine Arts Center at UMass, the 5-college community is being invited to send dancers, actors, musicians and artists to participate in 2 multi-person dance numbers to be presented Saturday, May 3.

A 5-College Dance Concert is being planned for either May 12, 16 or 17. Not to be confused with the 5-College Movement Company, its purpose is largely to bring together dance enthusiasts. 50 girls are needed for a BIG chorus line number; and 20 boys at least are needed for a hat and cane dance.

Enthusiasm and 2 hours-wk. are the only prerequisites.

If any groups wish to be included and would like to audition a dance, please contact Susan Doskocil c-o Collegian or at 546-4146, Cashin 709 B-1, UMass.

DuBois on Pan-Africanism

By SANDRA JACKSON
Black News Service

The term "Pan Africanism" came into usage around the turn on the century. By definition it means simply "All Africa", Pan Africanism as a concept embraces the collective unity of African peoples throughout the world.

This is the subject of the first of two lectures being given by Dr. Shirley Graham DuBois. Entitled "W.E.B. DuBois, Father of Pan-Africanism" it is the fourth in an annual series of lectures commemorating W.E.B. DuBois, after whom the debt of Afro-American Studies takes it's name.

DuBois, who was born a few miles from Amherst (in Great Barrington, Massachusetts) was a member of the First Pan African Conference held in London and actually coined the term "Pan Africanism".

Mrs. DuBois gave a historical background of DuBois' early educational and political activity, speaking also of the DuBois - Booker T. Washington controversy that developed over different idealogies of the two black educators, on the question of black education. Should the education of blacks be limited to industrial training? Mrs. DuBois revealed that DuBois' position resulted in a severe lack of support for Atlanta University (where he taught) as white philanthropy at that time was not at all receptive to the idea of "higher education" for Negroes.

Mrs. DuBois related what went into the planning of the Pan African Conference and Congresses which DuBois helped organize.

At the First Pan African Congress held in Paris after World War I, DuBois was sent over to investigate the situation of the black soldier. At this Congress resolutions concerning the plight of the black races were also drawn up and presented at the Paris Peace Conterence, which took place at the same time. She exposed the attempts made by the U.S. and British governments to stop the Congress from taking place; at the same time the newspapers were reporting that the Congress would not take place, it was actually convening.

Subsequent Congresses took place in Brussels, Lisbon, Portugal, and New York City, attended by blacks from Europe, Africa, U.S. South America and the West Indies. Mrs. DuBois explained the significance of the Fifth Pan African Congress in Manchester, England, 1945. The New British Labor government had raised the hopes of black people. Kwame Kkruman and Jomo Kenyatta were in attendance and returned home to begin the long struggle to free Africa.

And as Nkrumah later stated upon the independence of Ghana:

"The independence of Ghana is meaningless as long as Mother Africa is not totally free". This is the essence of Pan-Africanism and the subject matter of Mrs. DuBois' lecture.

Though Shirley Graham DuBois is an intellectual in her own right (author, musician, educator and communicator), according to Professor John Bracey, chairman of the Afro-American Studies Department, her position as the wife of Dr. DuBois enables her to give us a very unique and special view of DuBois, the man.

In addition, a second lecture will be presented next Tuesday, April 22, 8 p.m. at Hasbrouck, at which time a movie will be shown depicting Dr. DuBois' visit to China, and a celebration of his 91st birthday.

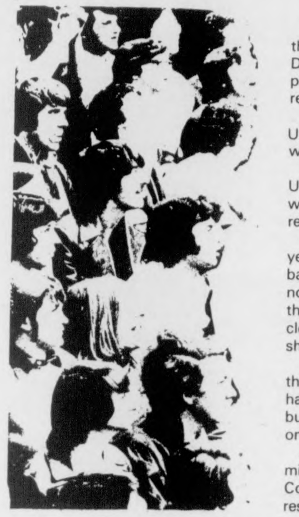
It's up to us now



By Paul Bradley

The headline in the Globe that stared me in the face this morning was ominous. It said that Governor Dukakis was planning on cutting at least 15,000 people from the welfare rolls as part of his economic recovery plan for the state.

A student rally to protest cutbacks in the budget for UMass was scheduled for the same day. "Cut backs" was the word for this day.

These are hard economic times. For students at UMass, they could become harder. Proposed cuts would double the tuition, cut special programs, and reduce financial aid.

The sun slipped behind the clouds at about 1:30 yesterday. This could be viewed as a sign, maybe a bad one, about the forthcoming rally. But there was no need for sunshine on this day, and the setting fit the scene. Students at UMass are angry, and the clouds that hung over the crowd of 1000 were like a shroud of frustration, and at long last, intolerance.

Administrators at this university must believe that the student populous here are pretty dumb. They have selectively leaked report of implications of a budget cut to the students, but they have been tidbits only and not enough to rouse anger.

At least up to yesterday. Too long the administration has been playing games, and the Coalition for a Peoples Budget proved that student response still exists.

Interests at UMass are no doubt factionalized. A key theme yesterday was that of unity; student groups do have particular interests, but we all have common ground and shared goals. The best way to find the former and to achieve the latter lies in unity.

Representatives from the Afro-Am department, the bilingual student program, and the AFL-CIO found that they do have common ground on which to stand together.

Members from the faculty do realize their obligations, though they have to be pushed into them, it was said. The impression is that these groups can help each other.

As our supposed liberal governor winds up his meat cleaver to chop the budget of the University, resistance can come only in numbers. That was a familiar theme yesterday. The student senate feels powerless, and no doubt has been impotent in dealing with these problems. Student strength comes only in numbers.

Contingency programs have already been developed, and the support seems to be there. Whether it be a strike, a boycott of fees, or lobbying in the State House, the time for action is now, and the Coalition for a Peoples Budget has started it in motion.

Let's not drop the ball on this one.

Allegations sans verification

I am writing in response to the article on Tuesday's front page "Corwin Denies Allegations." Bruce Corwin, as treasurer of the now defunct RSO group Rainbow Productions, has been charged by the Student Senate with ten violations against the Student Code of Conduct, the SGA Financial Policy Act, and the Activities Regulations. Collegian reporter, Debbie DeMassimo, not Charles O'Connor, has followed and reported on this case since its inception.

More than half the statements in the O'Connor article are grossly inaccurate. I lay the responsibility for that partly on that Collegian reporter for not verifying statements [he never got in touch with me], and on giving out such false information to the reporter.

I, as Attorney General, do not select the judges that sit on ANY of the cases, the clerk of courts does. I am handling the prosecution because it's my job. The Student Senate has brought the charges, I am obliged to prosecute on their behalf.

The assistant prosecutor's testimony was not allowed into the records.

I have not been giving the defense advocates "false information." That is totally off-base. By saying that, Corwin is assuming that the advocates, in drawing up any case, don't verify all their information. They do. And any information I have given the defense has been accurate.

I have not spoken to Dr. Gage about this case at all. Consequently, I have never told anyone that I did talk to Dr. Gage. So there was no need for Corwin to "verify" something that never happened.

Lastly, I am not convening a faculty discipline board. That is something that happens automatically if Corwin is found guilty and if the court recommends suspension. The board's convening is part of the judicial process, depending on the outcome at this level. My wanting or not wanting it convened has absolutely nothing to do with it.

I strongly object to the irresponsible journalism in the Collegian, in not substantiating Corwin's accusations. I feel that Bruce Corwin has acted foolishly by making assertions which are not based on fact.

Food Day April 17

Food Day activities will focus on three major themes: the severity of the world food shortage, rising prices at home, and the declining quality of the American diet and its effects on the public's health.

Local groups have been meeting since the middle of February preparing for Food Day. They are planning roving Food Day fairs — vans equipped with booths, demonstrations and workshops on a wide variety of food related topics. The fairs will be operating out of a base at Springfield Technical Community College [No. 781-6470 and ask for Food Day.] They are planning to visit any area wanting food information.

Topics that can be covered at food fairs include booths or workshop sessions on food stamps, operating a food co-op or food buying club, home and community gardens, comsumer buying, and diet and disease prevention. Demonstrations can be arranged on home canning, care of a garden and preparing meatless meals.

The Food Day fair will be on the Amherst common on April 19 starting at 9:00 a.m. Representatives of the Western Mass Food Stamp Coalition will be on hand to explain food stamp eligibility to people. [Demonstrations on home canning, gardening, and food co-ops will also take place throughout the day.]

Volunteers are needed to help set up the booths and to person them on the 19th as well as throughout the Food Day activities. If you would be interested in working to educate people about food problems and solutions contact the Food Day Committee at STCC or Western Mass Food Stamp Coalition in Northampton [584-4034].

Food engineering a needed major

I am glad that the bill to institute an undergraduate program in Food Engineering has been approved by the Academic Matter Council. At the time that world food problem is becoming more critical, there is increasing need and demand for food engineers at present and in the future. "Food Engineering is the application of engineering principles and techniques for efficient production processing, packaging, storing, and physical distribution of foods which are of uniform quality, palatable and safe for human consumption." [Essex E. Finney] I have read the undergraduate program in Food Engineering proposed under professors J.T. Clayton and H.G. Schwartzberg and feel that it will fill the need for more food engineers. The program will well equip its graduates to work in the food industry, government agency and related food fields. As to the opinion of School of Engineering's Executive Committee that the program is narrowly focused, the area of food production and food processing is not narrow at all. If one wants to be a food engineer one would have to concentrate on that area of study. However the program does offer some courses in humanities and social science. To the suggestion that the curriculum be developed through BDIC program seems to underestimate the demand for food engineer. Also it would be too slow and less emphasized on food aspect. Even though there are some chemical engineers working in food plants, most of them are not geared toward the food area. The department of Food and Agricultural Engineering has available facilities and resources to offer such an important program. With the cooperation of Food Science and Nutrition, Chemical Engineering, and Mechanical Engineering departments the program will be successful. As any new program proposal, some changes and improvements may be expected and could be done along the way. Even facing budget cuts, the University should not overlook the significant and potential of this program and its benefits to the University, food industry, and public as a whole. Without delay the University of Massachusetts should take a lead in establishing the undergraduate program in Food Engineering. I hope that the program will be approved by the entire faculty senate soon, and let us support this undergraduate program in Food Engineering, the first of its kind in the country.

Reply to nuke commentary

Gregg Wilson, in his stimulating and concerned commentary on nuclear power made three points to which I would like to respond.

first, MassPIRG has tried to present the basic facts of the nuclear power controversy: [1] The AEC's own studies have found that a major accident could contaminate an area as large as Pennsylvania, killing up to 45,000 people. [2] That 30 years of research has failed to produce a safe, long-term means of getting rid of nuclear wastes — wastes that are lethal for 250,000 years. [3] That nuclear plants present a serious threat to our nation from terrorist groups. [4] That conservation and other alternative energy sources can enable us to meet our energy needs without nuclear power. And [5], that nuclear power may cost the consumer more than he-she is willing to pay.

Second, I don't believe that MassPIRG can "be as capable of distortion as Ron Ziegler," since we are bound by the facts. If we were to stray from these facts students and citizens across the state would be there to bring us back on a proper course.

Third, while we have worked closely with people in Montague on those aspects of the nuclear question that relate to them alone, MassPIRG has chosen to focus on the larger issue of whether the Commonwealth or this nation should become dependent on nuclear power. If we worked to stop only the siting of the plants in Montague, they could be built in Greenfield or perhaps Hadley. Where would we be then? And what of the more than 100 other nuclear power plants planned for New England in the next 25 years?

But MassPIRG will not and should not be the one to decide whether the nation will accept the risks of nuclear power. The people of this state and of this nation will decide. All that organizations like MassPIRG and individuals like Gregg Wilson can do is inform people of the risks and insure that the decision is made by the people.

REMEMBER — April is clean energy month. Sign the Clean Energy Petition.

Economics and education

The man was right. For the first time in a long time I heard something relevant.

The man said that we, the students of the University are being denied a quality education. Everyone else agreed. With all of the proposed budget cuts, the man said, we're going to have a worse chance at a quality education. Again, everyone agreed.

For a quality education the man cited examples of public education in California, Michigan, New York and other places. The man also said that Massachusetts was too interested in supporting its private institutions to finance its public institutions.

For a quality education the man said that we need a budget that is controlled by the people. We need a public health department. We need a public housing department. We need a public University in which the people control their own education. But that's socialism. That defies free enterprise. That means that capitalistic society that now is incorporated within this University's power system, sucks.

If you've ever read anything about how the upper class persons in a capitalistic society can and do pay far less than their fair share of taxes, then you know that capitalism is not a feasible system in a democracy. What it does basically, is give everyone the right to screw another person. Especially in education. (Screw the students for they're the niggers of society. What do they care if there's 400 men and women in one classroom trying to learn and the professor doesn't even know your name?)

For a quality education we need a socialistic society. We need a socialistic society that does not discriminate against people whose right it is to seek higher education but do nothavethe financial means to pursue it.

So how is this done? The man suggested that we start by talking to our parents, for they are the ones who will initially get screwed if budgets get cut and fees and tuitions get raised. The man also said that none started a revolution, other people forced other people into a revolution. So pressure your congressperson, senator, etc. into the realization that a public university cannot exist if the public cannot maintain it.

And perhaps only then will the people receive higher education that is of equal quality to their needs.

Reflections on elections

By Bryan Harvey

Tonight, a decision of some importance but little general knowledge will be made. It will have substantial impact on our lives as students — what we pay, where we live, how we make our voices heard — yet this decision will be made by less than a hundred students. Tonight the Student Senate will elect its new Speaker.

It is very easy to assume that the Speaker, or for that matter the S.G.A. President, are mere figureheads, student leaders in title only whose lone voices are lost in the howl of the cold wind that blows out of Whitmore. This is not the case. The Speaker and the President are considered to be the only legitimate spokespersons for the undergraduates of the university, by the administrators, the Trustees, and the media. It is the Speaker and the President who are responsible for the formulating an intelligent response to the often unintelligible policy decisions made by the professional policy makers who run this place. Their voices are listened to with some attention, if not respect. The memory of May, 1970 (when this institution was shut down by student strike), is still vivid in the minds of the Trustees and administrators.

More particularly, the Senate Speaker has great influence over the disbursement of over one million dollars of your money, the Student Activities Tax Fund (S.A.T.F.). When you ride on the UMass of Five-College buses, listen to WMUA or WFCR, read the Collegian, Ahora, Spectrum or Drum, see a movie on campus, use the Legal Services Office, or any of a hundred other things, you are seeing a return on some of that money. The way in which it is spent is decided entirely by the Senate.

These are the old reasons for paying attention to the elections for Speaker. They may or may not be valid. The office of Speaker can be a caretaker position, merely seeing to it that the mechanics of the Senate run fairly smoothly. There is nothing in the S.G.A. Constitution which requires the Speaker to be a leader. But a leader is what we need. We are, as they say, at a crossroads, and the direction we take in the coming year will be closely related to the kind of leadership that comes out of the S.G.A. You should all be conscious of the battle that has been fought this semester over mandatory on-campus living and dining, and the ubiquitous universal fee. Apparently, we lost that battle, as we are now worse off than we were a few months ago.

The battle recently joined and lost is, however, merely the opening salvo in a war that promises to affect every student at this school. Sometime in the not-so-distant future the Trustees are going to make a decision on whether or not we students are to be allowed to unionize and bargain collectively with the University. Whatever they decide, the status of students will never be the same.

I realize it is hard to get excited over such issues, but in the year ahead we must. Experience should have taught us that unless we watch out for our own interests we are going to be left out in the cold. The new Speaker and President are going to have to lead, not react. We can't afford to react any more.

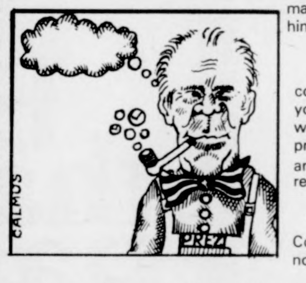
Presidential precedence

The American Presidency should not be in the hands of someone with such little poise, eloquence and class as Gerald Ford seems to have. When you think of those presidents we've chosen to remember as "great men," you realize that they were so judged because of their incredible literary and oratorical abilities.

Talk to people about Franklin Roosevelt...Where would he have been without his fireside chats? People like FDR were remembered for these things and not so much for whatever legislative and administrative accomplishments they were able to push through.

And why do you think Warren Harding and Richard Nixon are such pimples on the presidential precedent? When Nixon was going down for the third time, what made the American people pull in the lifeboats? He's a classless, crooked creep and he couldn't pull it off. That's all.

The people who write the history books were alive when the history was being written. Their minds are clouded with faces and they often forget what future generations would think to remember as significant features and events. Usually, those that wrote the books were enticed by the magic charisma of the main character and therefore present a partial account.



What I'm trying to get to without being terribly boring is that Gerald Ford is a nothing. He always has been a nothing and he doesn't deserve to be Mayor of Kalamazoo.

He never takes a clear cut position. The only great quotes he ever says are things like, "A zig-zagger scores more touchdowns," or "I make my own breakfast." You can't mimmick him, make fun of him or even talk about him 'cause there's nothing to say.

Most Americans think their country has a little bit of class (if you'll excuse the pun). But then we've got this big, dumn shmuck as president, and you've got to stop and wonder how much class we really have.

This guy was on the Warren Commission. How can I believe him now? As one newscaster put it after Ford's inauguration; "He's been known as a long time friend of the CIA."

This weekend, he'll be firing his mouth off in Concord. They'll call it, "The words yawned at around the world." It'll be so momentous that "Bicentennial" will pass by before we even know it, and another America will have forgotten its dreams.

Quabbin Wildlife film tonight

On Wednesday evening, April 16, the Long Plain Nature Center will sponsor an outstanding wildlife film featuring eagles at the Quabbin Reservoir. The film will be shown at the Amherst Junior High School Auditorium (7 p.m.) and again at Mahar Auditorium (9 p.m.) on the UMass campus. This 55 minute film, "A Symphony of LIfe," captures life around a beaver pond near the reservoir over the course of a year. Early spring brings fascinating scenes of the activities of a fox family near its den. The film follows the changes in plant and animal life around the pond as spring progresses into summer and fall, with some unusual shots or rare animals in the area as well as more common ones. Some of the most outstanding footage features eagles — which have only recently started wintering in Massachusetts. The "new wolf" makes an appearance as well.

Some of the segments took Swedberg years and several thousand hours crouched in blinds to record on film. He has been filming in Massachusetts for the past 20 years and has produced numerous films for lecture purposes as well as provided footage for some major television programs. His photographs have appeared in National Wildlife and Audubon Magazines as well as many books.

Jack Swedberg will be narrating the film in person and will be available to answer questions afterward. Donations of 75 cents to cover costs will be gladly accepted at the door.

IRA's Cassin speaks in OH

Fashion rep Olson speaks on Butterick

If you think the name "Butterick" is associated only with sewing, Dawn Olson is coming to campus to prove how wrong you are. Although her work is mainly in this area, her interests and skills are extremely diversified. She is coming to speak about the different available jobs at Butterick.

Olson herself is a travelling fashion representative for Vogue and Butterick Patterns, and was formerly Assistant Fashion Coordinator for a large department store in Portland, Oregon.

Olson will be speaking Wednesday April 16 at 1:00 P.M. in Mitchell Lounge, Skinner Hall. Come listen, ask questions, and have a cup of coffee.

Health Careers Night to be held April 23rd

On Wednesday, April 24, a special "Health Careers Night" will be offered to students at the University Health Services (Infirmary) from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m.

The program will offer students an opportunity to discuss and realistically explore various careers in Health, such as Physical therapy, Medicine, Psychology, Social work, Pharmacy, Laboratory Science, Health Education, Health Administration, Nursing, Nutrition, Environmental Health, Medical Records, Dentistry, and Dental Technology.

This program is being offered before pre-registration so that if you have any questions concerning various fields, appropriate people will be there to speak with you. Health Professionals from the Health Services will be able to discuss job responsibilities opportunities in the field, changing employment patterns and the like.

Academic representatives from the various departments mentioned above will be there in addition to representatives from the Career Planning and Placement Office and the Pre-med, pre-dent, and pre-vent chairman to offer their assistance. All these sources have been gathered under the same roof at the same time so that you might gain good perspective on any questions.

This program is being sponsored by the Community Health Education Committee of the Health Services in cooperation with the academic departments and the Career Planning and Placement Office. If you have any questions concerning plans for Health careers night, please call the Health Education Office at 549-2671.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, April 16 — Born today, you are a trusting, warm-hearted individual who may be more inclined to rush into close personal relationships than is wise. Although with your reason you know that firm, fast friendships are built only with time and effort, you are often taken in by your emotion which likes to tell you that bosom pals can, indeed, be built in a day. The saving of the situation is your natural dignity; no matter how gay and light-hearted you feel, you have sense enough to keep from appearing foolish in the eyes of the outside world.

Flattery plays a large part in the lives of those born on this day. You women are inclined to be taken in by it -- and you men are inclined to employ it too often in an effort to gain your ends. When it comes to choosing a marriage partner, you will have to be careful, whether man or woman, that flattery, whether offered or received, does not play a more important role in the proceedings than reason or genuine affection.

Although many see you as a happy-go-lucky individual, you do a great deal of brooding underneath the surface. Your ability to start over once you have failed makes it possible for you to succeed long after a less determined person might have given up on the attempt. You possess natural executive ability, for you understand how, tactfully and diplomatically, to get others to work for you productively.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Thursday, April 17

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Partnerships come in for more than their share of success today. Make it your business to see that another arrives everywhere on time.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Relationships of a personal nature must be carefully tended today. Otherwise, you may find a few weeds coming up in your friendship garden.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Be sure business arrangements are made well ahead of time. Financial matters can be ironed out quickly if you have your facts at hand.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Take plans from the drawing board and put them into action as early in the day as possible. Procrastination now means failure in the end.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Advance your career through following your instincts. Others may cause you to regret favors -- but only temporarily.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Turn your complete attention to business interests. Early morning upset should not be enough to keep you from following through with plans.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Spend some time with friends early in the day. Otherwise, you may find yourself without companionship later on, when you really want it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 22) — This is a successful day for the Scorpio who is inventive by nature. Technical matters should prove no difficulty for you at this time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — New ideas deserve expression. You must be willing to risk a little if you would gain a lot. Don't hesitate to confide in another.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Originality makes it possible for you to get the upper hand early in the day. Unless you can come across as an individual, you may lose out.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — For the Aquarius willing to work overtime, this could be an outstanding day. Gains are within your grasp by late afternoon; reach for them.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Take some progressive action on another's progressive idea. This is the time to move forward enthusiastically -- in partnership.

UMass dancers present concert

By SUSAN DOSKOCIL

The University Dancers in conjunction with the Concert Dance Group will present their annual Spring Dance Concert Wednesday through Saturday, April 16-19, at 8 p.m.

Last seen in Atlantic City at the National Convention of the American Alliance of Health, Physical Education and Recreation where they received a standing ovation from over 3,000 spectators, they will be performing for a far smaller audience this week, because of the size of Bowker Auditorium.

Program I will be shown on Wednesday and Friday; program II on Thursday and Saturday. Why two different programs? Because the Dance Division of the Physical Education Department although understaffed and not provided with sufficient space, offers one of the most stimulating and desirable courses of study on campus. As a result of the dedication and sincere, enthusiastic interest and belief in their work, the four dance instructors have kindled and creatively channeled the overwhelmingly positive response they've received from their classes to some very fine concerts.

And this spring, the energy level has hit an incredible high, resulting in 16 different and individual dance routines!

Richard Jones, the Jazz instructor of the five-College area as well as summer instructor at the Fine arts in Paris, will be premiering "Rodin's Atelier". Inspired by sculptures of that great artist, the piece will be presented in four tableaux as part of Program I and II.

Andrea Watkins, UMass Instructor of Advanced Ballet and Modern Dance is offering a new work for the concert entitled "Steel Structures for Crystal Dreams," clearly a dance integrating the two visual art forms of sculpture and dance in both programs?

Francia McClellan, Julliard graduate of the Hampshire College Faculty has returned as a guest chroeographer and will be presenting for the first time at the University "Scenes from "West Street Minds" as part of Program I.

Christine Mitchell has not let the physical distance between her position as a faculty member of Colby College in Maine and her close ties with her Alma Mater here in Amherst deter her from working on the fast-moving and exciting "Can't Wait Til It's Over" dance which will be in Program II.

Most of the dances, however, are choreographed by students. Senior dance students' works include Janet Rowthorn's "Swirling, Swooping, Swishing, Shiffon", Jean Ida Hoffman's "Human Performance OR Life Out of Context" and Richard Guimond's "They Remember the Alamo Way Down in Old Mexico". The above are just three of ten student choreographed works out of the total 16 dances of the concerts.

This will be the group's last performance on campus for the 74-75 academic year. However, if you're in the Colby College vicinity during the May 17 weekend, you'll have one last chance to glimpse this group. Otherwise, you'll just have to wait until their fall concert in September...

Talent, potential, keys to UMass women softball team

By LAURIE WHITING

According to Coach Jackie Elliott, the '75 UMass women's softball team has the talent and potential necessary to make this season a successful one. Coach Elliot can see no serious weaknesses in any of the positions, and describes this year's starters as "talented and quick to learn."

The varsity squad includes women who are back from last year, and also a few new faces. Led by co-captains Terry Pudlo and Chris Basel, this year's players: LuAnn Fletcher-pitcher; Mickey Locke-pitcher; Barb Doucet-catcher; Pat Bradley-catcher; Karen Dolphin-third; Karen Fruzzetti-short; Nancy Anderson-short; Terry Kennedy-center field; Chris Molonea-left field; Susan Brophy-right field; and Jane Hopkins-right field.

The women's schedule (which was included in the spring sports schedule) will total eight games. Their toughest competition, as cited by Coach Elliot, will be Springfield College and Bridgewater State. UMass gets two cracks at Springfield this season with games on April 24, away, and May 13, home. Bridgewater State will test the UMass women in the very first game on April 17 — away. UMass' training up to that point will be very important, as real "team" play among new members will be demanded.

Coach Elliot feels that none of the teams outclass the UMass women, and that with heads-up play, the team should have a good season.

JV coach, Joanne McGowen, views her team's season in the same light, emphasizing the players' good attitudes and willingness to learn. This year's JVs are: Gail Mathews, Donna Maccaurelli, Cheryl Meliones, Betty Daulba, Heidi Dickson, Pat Oski, Carol Masticouri, Sandi Lunt, Janet Guilfogle, Carolyn Shea, Cindy Hartstone and Lynn Barry.

Rose Sellew - student coach

By TERESA HANAFIN

Experience is a valuable asset in coaching — especially when one is trying to teach forty girls how to row crew.

This is the difficult task of Rose Sellew, organizer of a beginning eightsboat for the women's crew team.

For a woman of twenty, coaching others of the same age could pose a problem. But Rose's knowledge of the art of rowing totally eliminates such an obstacle.

As a sophomore here at UMass, Rose hails from Middletown, Connecticut. She joined the women's crew team in high school her freshman year because it was "something different." She soon discovered that it took up a lot of time. "I couldn't really play any other varsity sport," she admitted. "Crew involved too much."

She continued rowing in the lightweight eights, and her senior year brought second place in the nationals to her Wilson High team.

Naturally, her love of crew was a factor when choosing a college. "I had heard that UMass had a good team," Rose explained. "Also, I liked the school because it was big and had a lot of variety." She is undecided as to a major, so such variety is helpful.

After rowing a year of varsity for UMass, she was asked by Bob Spousta to gather and coach girls for a beginning boat. This boat has been practicing on the Connecticut River for a couple of months now, and is coming along fine. "It's hard to teach crew to beginners in the spring," Rose commented.

"The river is high and can be very fast."

Does she miss rowing eights since she is now coaching? "Not really," Rose admitted. "After five years, well, I've moved onto something else. I bought myself a single scull, and I'm more into that now."

As for crew for women, Rose would like to see some recreational rowing — a boat not necessarily to compete. However, budget is a problem. "As it stands now," she explained, "it would not be possible because the women only have three boats — the varsity, junior varsity, and beginners." With four boats, three could be competitive and one recreational.

Rose also sees crew as a viable phys ed course. "I think rowing would make a good gym program," she commented, "if there was enough response." She stressed, however, that recreational rowing would need as much commitment from all involved as competitive rowing.

Coaching on the high school or college level after graduation hasn't occurred to Rose — "I really haven't thought about it too much." According to the girls she now coaches, she would make a great instructor. If that may be the road she travels, the experience she is getting now should prove invaluable.

Gorillas look for win at Harvard

By BEN CASWELL

Coach Dick Garber's lacrosse Gorillas will take on the Crimson of Harvard University in Cambridge this afternoon at 3:00 p.m.

Harvard, now ranked 17th in the nation, should prove to be tough competition for UMass.

As coach Garber said earlier this season, the Ivies are always tough. And Harvard should be no different from what the head Gorilla said.

"It's really funny," said coach Garber, "but the game should be very similar to the Cortland State game and if anything Harvard's midfields are stronger than Cortland's.

And that is where a game is won, continued Garber, at the midfield.

Kevin McCall, Bruce Bruckman, and Bill Tennis are the offensively oriented midfielders with which the Gorillas' defense will have to contend. Bill Mackenzie leads the Crimson attack corps with his size and "bull dodging" style of play.

This game against Harvard will be a pivotal game in our season, said Garber. "We will be playing a good team, and their record does not indicate the team they have," he said.

Harvard's record to date is no wins and four losses. They have lost close games to Washington and Lee, and Pennsylvania, two teams that are ranked high nationally.

SCOOP SHOTS — Harvard is now ranked 17th in the nation...UMass is ranked 15th in the nation...Also UMass has lost ground to Brown in the New England supreme lacrosse power race...Brown is now rated number 1 and UMass is number 2 in New England...Freshman stand-out midfielder Mike Lettera missed practice yesterday with bruises received versus UConn...He is expected to play today...Next UMass lacrosse contest is at home against Boston College next Monday.

Bosox win

NEW YORK [AP] — Dwight Evans' two-run single capped a four-run rally that carried the Boston Red Sox to a 5-3 victory over the New York Yankees and Catfish Hunter Tuesday.

It was Hunter's second loss in as many starts for the Yankees, now 1-5 for the season.

New York nicked winner Bill Lee for single runs in each of the first three innings, but Boston got them back in the fourth against Hunter, the Yanks' $3.75 million pitcher.

Rico Petrocelli opened with a walk and came around on hits by Bernie Carbo and Bob Montgomery. After Rick Burleson flied out, Doug Griffin popped a single to short center that loaded the bases.

Fred Lynn's sacrifice fly made it 3-2 and then, after Griffin stole second, Evans singled for two more runs.

Spring grid practices open

By BILL ELIAS

Midst the fever of lacrosse, track and baseball, 120 candidates for varsity football met Coach Dick MacPherson for spring practice last week.

Faced with the fact that nearly half would not make the team, the prespective Minutemen went through an enthusiastic two hour workout behind Alumni Stadium. Perhaps most revealing was the timing of all in a 40-yard sprint. Times ranged from 4.7 seconds upward on a soft field.

MacPherson considers a strongpoint of the team will be at quarterback with Fred Kelliher returning from injury. Kelliher will be pressed by a strong group challenging him for that position.

According to Yankee Conference rules MacPherson's men are allowed 15 practices in the next 25 days. For many, these practices are extremely important as months of individual workouts finally pay off. Traditionally, spring football will close April 26 with a day-long football clinic and the annual intrasquad game.

Perfect game

Dazzling batters with brilliant control, lanky Bob Gilberg pitched the first perfect game in modern intramural history yeaterday, winning 5-0. Batter after batter fell prey to Gilberg's "onion pitch", four striking out.

In defeating the Basket of Ut, Gilberg's Stumptail Macaques now stand at 2-1 in the East Tower Residence Hall League. Surrounded by teammates after the game, Gilberg's only words were, "Is this going to be in the Collegian?"

Notice

All recreational facilities will be closed Saturday, Sunday, and Monday April 19th, 20th and 21st.

Softball games scheduled for April 3rd that were rained are to be played on May 6th.

Batsmen destroy BC, 12-0

UMass pitcher Craig Allegrezza, shown here in his stellar performance against AIC last week, shut out BC 12-0 at Chestnut Hill yesterday on three hits.

By BOB HIGGINS

Behind the brilliant three-hit pitching of junior Craig Allegrezza, the UMass baseball team put it all together yesterday as they humiliated the Eagles of Boston College, 12-0, at Chestnut Hill.

The Minutemen, 5-6 on the season and winners of five of their last six games, will travel to Springfield College today for a 3:00 encounter with the Chiefs.

Allegrezza, in upping his record to 2-1 (and dropping his ERA to an astounding 0.93), was simply untouchable. After giving up a leadoff single to BC's Steve Johnson, he set down fourteen Eagles in a row before allowing a walk and a single in the fifth.

The big righthander gave up another single and walk in the sixth, but bore down to strike out the next two and retire the last eleven with ease.

"I was really glad to see it," said Coach Dick Bergquist after the game, referring to Allegrezza's performance. "He's throwing free and easy, and he was putting the ball where he wanted it. These last two performances have been very encouraging, and he should go on to have a great year," he added.

BC's pitching staff could not match Allegrezza's showing, as the Minutemen racked four Eagle pitchers for fourteen hits. Leading the hit parade for UMass were Pete Backstrom (three for six, three RBI's), Mark Fontaine (two for two, two RBI's), and John Healy, who had only one hit but was on base six times, and delivered the crucial blow in the Minutemen's big sixth inning rally.

UMass seemed ready to explode throughout the first five innings, but could only muster a couple of scratch runs off BC starter Lenny Burke, the first the result of two BC errors in the second. But the sixth inning spelled the end for the Eagles.

After catcher Jim Black led off by grounding out, designated hitter Healy was hit by a pitch. He stole second, went to third on a Steve Wright's single, and scored on Fontaine's sacrifice fly. But that was just the start.

Jim Cullen singled in Wright, taking second on the throw home, and proceeded to score on Backstrom's single. Mike Koperniak doubled, John Seed singled, Jerry Mondalto walked, and after Jim Banahan replaced Burke for BC, Black walked to load the bases.

That brought up Healy again, and he responded by belting a sinking liner to left. The Eagles' Al Bassignani attempted a shoestring catch, failed, and the ball rolled to the wall. Healy was on third with a three-base error, it was 10-0 UMass, and goodbye Eagles.

Actually, the Minutemen excelled in every phase of the game. Allegrezza had the Eagles beating the ball into the ground, and, despite the fact that the field is one of the worst the Minutemen have seen (baseball is very low on the BC list of priorities), they handled every chance cleanly, while the Eagles were committing five miscues.

Against Springfield, the Minutemen will be attempting to reach the .500 mark for the first time since early last season. Jerry Erb (0-0), who has been shaky thus far, will start for UMass, and Bergquist hopes to use John McManus as well. The Chiefs are 6-1 on the year, and are coming off a 7-0 thrashing of Wesleyan on Monday.

SCRATCH HITS ... There was a large contingency of Milford residents on hand to cheer on the hometown battery of Allegrezza and Black ... Allegrezza struck out seven and walked but two, and BC coach Eddie Pellegrini told Bergquist after the game that Craig is one of the best looking college pitchers he's seen in years ... You have to feel sorry for Healy. He's coming off a sore shoulder, and twice yesterday he was hit by pitches.

Golfers slice NH, Lasek sparkles

By RON ARENA

The University of New Hampshire golfers left Hickory Ridge C.C. yesterday shaking their heads. The Wildcats, despite shooting a respectable five-man total of 403, were totally outclassed by UMass, as the host team compiled a torrid 377 total.

The Minutemen had five men under 80 for the day paced by John Lasek's sparking 73. Joe Artman, playing with amazing consistency, stroked a 74, followed by Rick Olsen at 75, Howie Terban at 76, and Glenn Sullivan, 79.

For Lasek, the one over par round was definitely his best of the season. "I changed my grip", he explained in evaluating his round. "I had been really slicing the ball down.

"Today I was just hitting the ball super", he added. "Actually, I thought I hit the ball better than my score indicates."

Lasek suffered from what he termed "a few bad putts" midway through his round. "My putter just fell asleep", he said.

Artman's total now gives him three consecutive match scores of 75, 74, and yesterday's 74. Obviously, these scores indicate that the senior captain has gotten off to a tremendous start. Artman himself seemed quite enthusiastic of his play. "I'm hitting the ball as well as I've ever been hitting it since I've been here at UMass", he claimed.

"I've changed a few things, but basically I've just worked on my game" added Artman in explanation of his start.

Artman did note that the greens were still bumpy, though, and "cost everybody a few strokes." He too was victimized by his putting as he three-putted two of the last three holes.

Olsen, Terban, and Sullivan each enjoyed their best scores of the season, but putting hindered their scores also. Said Terban, "Today I just couldn't make my putts. Tomorrow they might drop for me and I might get a 70."

HOOKS AND SLICES...Tom Toski, victimized by a nine on his third-to-last hole, continued his slump with an 83...Terban also felt he was driving well, but still has a few kinks in his swing. "My irons are still off", he said, "and my shots have been to the right. I've been having trouble adjusting."...UMass has a tri-match Thursday at Holy Cross.

Netmen toy with NH, singles key to win

By PETER NALAK

UMass netmen literally coasted away with a victory yesterday when their van ran out of gas returning from a 6-3 triumph over the Wildcats of New Hampshire.

Singles success was the key as five individual wins clinched the match. For the first time this year the team won without the help of the doubles.

"We won some big matches," said Coach Kosakowski.

Throughout the day, tiebreakers proved to be the most popular way of ending a set.

Bill Karol, playing first singles, dropped his first set in a tiebreaker. Returning to the clutch tiebreaking form he showed against Vermont, Karol tied his match by winning set two, 7-6.

Karol raced to a 5-1 final set lead but again was under pressure when his opponent fought back to 5-4. He ended it at last, 6-4, and gave UMass their fifth and deciding point.

Captain Chris Post rebounded from his first defeat last Saturday to capture second singles 6-4, 7-5.

David Abramoff still could not get his game together, losing 0-6, 3-6 at third singles.

There were no scares at fourth singles as Barnaby Kalan finished with a 6-2, 7-5 victory.

But at fifth singles and with his brother watching, Marc Ouellet was determined to produce an exciting match. Ouellet copied Karol's routine, dropping his first set 6-7 before struggling back to a 7-5, 6-4 triumph.

Kevin Garrahan, showing steady improvement in the last few matches, notched his first win of the regular season, 6-4, 6-7, 6-4.

The match had been clinched but the doubles were still important for Yankee Conference rankings.

First and second doubles went to New Hampshire.

Karol and Garrahan lost 6-7, 4-6 (another tiebreaker,) while a suprised second doubles duo of Post and Ouellet were defeated 4-6, 3-6.

Abramoff and Kalan continued their domination of Yankee Conference third doubles, winning 6-2, 6-2.

New Hampshire was the Last Yankee Conference confrontation before the championships April 25.

The netmen take on M.I.T. three p.m. this Thursday on the courts next to Boyden.

NET NOTES: A husband and wife duo took on the tennis team Monday afternoon when they refused to vacate their court for team practice.

Their game was interrupted by about ten varsity players standing on the court waiting for them to leave.

The police were called in and settled the matter.

It's sweet again

Now if any of you are half the baseball fan I am, you've probably had it up to here with all the media coverage accorded Tony Conigliaro and The Comeback. Funny thing, though, I still haven't gotten sick of reading stories about his return, and maybe it's because what the man has done is something pretty remarkable.

And I've heard all the talk before about Conigliaro being sometimes irrational, conceited, and a crybaby, and for all I know he may well be. That doesn't matter though. I see Conig from the perspective of a fan, not a sportswriter, because I've simply never met the guy.

And probably like most baseball fans reading this, I was just bonkers about the sport as a kid when the next best thing to actually playing baseball was watching it.

Yes, I was watching one afternoon back in 1964 when nineteen-year-old Tony Conigliaro made his first appearance at Fenway Park. It was against Chicago on a Friday, April 17, but that's cheating because I looked it up. I had just come home from school — let's see, I would've been in the third grade — and it was the first televised game of the season.

The announcer said a local rookie with an Italian name was making his first at-bat in Fenway and it immediately perked my interest (as it does still today) because first at-bats have an immortal air about them.

Tony C. then hit the ball over the leftfield wall for a homer and, if gilded memory serves, it was on the first pitch.

The years went by, I stayed a Red Sox fan, and Tony C's exploits became a little part of my youth. Then he got hit in the head, failed in his comeback as a pitcher, and I figured it was over.

But I was viewing again in 1969 — that would make me an eighth grader — when Tony hit a home run in his first game back. It was against Baltimore and even though it didn't win the game for the Sox, it was still something special.

A friend later told me that he jumped about ten feet in the air and began whooping and hollering when Conig hit that one, and that he had this good feeling deep inside. I knew just what he meant.

A couple of years later Conigliaro got traded a continent away, to California. He retired one day after striking out six times and it was sad because the eye had gone bad again and the end was so opposite to the sweet way it all began.

There were times in the years following when I stopped to remember how nice it was when Conig was still playing and getting those clutch hits, even if they were for someone else. But, for sure, those days were gone, along with some other pleasant things of days gone by — things not really that important, just, well, as I said, pleasant.

It was only a feeling, perhaps of the same sort shared by many of you, something nostalgic like E. Patrick McQuaid once wrote in this paper: "I sure miss Life magazine ... Yup, every Friday afternoon, after school, it was cookies 'n' milk an' Life magazine. I remember..."

It just so happened I went home last Friday afternoon and the Sox were on television for the first time this year, against Baltimore. And darned if Tony Conigliaro wasn't in the midst of yet another comeback.

Then, of course, it happened. Conig connected and put a shot toward the leftfield bleachers, and although they weren't particularly eloquent or anything, I remeber the words of broadcaster Dick Stockton when the ball cleared the fence: " ... and that's gonna be gone for a home run for Tony Conigliaro!"

I wondered, how many times through the years had Gowdy, Coleman, or Martin uttered the same words?

It was, per usual, another clutch hit — the likes of which we'd thought we'd never see again from one Anthony Richard Conigliaro. And there was that nice feeling again — not super, terrific, fantastic — just nice, as if they had started printing Life again.

Khmer Rouge refuse proposal to end fighting

Compiled from Wires

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia — Phnom Penh's airport fell to the Communist-led insurgents yesterday at the same time the Cambodian government was asking for a ceasefire and offering to give up its authority.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk, titular leader of the rebels, rejected the proposal and said Cambodia's current leaders should flee or face hanging, the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug reported.

Field reports said a large force of Khmer Rouge had seized the airport and the military base by sundown. The airport is four miles west of the capital.

Rebels also began shelling the center of Phnom Penh itself with captured U.S.-made 105 mm artillery as government-held territory steadily shrank. Ten people were reported killed and 30 wounded by the howitzer shells, some of which hit near the downtown post office where newsmen were working.

Field reports said rebels had reached an industrial area on the northern edge of the city. Defending troops and 4,000 refugees were reported fleeing the area.

The International Committee of the Red Cross said in Geneva it had sent to Sihanouk in Peking a telegram containing the appeal and offer from Gen. Sak Sutsakhan, who rose to power in Cambodia after President Lon Nol fled. Sihanouk was ousted by Lon Nol in 1970.

The Red Cross said the telegram to Sihanouk contained "a request for an immediate cease-fire and a proposal for the transfer of government powers."

Sihanouk sent a reply to the Red Cross calling the proposals "unacceptable" and advising the members of the "puppet supreme committee" to leave Phnom Penh before the final battle because they had earned only the right to be hanged.

Earlier, Red Cross officials said they had seen reports from Peking that Sihanouk had rejected the offer, but added: "We know nothing officially and just have to wait for a reply."

Cambodian government radio monitored in Bangkok later reported the situation around Phnom Penh's defenses "is boiling hotter and hotter" but quoted government leaders as "determined to fight until the last drop of our blood."

It added that the fight goes on even though "a certain superpower has left us on the spot," a reference to the United States. It went off the air as usual at midnight without mentioning the cease-fire offer.

Government troops ordered by Gen. Sutsakhan, acting president and commander-in-chief, to hold out to the end battled the insurgents at a traffic circle about one-half mile from the presidential palace and the U.S. Embassy building the Americans abandoned four days ago.

Radio broadcasts of the Communist-led Khmer Rouge, monitored in Bangkok, said the rebels had taken control of "one part of the city" and were pressing in from all sides.

Senate elects Hite, endorses Town Meeting

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate last night voted to endorse tonight's University Town Meeting after electing John Hite for Speaker and Jack Margossian as second-term treasurer.

The endorsement came after four and a half hours of election procedures and was passed by a voice vote. "We have to get it from the students and the grass roots if we should take the action of striking," said Sue Rivest, chairperson of the Student Organizing Committee. She proposed the move.

"We have to get as many groups as possible to endorse the Town Meeting," she said.

John Hite, a first semester political science major said in his election speech: "The vital issue for the Senate is promoting the fact that we can have more power. We won't stand for arbitrary decisions."

Hite said he would work for student unionization, increasing communication between SGA and the area governments, and acting as a liason between SGA and the State House.

Junior Jack Margossian, an accounting major, stressed that he had spent much of his first term in office trying to make ends meet. "I'd like to try some expansion programs and do some long-range planning for RSO groups," he said.

"I think I've done as well a job as could be expected of me. I never knew where we stood because we were always behind in receiving our printouts.

"We lost our business manager for RSO (Recognized Student Organizations), Larry Popples, so I had to spend a lot of time in the RSO office," Margossian explained. "We also had no chairperson for financial affairs.

"We did make a $10,000 profit in the print shop, so we'll still come out ahead," he said.

Loosers for position of Speaker were Ken Somers, Sandy Brent, Matthew Burns, Tracey King and Henry Ragin. Bill Staton, Kevin Muldoon, Henry Doyle, and Marty Miller lost out for treasurer.

"Next year will be a hell of a year," said Hite in his acceptance speech. "We have a lot of things to do, so let's all work together and do them."

'Issues of concern' at 9:30 tonight in the SUB

By JOE MAHONEY
Staff Reporter

The University Town Meeting Steering Committee voted unanimously last night to present a proposed list of "issues of concern" for a student referendum at the town meeting tonight at 9:30 in the Student Union Ballroom.

The issues, broken down into three categories, include:

— THOSE ADDRESSED TO THE UNIVERSITY TRUSTEES: no cutbacks in Women's Centers and programs, Third World Centers and programs, or alternative academic and social service programs; no cutbacks in minority and general student enrollment, student and classified worker employment, or Human Services; no increase in fees, no new fees; adoption of the student participation in University decision-making and academic policy formation.

— OTHER ISSUES OF CONCERN: implementation of affirmative action in all areas of the University, and equitable solution to the parking situation, money for student cultural programs, and support for the Workers' Union.

— THOSE ADDRESSED TO GOVERNOR MICHAEL S. DUKAKIS AND THE STATE LEGISLATURE: no budget cuts, no tuition increases and no financial aid cuts.

Preceeding the decision by the 60 students at the meeting, the committee focused on the format of the Town Meeting, the possibility of a student strike and the need for campus unity.

Miguel Rivera of the Bilingual Collegiate Program called for a "United Front" of all campus groups. He said the issues dividing the groups are in tactics "which can be easily solved."

Milton Kerstein, who will co-chair the town meeting along with Ellen Caracciolo, said, "We're a community and the community's interests are being threatened."

After debating the possibilities and effectiveness of a student strike, the consensus of the committee was that the strike should be proposed at the town meeting, and not be decided by them.

John Pepi, spokesperson for the Student Strike Committee (an ad hoc group that came together in response to a "call for action" at a Coalition for a Peoples' Budget rally Tuesday) said they are advocating a strike at this point.

According to reports from the Southwest and Northeast residential areas there "is a strong consensus for a strike."

UMTA worried over co-op plans

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

Members of the UMass Tenant Association (UMTA) expressed "grave concern" over the planning of the co-operative management system after meeting with campus administrators last night.

It was disclosed that funds to pay off a $140,000 loan will come from Married Student Housing (MSH) reserves, generated from rent monies in MSH apartments.

"In essence this means that the tenant's are paying off the loan," said UMTA spokesperson Karen Forsgard. This is contrary to the Statement of Understanding which UMTA and the Campus Administration signed on Monday.

The agreement said in part: "The UM-Amherst administration will not assess liability for currently outstanding loans...against present or future tenants of Married Student Housing."

UMTA interpreted this to mean that the University would not use tenant-generated reserve monies to pay off the loan. The $140,000 debt was incurred due to losses resulting from high vacancy rates at North Village.

UMTA had agreed on Monday to turn over the rent-strike funds on May 23, if the administration signed a co-op management statement and agreed to conditions including

'I wanted to see how it feels to be locked up'

Student 'lives in' at detention center

By NANCY DAWSON
Staff Reporter

One way to find out more about juvenile delinquents is to live with them in the Westfield Detention Center, according to Robert Matfess, a UMass junior majoring in psychology.

Westfield Detention Center in Westfield, Massachusetts is a juvenile detention house, where up to three persons "from the outside" are allowed to visit the Center or stay for an extended period, Matfess explained. He was there last week from 8 a.m. Wednesday morning until 11 p.m. Thursday night.

"I really didn't know what it was going to be like," Matfess said. "I wanted to see how it would feel to be locked up."

He said he learned of the opportunity in a course he is taking titled Juvenile Justice System and Administration, offered through the School of Education. His stay in Westfield, he said, provided "supplementary education toward my class."

"I did it just for my own interest," he added.

The house is one level with a basement serving as a combination recreation and dining room. The one floor is divided into three wings — two boys' and one girls'. Matfess said there were about fifteen boys and four girls in the house during his visit.

He recalled he arrived at Westfield "on the tail-end" of a fight in the girls' wing, involving "a lot of yelling and physical disruption."

"At that point I wasn't sure I wanted to go after all," Matfess said.

He was given "a shadow — one of the kids" to make sure he got involved with the routine. He said he thought he did "a pretty good job."

"The kids enjoy having someone in," Matfess continued. "It gives them something different to look forward to."

Most of the juveniles in the house are age 17 or under, "but some look like twenty-two or twenty-three," according to Matfess. He said that most of then would like to enter a trade school or eventually get an apartment and work rather than go home.

His participation in the Detention Center, Matfess said, "popped the bubble of a lot of preconceived ideas about juvenile delinquents. They're aware of the crimes they've committed — it's not as if they're running around saying 'I'm innocent, I'm innocent.' "

He added his stay in Westfield was a very good learning experience and that he enjoyed it. His plans following graduation from UMass may concern child psychology, he said, concentrating in deviant or abnormal behavior.

Women's Health has total care program

By JULIE SMITH and LISA FIGLIOLI
Staff Reporters

In addition to the traditional doctor-patient role, Women's Health care at UMass is directed to women receiving the optimum health care by "multiple approaches" involving the student as a participant in the promotion of better health treatment for herself.

Jane Zapka, Director of Health Education at University Health Services, describes her department as a relatively new approach within a university. "It is rare that a college has a structured health education department. Usually it is quite informal," Zapka said. Several approaches to education programs are offered for the community that involve student participation.

Peer education is a principle approach that the Health Education Department uses to promote information in the community about women's health issues, according to Zapka. It includes the training of Peer Sex Educators that are available in the dorms for one-to-one counseling and referral to agencies and trained personnel.

The Health Education staff, as well as Peer Sex Educators, offer women's health workshops to help women develop a better awareness and understanding of the unique problems that they face and to "demystify the mystique" about their bodies, Zapka says. The workshops encourage women to share their worries, knowledge, joys and experiences related to women's issues. A unique feature of instruction concerning breast and pelvic exams are the "programmed models" that are used at PSE workshops and at community programs which illustrate how a nurse practitioner or doctor detect cysts and tumors. Also, they aid in referrals to agencies and trained personnel.

The Health Education program urges that women pursue positive preventive measures for health; that is, the "activated consumer" idea.

The activated consumer theory of women's health care gives students a voice about what is available to them, Zapka says. Student input is sought via surveys of the services that are offered. The Student Health Advisory Board has also been involved.

Other community programs are a part of what is called the outreach approach to health issues. A series of programs, offered with the cooperation of Everywomen's Center called "Noontime Hours", presents discussions on topics like rape, pelvic exams, self-breast exams and alcohol.

Because some students are not, as Zapka says, "tuned to coming to community programs," Health Education also utilizes media services to communicate information. Films are used for presentations in the dorms and pamphlets are available on numerous health subjects.

Zapka says that women also come to the Health Education Office because it is separate from the rest of the Health Center. "Women are not involved in a patient relationship so to speak," she said. "We don't keep records. People can call or come informally

PBC Concord rally protests corporate role

By JOE COTTER
Progressive News Service

Tomorrow, tens of thousands of people will be converging at the North Bridge in Concord to lend support to the Peoples Bicentennial Commission Rally. A massive contingent is expected from UMass and the surrounding area.

According to PBC in Boston "The purpose of the rally is to make a group statement in protest of corporate control of the national economy.

We are asking people if they believe that their one vote carries as much weight in our government as a corporation. People invariably reply no.

There is no place in the Constitution that gives corporations a place in governmental affairs yet 200 corporations control 2-3 of all manufacturing facilities in the country. The oil crisis was but one example of the ability of corporations to manipulate the public."

Randy Barber of the PBC said; "We are telling our marshals to try to set the mood of the rally. Although this is a serious statement we are making, we want people to be in high spirits and we are optimistic that the number of people itself will help create the mood."

The People's Bicentennial Commission, in organizing this project, is providing on-site medical and sanitary facilities, two large outside heating units and a number of marshals with instructions to assist the people in the rally any way possible.

Firm hired to settle controversy

Profs salaries to be compared to other schools

By CYNTHIA BRENNER
Staff Reporter

Existing documents comparing the salary levels of UMass educators with others in the profession are "contradicting and full of statistical jargon," according to Sue Riley of UMass President Robert Wood's office. This has prompted UMass to hire a management consulting firm which is due to release a comprehensive report of comparative figures sometime next week, she said.

The action was spurred by a report prepared by the Senate Ways and Means Committee, which some educators have termed "controversial." The report states that salaries at UMass are $5000 to $6000 higher than the average for public universities, and $4000 to $5000 higher than the national average for private universities.

Jack DeNyse, Director of Personnel at UMass, is one of many that has found fault with the committee's report.

"The Senate Ways and Means Committee report is extremely vague. Everything is all lumped in together. No differentiation was made between UMass Boston, UMass Amherst. I don't think anyone in the University really knows for sure what the comparative figures are."

Maryann Magiera, spokesperson for the Senate committee, is quick to respond to criticism lodged against the report.

"All of the information came from the National Center for Educational Statistics and is accurate since the data is self-reported. The report never states that UMass educators are overpaid, only that they are highly paid."

The only other known reputable source for information on salary levels is published annually by the American Association of University Professors (AAUP). In the AAUP 73-74 edition on the "Economic Status of the Profession," the minimum salary announced for UMass fell far short of the spectacular figures released by the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

On a comparison of professors' salaries in the five-college schools, A.A.U.P. reports UMass with a low fourth place of $14,000. Mt. Holyoke is first with $16,300 while Amherst College ranks fifth with a low of $12,500.

However, Magiera believes these figures are "out of date and inconclusive."

"We're talking about averages, not minimum salaries. I sincerely doubt there is anyone at UMass who only gets a minimum salary."

Magiera's contention that the Committee report is "accurate, easy to understand, and accessible to anyone who would like to examine it," (UMass is due to receive a copy "sometime next week") has apparently come under heavy fire from administrators such as DeNyse.

According to Riley, "the purpose of the UMass initiated study is to analyze the Senate report and iron out all the questions."

Since Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul Parks has ordered a bottom line of budgets equal to 10 percent less than this year's total expenditures of $243 million, it is certain that legislators on Beacon Hill are eagerly awaiting the results of the study.

Cable TV system may include dorms

By BRIAN COYNE
Staff Reporter

The Amherst Cable Advisory Committee II met with representatives of various town government agencies Tuesday night to discuss potential use of the government access channel. This channel will be provided when the cable television franchise is awarded in July.

John Peterson, chairman of the committee, also read to the committee a copy of a letter from Gerald Grady, director of community relations at UMass, to Pioneer Valley Cablevision, saying the university would be interested in cooperating with the company in wiring the campus dormitories for cable television.

Of the 18 governmental agencies invited to the meeting, representatives from four groups attended. They included members of the Planning Board, Recreation Department, Health Advisory Council, and an aide of State Representative James Collins (D-Amherst).

Committee member Prescott Smith opened the meeting by reporting on a survey of town government agencies taken last fall to determine who would be interested in using cablecasting facilities. The survey showed that about 35 per cent of government groups expressed an interest in cable television. "Most town groups simply did not know what the cable capabilities were," Smith said.

Planning Board member, Irving Howards said his group had been too busy working on the proposed zoning by-law to think seriously about casting over cable. "I can see where some of the board's meetings would be of sufficient public interest to warrant their broadcast," he said.

DeAnne Riddle, of the Health Advisory Council, said her group would be most interested in using the access channel to publicize their efforts to establish a community health center.

"Eventually we would like to broadcast nutrition, pre-natal care, drug education and elderly health care classes over cable television," she said.

Doug McGarral, Collins' aide, said Collins would be interested in producing programs about the basic operation of state government and taping interviews with various state officials.

Recreation Department Director Russell Bardwill, said, "Our biggest need right now would be for public relations, getting information across to the public about the services we offer.

In the discussion of possible financing ideas, Committee Member Charles Keenan said limited sponsorship would be permitted.

the payoff of the $140,000. "In view of the present situation, however, we wouldn't be content to turn the money over on May 23," said Forsgard.

"This is the first time that UMTA was told that such a large reserve fund existed," said UMTA member Rosemary Whittaker. "The existence of this money negates any justification for last year's rent increase or the proposed increase slated for next year," she said.

The meeting was originally scheduled to discuss the selection of a lawyer who will help draw up the co-operative management agreement, and who will research legalities that could stand in the way of forming the co-op. It was agreed to go ahead with the lawyer selection and other organizational details for determining the feasibility of a co-op system. Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage suggested appointing a member of his staff as a liason with UMTA during the co-op planning stages "so that we don't have to have a full meeting each time something has to be done."

Seven students apply jointly for Vice-Chancellor spot

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

Seven students have collectively applied to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery for the position of acting vice-chancellor for Academic Affairs and provost, the Collegian learned yesterday.

Robert L. Gluckstern resigned from the position March 1.

Bromery said, "I can understand their naivete. It looks like a routine job, but just the fact that they want seven people to fill one position gives you some idea of its complexity."

The group, which refers to itself as The Committee of Seven, is "composed of undergraduate, graduate, and special students from a variety of areas within the University," a statement released by the committee said.

The committee has existed as a seminar for the past several months and has been involved in "considerable research, study, and discussion on the historical background and development of universities, the evolution of the multiversity, and the nature of administrative structures," the statement said.

Joseph Beals, a member of the committee, said, since his resignation, Gluckstern has assisted Bromery with the provost position.

An acting provost, he continued, will be appointed "on or before May 1," and this position will exist until a permanent provost is appointed by July 1, 1976.

The committee statement said, the job can be effectively and creatively performed by a committee structure as efficiently, if not more efficiently, than by one person.

Bromery said, "I disagree. You cannot operate a line position (one in which other people are accountable to you) with a group of people. This is the first basic management principle."

"You cannot make a decision like a committee of seven would. Only one person can implement the decision. What would happen if the committee voted 4-3 to do something?"

The committee also said it would perform an administrative function which will be "uniquely responsive" in addressing student needs.

Bromery said, "If this is so, we can eliminate all administrative positions and let the students run things."

The committee said it is "particularly cognizant" of the educational needs of today's students and can address those needs on a practical rather than a theoretical level.

"I'd like to know where they got their reservoir of experience from," Bromery said. "You can't just declare you've acquired all of the experience and intellectual know-how necessary for the position.

Tobacco growers open jobs here

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

About 1500 jobs picking tobacco along the Connecticut River in Massachusetts will be open to college and high school students beginning in late May, because a consortium of tobacco growers said yesterday they have decided not to hire any migrant workers this summer.

It was the first time in 23 years the growers have not hired migrants.

Citing local interest in the $2.28 per hour farm labor jobs, Shade Tobacco Growers Agricultural Assn. executive director Anthony F. Armenta told the Collegian the decision not to hire Puerto Rican migrants was not related to any political pressures.

"No," he said in answer to a question. "We have not had any problems hiring the migrants."

Armenta said a Puerto Rican government request for a 20 cent-an-hour increase in migrant wages from the $2.15 paid migrants last year was not a factor in the decision to hire locals. A contract with the Puerto Rican Dept. of Labor for some 4,000 migrants apparently fell through recently over the wage issue.

The Agricultural Workers Association of Hartford, a group that has been trying to unionize tobacco labor, questioned whether the growers intended to recruit all their help locally.

Spokesman David Velasquez said he would not be surprised if the growers sought federal permission to import workers temporarily from the Dominican Republic or Jamaica. Those workers would not be covered by labor protection laws applying to U.S. citizens, including Puerto Ricans, he said.

"The state of the economy has made local labor available," Armenta said, adding "we had decided in winter time to hire more locals than migrants."

The Shade Tobacco growers own some 4,300 acres of commercial tobacco fields in Massachusetts and Connecticut, including the Bay State towns of Amherst, Northampton, Southwick, Hadley, Deerfield and East Longmeadow. Hadley and Deerfield border Amherst. Northampton and Southwick are just west of Hadley, across the Connecticut River.

The owners in the area are Consolidated Cigar in Hadley, and Culbro Tobacco, and Meyer and Mendolsohn in the neighboring towns.

Armenta said students wishing to work the farms this summer should either go directly to the local growers or register with the state Employment Service office in Northampton.

Students under eighteen will only be paid $1.80 an hour because they are exempt from some minimum wage laws, Armenta said.

The spokesman for the Windsor, Connecticut association of growers said about 6,000 jobs were available throughout the two states. The growers pump some $80 million a year into the Valley's economy in payrolls and purchase of goods.

Ford hits non-support for Vietnam

Blames tragedy on lack of aid

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford said yesterday the "tragic situation in South Vietnam would not have occurred" if Washington had backed Saigon the way Moscow and Peking have backed Hanoi.

Ford said he could not blame the Soviets and the Chinese for supporting North Vietnam's offensive and expressed disgust that the United States had failed to honor its own military support commitments to South Vietnam.

"It makes me sick everytime I hear or read about it," Ford said in an appearance before the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

He compared the situation in Vietnam to "the last minute of the last quarter of the game," but insisted Saigon could survive North Vietnam's assault if Congress would rush through the $722 million in emergency military aid he has requested.

The President also confirmed the besieged Cambodian government had asked rebel leaders for a cease-fire. He said the United States would do all it could to aid a negotiated settlement.

Ford made a brief opening speech about the continuing U.S. commitment to "a very major role in world affairs," but all his comments on Southeast Asia came in response to questions.

He said it was still not too late for Saigon to make effective use of the military aid he has requested.

"I am absolutely convinced, if the Congress made available the $722 million in military assistance that I have requested in a timely way, that the South Vietnamese could stabilize the situation," Ford told the editors.

"Unfortunately the United States did not carry out its commitment in supplying military hardware and economic aid to South Vietnam. I wish we had.

"I think if we had, this present tragic situation in South Vietnam would not have occurred," he said.

An editor asked whether China and Russia had not violated the spirit of detente by giving Hanoi $1.5 billion in aid since the signing of the Paris peace accords in 1973.

Ford said the United States on one side and Peking and Moscow on the other made commitments to keep Saigon and Hanoi, respectively, supplied with adequate military arms.

S.Viet airbase shelled; Americans evacuating

SAIGON [UPI] — Communist forces attacking with tanks and artillery yesterday captured their 18th province capital, routed a government regiment and shelled South Vietnam's biggest air base for the third day. Americans under orders from President Ford began packing up to leave Saigon.

South Vietnamese intelligence reports said government reconnaissance planes had spotted a Russian-built MiG19 fighter jet parked at a one-time U.S. base at Pleiku, 230 miles north of Saigon — within striking range of the capital.

U.S. and Vietnamese officials prepared to start evacuating within 24 hours "nonessential" personnel among the 5,500 Americans still in Saigon. President Ford, in issuing the order, said in Washington those with "meaningful" jobs would stay on, but that he could not say how many that would be.

Maj. Gen. Homer Smith, the U.S. defense attache and highest ranking American military man in Vietnam, said, "I'm not suggesting it — the fall of Vietnam may happen, but, hell, anybody who's got any smarts at all can look at the situation and figure out what kind of risk there is involved."

Phan Rang, capital of Ninh Thuan province 165 miles northeast of Saigon, fell to a tank-led 5,000-man Communist force that sent government defenders, outnumbered two to one, fleeing to rescue ships waiting off the coast in the South China Sea. Two South Vietnamese generals were reported trapped in the city.

The Communists now control 18 of South Vietnam's 44 provinces.

Newsmen said what military experts believed to be North Vietnam's crack 7th Division — about 10,000 men at full strength — rolled over a 2,500-man South Vietnamese regiment just west of yet another embattled province capital — Xuan Loc 38 miles northeast of Saigon.

Ford pledges support

WASHINGTON [UPI] - President Ford yesterday pledged American support for efforts by the Cambodian government to negotiate a cease-fire with the Khmer Rouge insurgents.

"We will help in any way we can to further those negotiations," Ford told a meeting of American Society of Newspaper Editors.

However, he indicated the United States was doubtful the Phnom Penh government could obtain more than a simple surrender.

Military aid backed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Army Chief of Staff Gen. Frederick C. Weyand won some Senate support for new military aid to South Vietnam yesterday. But one member said, "I think the war is over," and Speaker Carl Albert indicated the outlook in the House remains dim.

Assistant Senate Democratic Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., an opponent of military funds for Southeast Asia until now, told reporters after Weyand's presentation to the Senate Appropriations Committee that he had been impressed with the general's "candor and frankness," and added: "I think I could vote for some further military aid."

State senate passes death penalty bill

BOSTON [AP] - The Massachusetts Senate approved a bill yesterday that would reinstate the death penalty in nine categories of first degree murder.

The vote was 25-12, indicating that for the first time, there may be enough votes in the Senate to override a gubernatorial veto and re-enact a capital punishment law. Yesterday's balloting was an initial vote. Final passage of the bill is subject to another vote, as yet unscheduled.

Last year, Gov. Francis W. Sargent vetoed a death penalty bill. The veto was overriden in the House but was upheld by one vote in the Senate. Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has said he would veto any death penalty bill that reaches his desk.

After the vote, Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem, said he is prepared to cast a possible crucial vote for the bill if Dukakis vetoes it.

"If appearances become reality," he said, "I shall vote to uphold the governor's veto." Harrington, as president, rarely votes of any issue.

This year's Senate bill contains a modification that won the vote of Sen. Ronald C. MacKenzie, D-Burlington, previously a death penalty opponent.

The amendment, which has yet to go to the House, exempts accomplices from the mandatory death penalty called for in a House-passed capital punishment bill.

But both measures would require the death penalty for the murder of a policeman, fireman or prison guard on duty; murder during an armed robbery or break-and-entry; murder during kidnap, rape or other sexual assault; murder for pay or murder with extreme cruelty.

The new bill attempts to satisfy criteria set by the U.S. Supreme Court which ruled in 1972 that existing death penalty statutes were arbitrary and vague.

Dukakis lists income of $19,037 for 1974

BOSTON [AP] - Gov. Michael S. Dukakis disclosed his 1974 income tax returns yesterday, showing he and his wife Kitty had a gross taxable income of $19,037.

Lt. Gov. Thomas P. O'Neill 3rd said he had a gross income of $39,469.

O'Neill listed offsets against his gross income of $3,139 in capital losses and business expenses, making his gross taxable income $36,330.

Dukakis and O'Neill released copies of their federal income tax returns.

Dukakis paid $3,598 in federal income and self-employment taxes, according to the accompanying statement, and O'Neill paid $7,164 in federal taxes.

According to the statement, all but $4,001 of the Dukakis family income came from the governor's former partnership in the Boston law firm of Hill & Barlow.

The statement said Dukakis received $13,185 in partnership income before resigning last April 15 to campaign for governor.

news summary

UM to 'buy' courses

BOSTON [AP] - Northeastern University and the University of Massachusetts at Boston are negotiating what would be the first contract-for-services arrangement in the state between a public and private university.

Under the agreement, UMass would "buy" some business courses from Northeastern and use them for the new UMass College of Professional Studies which opens next fall. The arrangement would mean UMass could offer more courses without hiring more faculty members. It would bring more money and students to Northeastern.

Such contractual arrangements have been under discussion in the state for years among higher education officials, and voters ratified the concept of public-private funding arrangements last fall when they approved a state referendum question in support of public money for private colleges.

Lisbon eyes takeover

LISBON [UPI] - Government officials yesterday studied the possibility of further nationalizations of industries which would give the ruling Armed Forces Movement almost complete control over Portugal's economy.

Lawyers make pleas

WASHINGTON [UPI] - With John B. Connally brushing away tears, the defense and prosecution made their final pleas in the bribery trial yesterday and left the jury to decide who has been lying - Connally or his accuser.

B·N·S· Community Announcements

Black Family Day

On Saturday, April 26, 1975 the Black students in conjunction with CCEBS, will present to the University campus, the first Black Family Day Program. Parents of the Black students will be visiting the campus. There will be programs with activities designed to provide realization of the following goals: to involve the parents of CCEBS students directly with the academic process; to help CCEBS provide a total support mechanism; to clarify the role and function of student and parents within the CCEBS program; and to involve the total community in a critical discussion of the effectiveness and direction of the CCEBS program.

Black Family Day is the result of a collective effort on the part of the CCEBS Dorm organizers and members from the Black community in Amherst.

All Black students (CCEBS and non CCEBS) should seriously urge their parents to attend the Family Day Activities. For further information, please contact the CCEBS office at 545-0031.

Robert Marques

The Caribbean Student Association will present a lecture entitled "the Oneness of Caribbean Literature." The event will be held on Thurs., April 17, 1975 in Room 169, in the Campus Center at 8:00 p.m.

The speaker will be Robert Marquez, Editor of the "Caliban" magazine and Prof. at Hampshire College in Amherst. This event is open to the entire community.

Minority orientation

The Student Intern Program is having a minority orientation meeting, April 21, at 7 p.m. in the New Africa House. The purpose of the orientation meeting is to inform all interested minority students of the Student Intern Program and its unique alternative educational experience.

The Student Intern Program makes an opportunity available for undergraduate students to apply their acquired academic knowledge to a work situation related to their academic-career goals. All internships are for a semester, 40 hrs.-week. All interns receive 15 credits, the usual arrangement of 6 Special Problems or Independent Study and 9 UMass Practicum 200. Stipends are not required of participating organizations but are strongly encouraged.

All students who are eligible for work-study will not lose their eligibility if they desire to do an internship. Internships are usually set up at community-based social service-action agencies, government, city, state, federal, research-scientific, educational TV and radio, and other non-profit agencies.

Singer's Workshop

The Recital Hall (Room 248) of the Fine Arts Complex will be the scene of a Singers' Workshop at 8:00 p.m. on Thursday, April 27, when fifteen students from a "Techniques in Afro-American Vocal Music" course will present a concert of solos, duets and trios. The course, taught by Horace Clarence Boyer, focuses on the singing of jazz, blues, popular songs, show tunes, soul, gospel and spirituals. relationships have been stressed, considerable attention has been given to vocal improvisation of melody, rhythm and text, as well as ensemble singing in large and small groups.

Each type of Afro-American Vocal Music, from the blues to the present-day soul songs will be included in the concert, which also features several songs performed in the "jamming" manner of an instrumental ensemble. During the course of one song, several singers alternate on choruses for the development of the improvisational technique.

Everyone is invited to attend the concert free of charge.

Art Festival

On Saturday, April 19, 1975 at 2:00 p.m., the 1975 Black Arts Festival, "Creativity in Blackness," will present a cultural arts festival, at Smith College, — Mendenhall Center for the Performing Arts.

The event will feature the Tyefa African Dance Ensemble, from Morristown, N.J., plus an array of local talent from the Five College area will perform. This event is open to the public, for further information, please contact Karen Freeman, 584-2700, Ext. 488.

Support students

The Black News Service wish to announce that we support the just demands of college students in their attempts to bring justice and equity to Univ. campuses across America. It is our feeling that the following grievances are only a few of the many concerns that are desperately in need of genuine attention; reduce budget cuts, increase minority recruitment, increase financial aid, and more respect for students from professors and administrators.

Call to reaction

On a back page of yesterday's New York Times, the headlines told the story. A picture of picketing college students was flanked by a headline stating "Students at Brown U. Protest Budget Cuts," and another, "Panel Says 1 in 10 Campuses Will Merge or Shut Down by 1980." And on the front page of yesterday's Collegian, a picture of Tuesday's PBC rally appeared, showing a large crowd gathered to hear various views of the budget cuts. Discontent is in the air.

At UMass, the discontent has its variables, but there are also some broad based issues which connect and effect everyone.

The administration has shown itself to be irresponsible and unresponsive to demands for student input into the decision making process. Students will suffer cutbacks and fee increases when there has been no active search for alternatives. Why not ask Dr. Wood to forego his helicopter rides? The question is who is working for whom.

Then there is the Governor and the State Legislature, who have seen fit to cut our budget 30 per cent, a cut that will effect quality and quantity of state education, giving more financial aid to private colleges.

The alternatives for action are many, but all require organization and unity. No one is going to take that action for us.

Tonight at 9:30 in the Student Union Ballroom, a Town Meeting will be held, the purpose of which is to decide a course of action to protest the situation. If you care about your educational future and right to self determination. We have over 20,000 people all in the same situation. The numbers are in our favor is we can effectively organize support. It's up to us to determine whether we get answers on fees and budget cuts now, or in the back pages of the Boston Globe in July.

Town meeting, tonight, 9:30 at the Student Union Ballroom.

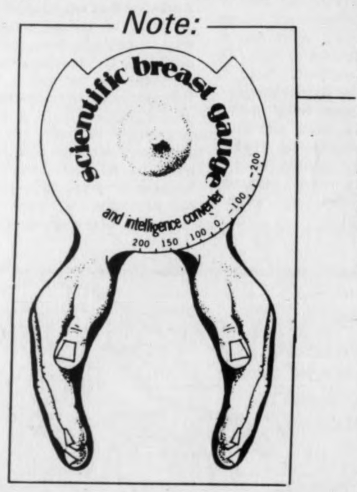
Gauge an insult to women's intellect



We are writing this letter to protest an advertisement placed in the Collegian on the ninth of the month. We refer to the breast gauge ad. It makes the statement that the smaller the breast, the greater the intelligence. Obviously, since men have smaller breasts, this gauge rates their intelligence higher than that of women's. We feel that this is a direct insult against women's intellect. We are appalled to find such sexist stereotyping in this newspaper.

Concerning Concord

I am writing in response to the letter in Monday's Collegian regarding caravans to Concord.

I would like to issue a word of caution to anyone planning to go to Concord this weekend. Concord is a small town with a population smaller than that of this University. It has a beauty all its own, most of that beauty being its peacefulness. It prepares itself every year for many tourists, but no where near the number that is expected this weekend and through the summer. I am a life long resident of the town and would hate to see any damage done to its beauty by unappreciative crowds. Please have some respect for Concord's historic value and those who live there if nothing else.

Judicial system needs looking into

As an ex-member of the student judiciary committee, I was motivated to write this letter by the Collegian's article "Corwin Denies Allegation," in which Corwin states his dissatisfaction with the University judicial system. I am pleased he spoke out. I left the committee earlier this semester because I felt the office was not fulfilling its obligation to the university by using methods of select and often unethical means of prosecution. I have a serious concern that the office is staffed by many students who are not into the struggles and needs of the rest of us, and those running it are into their own power trip. Rather than make any further specific allegation, I would see it in the interest of the university to have a task force of sort created looking into whether justice is being served by:

a] the attorney general selecting judges and defense prosecution attorneys,

b] the attorney general serving as a prosecution attorney,

c] lack of third world or minority representation on the committee, d] contracts as a form of plea bargaining available to suspected shop lifters, e] the methods in which the judges are trained and advised.

I urgently ask that the Senate or any organized student association look into this matter soon.

Deborah M. Love

"Well, Dr. Gage, here's another fine mess you've got me into. Dining Common fees; Indeed!

The steps of the Student Union building was a scene a great excitement yesterday as several rallied against the budget cuts.

Call to arms

(1776 — 1976)

Two hundred years ago, the revolutionary call to arms reached a group of local patriots, better known as "The Sunderland Militia". Unfortunately, they never made Concord; a rustic bar and rounds of raucous drinking way-layed the pride of the Pioneer Valley.

Tonight thousands of people from both on and off campus are expected to attend a town meeting in the Student Union Ballroom protesting the economic situation at the University and the community at large. Tomorrow, tens of thousands of people from all over the country will be protesting the National Economic situation at The People's Bicentennial Rally in Concord. We only hope that these two statements, whose purpose reflects our country's original revolutionary dissent, will incite participation of a more serious nature than exhibited by the Sunderland rowdies.

Following a rally Tuesday, protesting proposed University budget cuts, a group of students formed a "strike committee". Yet, it remains to be seen if the majority of students are willing to support, by means of active participation as well as a spiritual endorsement, the shutting down of the University.

The themes surrounding the midnight rally in Concord — corporate control of the national economy — parallel, on a smaller scale, the dilemma faced by university students — that is, UMass has been built for and maintained by the people of Massachusetts' working-class whites and Third World citizens and it is these people who are in danger of losing their right to public education.

Both the People's Bicentennial and the University Town Meeting are sober and forceful statements, directed at Wall Street and Whitmore, THAT WE WILL CONTROL OVER OUR LIVES!

If you believe in your right to a quality education and an end to corporate tyranny, let your voice be heard — tonight at 9 o'clock in the Student Union Ballroom, and Friday, at midnight in Concord.

Northeast Quad residents to be duped again?

I have serious charges to levy against the Northeast Area Government. I am doing this because I want the residents of the area to know what is going on behind the scenes in their elected government.

Last year the N.E. Government voted to pay themselves salaries. President $15-week, V.P., $10-week, Treasurer $10-week, Secretary $10-week. This was a closed vote. None of the residents were asked their opinions. These salaries run to the tune of $1800 per annum. What this means is that when they come to us and say ... "OK, people we have x amount of $ to spend," it is minus the $1800 that they have skimmed off the top.

Also to insure that the "right people" will get these positions this year election announcements were just posted over the weekend. [If not later in some dorms]. Due date for one to submit his-her name was Tuesday the 15th. Today, the 17th, elections are to be held.

I am furious that announcements were not made much sooner, salaries were not mentioned, and that none of the candidates who are on the ballot campaigned or even attempted to speak at dorm meetings throughout the Quad.

The election is a mockery and is an insult to the residents of the Quad.

As a finish, I would like to know what happened to the $14,000 that the government alloted within the first three weeks of the year. How many people benefited from the allocations besides the salaried officials? What is going to happen to next year's budget?

Student unity tonight???

By BILL PARENT

All over campus the student unity symbol has been appearing with the word STRIKE followed by a question mark. The word "strike" one can understand, (though it seems too militant for these purposes) however what I wonder about is the question mark.

The question mark may mean any number of things, a few of which are:

1. Watch out Whitmore, we've almost got it together enough...

2. The warning signs are out and "will soon shake your windows and rattle your walls"

3. We know what we should do; we just have our doubts as to the potency of students in the seventies.

The question mark is most likely a reflection of all the above.

Yet the question mark best exemplifies tonight's meeting in the SUB. Whether or not there is enough concern to support a large turnout, is the question which will not only bring long awaited answers on the budget but will also mark the turning point as to the role of students on this campus in the future.

Right now there is no real student voice on campus, the only regular student administration exchange takes place between Whitmore and the Collegian and our duty is not to be the advocate for students.

Sadly, the S.G.A. has lost its power, it has become too caught up in the day-to-day administration of student activities to devote the time and talent necessary to be heard. Last night's elections were more of a mundane effort than they were a catalyst. Students must raise their voices by alternative means.

What goes on tonight and what follows will be the last chance for students this year to pour out their emotions as a collective group, not only for next semester but for years to come.

Whether or not one supports the demands brought up tonight is not important, what is important is that people show up, that students get together, and let people know how they feel.

And if what is on tonight's agenda does not, in your opinion, concern you, come and let people know what does. Tonight the question will be answered.

Will we have a say in the way this place where we live, love, work, learn, and pay for is run?

Student Unity?

Point...

By DENNIS PERRY

The growing criticism of and animosity toward the United Nations holds a cryptic message for all peace-loving nations of the world. The storm of protest raging in the United States is particularly an ominous portent. Though the United States has had both the capacity and the opportunity to reverse this trend, somehow the bitterness and frustration have preempted any such "good will" on our part. And that attitude appears, at least to the critics, to be justified. Why?

With the recent tumultous and unprecedented change (that is, the increased strength and vigor of the Third World and its supporters) inside the United Nations, there is a growing fear that peace and security will be jeopardized by a volatile international system of too many participants. There is also a deep concern over the formation of a "tyranny of the majority" within the General Assembly. And there is an overwhelming apprehension that such a power bloc might bring a wave of recriminations, or rather, the suppression of our independent initiative within the United Nations. In such an event the United States (so they say) should retaliate either by threatening a cut-off in its share of the financial burdern or a withdrawal from the United Nations altogether.

But if only we examine the history of the Organization would we begin to see the superficiality of these arguments. Today's tumultous change within the United Nations is an historic inevitability — and a blessing. The "revolution" is not meant to sacrifice basic principles and objectives of the United Nations but to challenge the power relationships — adjustments that would see to it that the U.N. functioned as it originally was intended to, in a quasi-parliamentary fashion with potential autonomy and independence for all nations. Peace and security as the common goal of all nations must be decided in common, not by a few. Size and power does not guarantee them.

There is certainly little plausibility in the criticism of the U.N. as a "majority tyranny." One need only note the defeat of the resolution to depose the Lon Nol regime a few months back to see that each nation maintains its independent initiative and votes according to its conviction.

In contrast, the U.N. of yesteryear was once described as a "mechanical majority" in which the U.S. created the framework for debates and defined the issues. Even today, the idea of Communist infiltration within the Organization has hardly any credibility since what action the Soviet Union might support is largely not an independent factor, but a function of what the Third World nations do and say.

Finally, if the U.S. were to respond to the change by blocking funds or by withdrawing from the United Nations, it would only be cutting its own throat. World opinion would prevail against the United States, as the credibility of our most noble motives and most generous impulses would be questioned. Would we really reach the point where peace is measured in terms of dollars and cents, where formerly we were under the assumption that peace is priceless? Has it been all along that wealth, power, and size were qualifications for independent initiative, and not nationhood alone?

The message is clear: the honeymoon is over for the United States. It must learn to live and let live. The United Nations will continue to play a significant and unique role in the promotion of peace, and it would seem its members are determined to meet the enormous challenge of the world together — with or without the United States.

Dennis Perry is a Collegian Commentator.

By MIKE IZDEPSKI

Indeed, the honeymoon is over for the United States in the United Nations, but only because there never was one in the first place. What America got was closer to a nightmare of a marriage than a honeymoon. Since its beginnings the world organization has been clinging to the U.S. for financial and moral support like a chain and iron ball: The UN headquarters stand on soil donated by the city of New York, the building itself was erected almost exclusively through American grants and loans. Over the years billions upon billions of dollars have been contributed by the U.S. to such valuable affiliated groups as UNESCO (Education, Science and Culture) and the World Health Organization (WHO). And this money wasn't just "extra cash", which could be thrown away at random: every cent had to be earned by American taxpayers.

Looking at the UN budget for 1974-75, only 17 of the 138 membership countries will pay at least one per cent each of the needed 540 million, four of 138 will pitch in five per cent or more, and only two will contribute double figure percentages: the USSR with 13 per cent and, finally, who else but stupid old Uncle Sam with a whopping 25 per cent, or a full quarter of the tab!

It's all for a "good cause" many will interject, and surely Americans don't want some little kid in Asia to go hungry. So let's leave aside the affiliated organizations. We still are left with an inflated appropriation of 150 million for "administration costs and conference services". This pays for the tons of paper that are printed up on such important things as the yearly precipitation in upper Timbuktu or how many grams of rice a Southern Nepalesian farmer eats each day.

Highly fruitful conferences are also funded with this money, like the one on world population last year in Romania, which found 1250 delegates at each other's throats for a week or so, and ended with a 10,000 word statement to the effect: "It can't go on like this!".

To illustrate the schizophrenic mentality that currently abides in the hallowed halls of the General Assembly, one need only compare how closely the objectives of the UN layed down in its charger coincide with the actual performance of the organization:

Some of the declared purposes of the United Nations are taking "effective collective measures for the suppression of acts of aggression" and "encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all." Membership is supposed to be limited to "peace-loving states."

In accordance with these rules, so we are told, racist South Africa was expelled from the General Assembly, Israel thrown out of UNESCO. But what about granting membership to a country that barricades itself from the free world with a stone wall, cruelly shooting trespassers on sight. Oh yes, East Germany does have its own bloodly little way of "keeping the peace."

Or take the official invitation that was extended to Palestine terrorist leader Yassir Arafat last September to address the General Assembly. Too bad the twelve Israeli athletes of Munich or the 28 innocent airline passengers of Lod airport couldn't be in New York that day to join in the ecstatic applause.

But then again, why should a world organization, a third of whose members are representatives of military juntas, dictatorships and other totalitarian regimes, act otherwise?

The fact that four nations with a combined population less than that of Worcester County, can out-vote the three largest powers on this globe, thereby telling over a billion people what to do, is nothing less than a screaming outrage! The "one country — one vote" policy of the UN was meant to make all nations equal. What it has in fact accomplished is making the minority "more equal" than the majority.

So let's take the consequences and cut our precious contributions that are being wasted so blatantly! But let's not get out! For after all the work and money we stuck into the United Nations, we should at least be privileged to stay in our seats and watch the incompetent giant go down the drain before our very eyes ...

Future stalk

Benita Pullara

By BENITA PULLARA

Enjoy it while you're young, you'll only be young once ... isn't it great to be young?

In a culture where youth is worshipped, it is a disgrace to become old. The middle-aged cover their wrinkles, dye their hair, and wear wigs to preserve an imminently fading youth. The fear of aging is forcing middle-aged women to dress themselves into styles too young for them. It has become the vogue for men over forty to have hair transplants.

Old age symbolizes uselessness in our society, it is this notion we fear. It is only when you're young that you're really alive, or so we theorize. Young people today really know what it's all about. Life is for the young. We build our own cages with these values. We value youth and disregard maturity but we will all be old some day. Youth is like time, it is elusive and it will slip away.

It's easy to overlook when you're twenty that some day your hair will turn white and your skin will wrinkle. It's easy to overlook that some day you will feel useless and unwanted. It's easy to overlook that you will not always be young. Our culture is not like others, where age is valued, where the elderly can find a useful purpose. Our culture is centered around the teeny bopper and the college student.

You cannot age with grace in our culture. Age represents a struggle to preserve youth, to do everything you possibly can to hide these signs of uselessness. Age with dignity, age with respect, mean nothing. Age is a fear, for it brings you ever so closer to death. And when age has gone too far to hide from anymore, you can go to the park and feed the pigeons. Or your loving relatives will pack your suitcase and send you to the nursing home. You are almost literally placed away on a shelf by those younger than yourself, for your age reminds them of their own fears.

They'll kid themselves, they'll rationalize: they'll say Uncle Herman or Aunt Martha are happy where they are. Maybe they may grumble a bit, but they are really better off. And if you're lucky they'll come every Christmas and Easter and take you to dinner with the family and then they'll put you back again. On the shelf. Out of their world.

And you will remember what it was like to be young and useful. And you will remember what it was like not to have to think about old age and death. And you will remember all the old relatives that you put out of your world, becase you were young and never going to be old.

It is with these values that we make ourselves inadequate in our later years. In youth we always see the aged as irrelevant and useless, and so when we grow old we find the same fate for ourselves.

Benita Pullara is a Collegian Columnist.

★ Thousands to visit Concord

The PBC program will consist of revolutionary oration and music as well as soup kitchens and the reading of a Declaration of Economic Independence. Speakers and performers will include Pete Seeger, Holly Near, Arlo Guthrie, Richard Dreyfus, Barry Commoner and George Wald among others.

The PBC has expressed a need for more automobiles in the caravans going to Concord; "We want every seat filled and we hope that people who have cars will link up with the caravans as there are many people who don't have transportation."

Although portions of the PBC Rally and the traditional celebrations will be held at the same time, due to cooperative planning there should be no conflict.

The UMass caravans will assemble at the parking lots on University Drive across from Southwest. They will leave for Concord at 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. tomorrow afternoon. People are asked to bring cars, warm clothing, rain gear, food, water, hot beverage, and a ground cloth.

★ Women's health issues to share concerns and get questions answered." Women counselors are also available to Room to Move.

If the incident of a problem pregnancy arises, the Health Center offers help and guidance from counselor Elaine Fraser, who objectively and confidentially discusses all possible alternatives with the woman who may decide to either marry, or bring her child up as a single parent. Also, she might give the baby up for adoption or have an abortion. Whatever her decision, she will be refered to the appropriate agencies. "The main thing," says Fraser, is that I state the alternatives and let the woman or the couple choose the best route."

Neither abortions nor deliveries are performed at the Infirmary; however, the Health Center does confirm pregnancies, provide initial pre-natal care and administer post-pregnancy care and counseling.

For major gynecological and obstetrical treatment a woman will be referred to a list of physicians from which she can choose. The University's Optional Student Supplementary Insurance plan provides coverage for pregnancy; payment up to $600 for pre-natal care and delivery, or up to $125 for voluntary termination of pregnancy.

"Sometimes I counsel male students with girlfriends at home, for example, in the Boston area. I tell them what they can do to get help." says Fraser.

Writing expert to speak tonight

Elliott L. Biskind, distinguished New York attorney and crusader for the improvement of legal writing, will speak tonight at 8:00 that evening in the Campus Center, Room 168-170, to Pre-Law students and anyone else interested.

Biskind, a member of the N.Y. Bar and Gray's Inn, London, and admitted to practice before the U.S. Court, has served with both the Office of Price Administration and the National Labor Relations Board. His legal specialty, however, is real estate law, on which he has published several books and numerous articles.

Perhaps not coincidentally, Biskind has developed "a missionary spirit" on behalf of clarifying and simplifying legal writing. Besides teaching at New York Law School, he conducts symposia and workshops around the country for law students, practising attorneys, and judges.

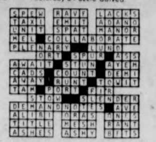
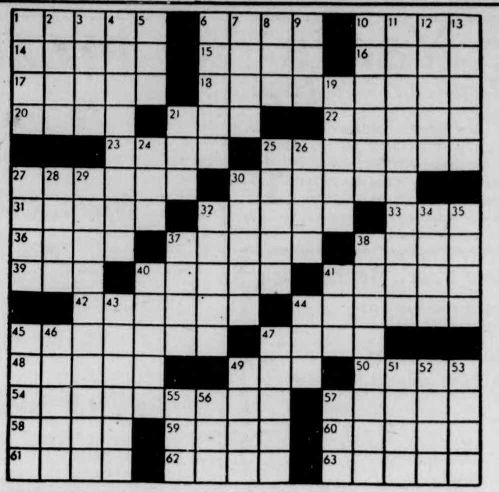
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved





Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, April 17 — Born today, you possess a highly responsive nervous system -- but you know how to keep your nerves, and your emotions, in check so that you do not tend to fly off the handle or over-react to unusual situations or circumstances. You have learned how to make your extremely sensitive nervous system work for you, instead of against you; you have learned when to explode -- or at least when to seem to explode -- and when to keep still, when to fight and when to remain peaceful.

A self-confident and determined person, you are entirely capable of directing yourself toward a rewarding career that utilizes your peak talents. Nevertheless, you are not adverse to asking advice from those with experience in whatever field you choose to enter, for you are wise enough to know that experience is, in the long run, of more value than initial ability, that "know-how" is more rewarding than desire. Thus, though you are independent, you are not stubbornly, unwisely so.

Although you yourself are not one to tell others what to do or how to do it, you are a willing listener to those who would tell you. You know that obstacles that have been in the way of the success of others will not be otherwise for you. You also know that those things which have proven beneficial to others should prove the same for you: thus, you keep your ears open -- and learn! And in the learning, you shorten your own route to the top.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Friday, April 18

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Recognize a good thing when you see it and you may be able to make the kinds of gain you've only dreamed of hitherto. Keep alert to new ideas.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Introduce a new idea to those in authority and you may discourage advancement going to another. Everything must be on the up and up, however.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — This is an excellent day for self-promotion. You can make yourself important to another if you gain the facts and figure your need.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Place safety ahead of all other considerations today. There are those who would gladly see you out of the running on the employment scene.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Pleasant surprises are in store for the Leo who is willing to take a chance with his immediate future. Don't be alarmed by questions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Artistic and business talents combine today to make material gains almost impossible to achieve. Consider commercial aspects of your creativity.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Present your ideas in a package; then the one you are most eager to see implemented will be "bought" along with all the rest.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Whether at home or on the employment scene, make it your business to inform interested parties of your objective. Seek aid in the morning.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You would do well to push present projects to their conclusion. This is not the time to leave endeavors hanging fire. Make a special effort at evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — This is an exciting day for the Capricorn able to wait his turn early in the day. If you turn a deaf ear to gossip, you win out in the end.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Approach problems from another's point of view. This will exercise your compassionate nature and bring you quickly to reasonable solutions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Test your powers of concentration. If you are able to stick to the work at hand in the midst of all manner of distractions, you make gains in the afternoon.

Sox stop staggering Yanks

NEW YORK [UPI] — Rookie Fred Lynn matched his previous major league output with a pair of home runs Wednesday and Carl Yastrzemski added a two-run circuit to power the Boston Red Sox to a 4-2 victory over the slumping New York Yankees.

Lynn, a two-time All America at USC who joined the Red Sox for 15 games at the tailend of last season, led off the third inning with his first homer of the year off loser Pat Dobson and then led off the fifth with another homer off reliever Gary Gura.

The 23-year-old centerfielder also was on base with a game opening single when Yestrzemski drove his second homer of the year into the right field bullpen in the first inning.

Rick Wise, who had lost his only previous lifetime decision to the Yankees, took advantage of the power explosion to complete his first game since last April 13 and gain his first victory since June 23.

The veteran righthander got into occasional trouble as he allowed nine hits and two walks. He was scored upon in the second inning as New York suffered its sixth loss in seven outings.

In other Athletic Council business, McInerney presented an April 2nd memo listing proposed personnel changes for next year. The ten proposed changes include: the reappointment of Tom Dunn as gymnastics coach, with collateral assignments in swimming and possibly track, the offering to Russ Kidd of the position of head soccer coach, and the reorganization of the golf and track programs to include women.

The last two points drew the most reaction from the Council. Bob Spousta, women's crew coach and also a member of the Council expressed a tremendous degree of displeasure at the proposals.

"That completely floors me," exclaimed Spousta who said it was incomprehensible that "golf is going to get going before crew after four years."

"I feel we've been completely ignored and so do the women on the team," continued Spousta who felt it was absurd to make two womens teams part of varsity sports before crew, a well-established club.

McInerney countered by claiming that several varsity teams would become club teams next year due to financial problems, and that women's crew would be better off staying a club, rather than becoming a varsity outfit and possibly getting cut back next year.

He then said that a "prioritizing of existing programs would take place next year.

When asked by Spousta which sports would be cut, the Athletic Director responded by saying "I don't know; that would just be crystal balling."

Women's softball debuts

The UMass women's softball team will unveil its 1975 edition this afternoon when they journey to Bridgewater State College for a 3:30 contest. Bridgewater State, one of only three teams to defeat the Minutewomen last year, is considered to be one of the toughest squads on the UMass schedule again this year.

Today's opener will feature the debuts of both a new coach and a new face on the pitcher's mound.

Jackie Elliot, the team's first year coach will be making her initial appearance on the sidelines. She says of the upcoming tilt "They defeated us last year, but I understand that they've lost some players. We're still anticipating a very competitive game."

Lu Ann Fletcher (yes you heard that name before), the blue chip freshwomen from Auburn, Massachusetts has been tabbed by Coach Elliot to hurl the opener. Co-captains Chris Basile and Theresa Pudlo will be counted on to provide much of the UMass punch.

After today's game the team will enjoy a five day breather before returning to action April 22 against Westfield State in UMass' home opener.

Racketeers set for tough battle

By BILL EDELSTEIN

The UMass tennis team will receive their first batch of home cooking (a dubious privilege) since April 8 when they fact M.I.T. this afternoon at the Boyden Courts (3:00 start).

During their voyage through various New England states, UMass garnered victories against Rhode Island (7-2) and New Hampshire (6-3) while being edged 5-4 by defending Yankee Conference Champion Vermont :all three of the racketeers losses have been 5-4 toenail-biters; betwixt the two wins.

The Minutemen, who have had their problems in scenic Amherst, dropping their first two home attempts by identical 5-4 verdicts, figure to have a good battle on their rackets in trying to accumulate the cube root of 125 points needed to defeat the Engineers, who have beaten both Connecticut and Boston College.

"It should be a real tight match," enthused Coach Steve Kosakowski. "No more than 5-4 or 6-3 either way. It'll be settled by the doubles like just about all our matches this year."

Bill Karol and Barnaby Kalan have yet to lose a singles match (Bill won the supreme court versus UMH) and that double racketted, two headed, Karol-Kalan tennis menace, which has been spending its spare time chewing up opponents and occasionally spitting them out, will be breathing fire (you'd have halitosis too if you ate ten opponents) once again, today.

"Ever since he lost that practice match, Barnaby has steadily improved," lauded the coach. "He's proven that he's one hell of a competitor.

"Karol will play first singles against M.I.T. He showed he was good enough to play there by beating Vermont's number three man (UVM's third singles folk played number one for the the Catamounts last season). Karol's a smart kid and he's got more potential than anybody that's ever come here."

Art Kloutier will be at sixth singles in place of the erratic Dave Abramoff, while the rest of the lineup remains unaltered for the match with the Engineers.

Continuing Education Instructors

The University of Massachusetts Division of Continuing Education is now accepting proposals for workshops (without credit) to be offered during the fall of 1975.

Individuals are invited to submit a resume, workshop outline, workshop description, space requirements, and three references for the catalog deadline of May 2, 1975.

The Division has identified 75 potential workshops to be offered this fall. For a list of these workshops and general instructions, write:

JV Crossmen topple Crimson; rally in third

Midfielder Mike Altote's goal midway through the third period broke open a tight game and sparked the junior varisty lacrosse team to an 11-8 triumph over Harvard's freshman squad yesterday in Cambridge.

UMass took a 3-1 first period lead, but the Crimson bounced back in the second stanza and the Minutemen stickers led only 5-4 at the half. Altote's tally was part of a UMass surge in the third quarter as coach Russ Kidd's charges outscored Harvard 4-1. The sophomore middle capped a fast break with his momentous goal.

Dave Lautman, Mike Gongus and Carl Leone, a triad of first-year attackmen, netted three goals apiece, while Ben Friedel scored the only other goal.

Kidd had praise for defensemen Bob Morse, Joe Perry and Dave Patterson, as well as freshman goalie Jim Kenny. The contest marked the first competition for the JV lacrossmen, who travel to Dean Junior College, Saturday, for their second game.

Stickwomen swarm 9-1

By RON ARENA

We have another winner here at UMass. The women's lacrosse club opened its season yesterday visiting Stoneleigh, a women's prep school and if the results are any indication of their quality of play, it should be a fine season.

The women, using a combination of their A and B teams, clobbered the host team 9-1. Led by Ginny Stokes and Evie Sneeden with two goals apiece, the contest was never in doubt. Explained player-captain Lori Nazar, "We probably could have beaten them with just our B team." Other goal-scorers were Debbie Belitsos, Betsey Gammons, Barb Martelle, Nancy O'Neil, and Sally Bog. Mary Murray gave an excellent performance in the nets, her first game action at that position.

The club had such a large turnout this year that four teams, A-D were compiled. Their opponents have but one team, so giving action to all players becomes a problem. Judging by the quality of the opposition, either the A team or the B team will compete, or as in yesterday's case, a combination of the two.

Since the three-year club (technically they're a group) has no RSO standing, they are not funded. Therefore, all but one of their contests is home, because they cannot afford officials.

The women, hoping to become a varsity team, have begun initiating action in that direction.

Their next game will be today as the women visit Northfield with a 4:00 starting time.

JV baseballers tie AIC

By CHAS O'CONNOR

The outstanding efforts of three UMass junior varsity pitchers went for naught yesterday afternoon at Earl Loyden field when the JV game against American International College ended in a 1-1 tie after 11 innings.

The AIC team, composed of JV and varsity players, was forced to leave because of transportation difficulties after the 11th inning had been completed.

Coach Jeff McKay of UMass had decided previous to the game that he would use three different pitchers to ready the staff for Friday's doubleheader with Springfield College. Tom Nigro pitched the first three innings, allowing no runs and one hit. He was followed by Chris Kirby, who duplicated Nigro's performance over the next thee innings. Chip Warren got more work than he had expected, being forced to hurl the final five innings in the pressure-packed contest. Warren allowed one run and two hits.

UMass tallied its run in the third inning. Art Wienslaw planted a double into right center field, continued to third on an error and scored when the throw from center was bobbled by the shortstop.

The Minutemen held the lead until the seventh inning. AIC tied the score when rightfielder Dick Phelps reached first on a fielder's choice and scored on a double to left center by Ray Oslinski — a ball that UMass centerfielder John Kearney almost caught.

Gorillas crumble Crimson, 15-7

By BEN CASWELL

With the ease of a correctly wired light switch the UMass lacrosse team turned their superiority over Harvard on and off yesterday, on their way to beating the Crimson, 15-7.

I say a correctly wired light switch because the switch being in good working order meant that Garber's Gorillas were controlling the game.

At times though, it appeared that the switch might have some faulty wiring. Then it seemed that the on and off occurrence was not what the stickers from Amherst were controlling. Rather it was some serious malfunctions in their play that needed to be repaired to gain this win over their Ivy League opponent.

In the first period the light was on for so long that it almost burnt itself out. Behind the play-making of attackman Billy O'Brien (the first four assists of the game) and the scoring of John Martin (three goals in that first period) the Gorillas jumped out to a 6-1 first quarter lead.

O'Brien was hitting the man cutting through the middle in front of the Harvard cage with precision-made passes. Martin had received two of those passes which he converted for scores.

Jeff Spooner, who got the first goal of the game and gave UMass a lead they never lost, also combined with O'Brien.

Early in the second period Harvard closed to within three goals (the closest they ever got).

With the score 6-3 Andy Scheffer, playing midfield, and Frank Garahan at attackman, both hit for UMass to give them a five goal lead again.

Bill O'Brien (2) has two Harvard defenders beat around the back of the net. Crimson goalie LeRoy Thompson (1) appears to be laughing, but O'Brien and teammates rippled the cords frequently in 15-7 victory yesterday at Harvard.

The first half ended with both teams trading goals, as the Gorillas held a 9-4 edge.

So the light flickered somewhat in the second period. Sometimes it seemed as the Gorillas' wiring was sound and Harvard was turning on their own light. Other times it seemed that the Gorillas' wires were not intact.

A natural letdown is what some might call UMass' second, and beginning of the third period performance. After being way ahead a team can get a little cocky, somewhat stale, somewhat lazy, or any combination of the aforementioned.

"It's almost not good to play that strong at the beginning," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "If you stay even at the start then everyone plays good and you don't have to worry about getting ahead, then having the other team comeback," said Garber.

But this on-off method of play proved to be kind of exciting as Harvard closed to within three goals again. With UMass co-captain defenseman Billy Blaustein out for an illegal check, Harvard attackman Jim Quinn scored a man-up goal making the score 9-6 with over half of the third period still remaining.

Then the Gorillas, lead by some deliberate play-making by Jeff Spooner and some scrappy hustle by Peter Connolly, scored the next six goals to put the game out of Harvard's reach. Needless to say, the wiring was very tight in this segment for UMass and the light shone brightly.

Connolly, playing midfield rather than his accustomed attackman position, started things rolling with a good head fake and up-high shot to make the score 10-6. Spooner got the assist from behind the cage.

Kevin Patterson got the next two scores. Patterson did not play that much and those were his only two scores of the day.

In the last period UMass got more penalties than they should have if the game was at all close. But the Gorillas, with good ball control and very tough close-defense from Billy Blaustein, Kurt Olson and Kenny Michaud were dominating the game, so the penalties could be absorbed without too much trouble.

SCOOP SHOTS — people were saying that this was the best Harvard team they'd seen in three or four years..."Our guys always respect the Ivy League," said coach Garber.

Springfield walks away, 8-4; UMass hurlers ineffective

By BILL DOYLE

Springfield College walked all over the UMass varsity baseball team yesterday afternoon at Springfield, as the Chiefs were issued eleven bases on balls by UMass pitchers. Springfield whipped the Minutemen 8-4 in a two hour, forty-five minute contest.

UMass coach Dick Bergquist refused to blame the wildness of his pitchers on the cold, windy weather. "The weather had nothing to do with it," he explained. "We just didn't have any pitching."

"Jerry Erb (the starter and loser) had good stuff but he just couldn't get it over the plate," Bergquist said. "He looked good down south and in practice last week but he didn't look good at all today. (John) McManus (who relieved Erb in the first inning) didn't have anything. He couldn't put the ball where he wanted it. Pete Rankowitz (who relieved McManus in the second) pitched well to a couple of batters and then he got wild. (Rich) Kelly (who relieved Rankowitz after the fifth) only pitched well in comparison to the others. He should be able to do better than what he showed too."

The four pitchers only allowed seven Springfield hits but the walks and the constant 3-2 pitches kept them in trouble.

The Springfield pitching wasn't all that sharp either, as nine Minutemen walked. Started Mike Lorion lasted only one inning, as he was lifted after walking the first three batters in the second inning when UMass got all its runs.

But winning reliever Gary Donahue knuckled and curved UMass the rest of the way on only three hits, although he kept himself in constant trouble by issuing six free passes.

Most of the game's action took place in the first two innings, which lasted an hour and five minutes. After a double play got Springfield out of a jam in the top of the first, Erb walked Springfield's Paul Herdeman, gave up a single to Vaughn Smith, and then walked three more, forcing in two runs.

McManus relieved Erb and was greeted by the first batter he faced, Dan Laurenti, for a two run single up the middle, before he retired the side.

Down 4-0, UMass pulled to within one by scoring three in the top of the second. After Lorion walked the bases full, reliever Donahue gave up a force out to let in one run and Mike Koperniak knocked in UMass' other two runs with a single.

Catcher John Healy — overloaded with his equipment.

Springfield came right back with two in the bottom of the second making the score 6-3. Two more walks and a ground rule double by Phil Elhage knocked in one run and a single by Kevin Keith produced the other.

UMass had only four hits in the game but bases on balls gave the Minutemen numerous opportunities to score.

Down by three runs in the top of the fifth the Minutemen had a chance to close the gap. Two more of the seemingly endless walks put runners on first and second with clean-up hitter Jerry Mondalto up and hot-hitting Jim Black on deck. Mondalto was called out on strikes and while Black what up, Koperniak, the runner on second, broke for third and was thrown out by ten feet ending the threat.

"He went on his own," Coach Bergquist said. "It wasn't a heads-up play since we were down by three and there were two out but you can't blame the loss on one play."

UMass got its other run in the eighth when Mondalto hit a homer to left that was hit so hard that it didn't even begin to rise until it reached the fence.

Springfield added single runs in the fifth inning on Smith's single and in the sixth without benefit of a hit.

"After looking so good yesterday (beating BC, 12-0)," Bergquist said, "Springfield made us look like an ordinary team. I'm really looking forward to playing Springfield again." He'll get his chance on April 30 at Lorden Field.

UMass may leave YanCon for EIBL

By DAVE EIBEL

Athletic Director Frank McInerney announced yesterday that UMass has been invited to join the Eastern Independent Basketball League which is slated to begin play in the 1976-77 basketball season.

The announcement came during a meeting of the Athletic Council.

Seven teams have decided to join the league: Duquesne, George Washington, Penn State, Villanova, Rutgers, Pittsburgh and West Virginia.

The offer to UMass, according to Assistant AD Bob O'Connell, was conveyed in a telephone conversation with Pittsburgh's Walt Cummings about three weeks ago and was repeated by Penn State a week later.

Syracuse, originally the eighth team, pulled out of the running when they failed to get the permission of university authorities.

McInerney termed the offer as "fairly firm" and one that the Athletic Department had accepted. Before the Minutemen can join the league it would have to be okayed by Physical Education Dean David Bischoff, and probably the entire UMass administration.

In order to be in the league, and play ten league games in '76-'77, and 14 in '77-'78, UMass would almost definitely have to leave the Yankee Conference in basketball, a move that could have serious repercussions for the conference as a whole, according to O'Connell.

"If we go, then UConn and Rhody went," said O'Connell, "then schools like Maine, and Vermont might be ruined."

O'Connell went on to say that financially, UMass could gain a great deal from the new league.

"They'd run their tournament like the ACC," said the Assistant AD, "which would make it very lucrative. The league wouldn't have a commissioner so the eight teams would split the net earnings evenly. The money UMass would get would go right into the Barber Fund (athletic scholarship fund) to help all sports," he said.

Celts run past Rockets

BOSTON [AP] — Dave Cowens scored 28 points, John Havlicek scored 23 and Jo Jo White hit for 21 Wednesday night as the Boston Celtics whipped the Houston Rockets 112-100 to take a 2-0 lead in their National Basketball Association playoff series.

The Celtics broke open a close game with a 38-point third period explosion and breezed the rest of the way in taking complete command of the Eastern Conference best-of-seven semifinal series.

The Rockets surprised Boston's defending NBA champions by going out to a 14-8 first period lead. Houston made it 18-12 and then 20-13 on the shooting of Kunnert before Boston came back and inched in front 27-26 in the closing seconds of the period.

UMass budget cuts and

"The Great American Dream Freeze"

by Reid Fishman

It wasn't at all like it used to be. There were no signs waving or spontaneous outbursts of uncontrolled enthusiasm. There were no groups or coalitions demanding equal time. There were no police with riot outfits waiting and watching. There wasn't any conservative opposition or administrative defense. It was all well organized.

It is our duty to educate ourselves and our parents

Around the edges, you could hear laughter or an occasional joke about "the old days", and you could see people walking by hurriedly, looking, but paying little attention to the slightly over 800 people assembled in front of the Student Union Building.

It was billed as a "Campus RALLY Against Cutbacks", and the flyer read, "Join the fight. Come to hear what the cutbacks mean to you and to your university. Plan for further action to oppose the cuts and defend our education."

Inasmuch as the information purpose is concerned, the event was a complete success. The program was well designed and featured speakers versed in the subject matter and fully prepared to deliver their addresses to a crowd that wasn't so ready for the whole affair. It was more of a lecture than a rally, and the crowd was gathered to find out what the budget cuts were all about, and not to register any firm protest at the actions of the administration, the state legislature or the governor.

At another time, a group of that size would've doubtlessly taken over a building or marched on Whitmore for an answer. They would've organized themselves and demanded their right to be heard by the administrators and legislators.

But not this crowd... This was more like Sunday afternoon in the bleachers with sporadic applause and a "Yeah man!" thrown in here and there. They were there to watch and listen and applaud when someone said something that sounded right. They were there to find out all they could or just to pass the time between lectures. They were there as students and not as college activists.

A similar rally at Brown University this week produced a turnout of 80 per cent of the student body, who overwhelmingly determined to strike. Yet striking was far from the minds of the 800 people gathered at UMass on Tuesday, as they listened to the words of protest.

Peter Donohue of the CPB (Coalition for a People's Budget) questioned in whose interest the cuts are being made and Sam Bowles, author of Dollars and Sense, quoted Northeastern students as calling the problem, "The Great American Dream Freeze".

Perhaps the most eloquent of the day's speakers was John Bracey, Chairperson of the Afro-American Studies Department, who remarked wisely that "If there's not a movement to make people do something then it's not going to get done."

That was the problem with the rally. There was no movement, aside from the usual shuffle in and out of the Student Union, and even that didn't seem affected by Miguel Rivera's plea for equal educational rights.

UMass isn't like it used to be. Most of the students were too young during the sixties to take part in the peace movement, and they could only watch the news reports of the sourest demonstrations and of Chicago and of Kent State. They are not products of the "revolution generation". They have watched the affairs of the sixties through the eyes of Harry Reasoner, David Brinkley and Walter Cronkite and have based their conclusions on those accounts.

In a time and place where a demonstration is as foreign as a coffee house or a peace decal, the gathering of 800 UMies behind anything other than pot legalization is a certain accomplishment. But the organization and motivation of those participants into an effective working coalition is a much more difficult assignment.

And as the last few speakers continued to hammer the message across to anyone who might be passing by for the first time, I walked through the diminished crowd and smelled pot and listened to someone talk about the work they had to do for the week. It was all over and 800 informed students returned home to finish their schoolwork.

A reminder that the sixtics are over

The demonstration was successful in beginning the re-education process for those who attended, and in taking one step towards a return to student activism. But its effects were marginal and probably unable to contend with the amazing university-student turnover rate.

It was a rally of the individual. People were there to protect their own future interests and not to voice opposition to an unjust war or to racial oppression. It was a seventies affair with seventies material overtones...a drastic departure from the idealist decade before.

I spoke with members of the gathering at various occasions, and although few seemed optimistic about the chances of success, all agreed that "It's a beginning." I glanced about the faces as they drifted away. Some were enthusiastic and optimistic, while still other reflected their disgust at the information presented. I recognized some as faces I had seen three years earlier storming Dickinson Hall. They seemed more mellow now.

Onion dipped

Fond Memories,
Installment: E

Remember trying to avoid malnutrition? Not just in the Dining Commons, that's a whole different trip. But those weekends and times being off the meal ticket. You waited and found all sorts of diseases to get off the meal ticket and listened to your mother warm you that it is not good to have on your record that you throw up in crowds. The first week or so the Galloping Gormet had nothing on you, balanced meals that really filled you the way the D.C. never did. Then the novelty wore off and the money ran out. You began to think that vegetarianism is a really fine ideal. And they you found the ultimate: peanut butter. You started eating peanut butter on oatmeal, bananas, apples, pretzels, anything you could get your paws on. You started eating peanut butter right out of the jar: all the world's a peanut butter jar.

Weekends you discovered the great UMie food: onion dip. When you lock back at your college years you know you will see them as one big bowl of onion dip. You started with regular potato chips, then found ruffles. That lasted until the first time that you got sick after an entire bag.

Your best friend the nutrition major reads you all the diseases you can get from not eating the things you're not eating and those you can get from the little that you are. You realize that you haven't lost any weight, and getting away from the Dining Commons hasn't even helped your zits. The candy counter in the Student Union sees you more than the supermarket.

Just about the time that you start eating small animals, you meet a dude that you know from freshman year. He looks healthy and is drinking a pitcher of beer by himself. He says he hasn't seen you in the D.C. lately and you explain. He gets a big smile and says:

"You must be eating like a queen!"

Kudos: Recognition of women for women

To the editor:

I would like to thank Julie Beth Beckett for her insightful and unfortunately all-too-true examination of the status of women in the UMASS Theater Dept. The lack of good female roles and the need for more women directors is well covered by Ms. Beckett. I would like to give special attention to Ms. Beckett's comment about the lack of women playwrights. Aide from the UMASS production of Lillian Hellman's The Children's Hour and a Smith production of Hellman's The Little Foxes I am aware of no other major area production of a play written by a woman this year. I find this situation deplorable especially since there are many plays writeen by women other than the ubiquitous Ms. Hellman.

The problem here is similar to the situation faced by students of poetry and fiction — women writers have been ignored and erased from our world-consciousness by a culture that acknowledges only male values and lives as meaningful and 'dramatic'. Luckily women novelists and poets are being rediscovered and encouraged to share their 'unique' visions of realty. It is time now to accord similiar recognition to women dramatists: to women of the past such as Zona Gale, Susan Glaspell, Rachel Crothers, Jane Bowles, Ruth Franken, Alice Gerstenberg, Clare Kummer; to women of the present such as Megan Terry, Rosalyn Drexler, Myrna Lamb, Rochelle Owens, Maria Irene Fornes, Alice Childress, etc. Not all of these women are 'great' dramatists but then again few male playwrights are either. What is important is their attempt to illuminate society and the man-woman condition. Incidentally, most of these plays include an abundance of good, meaty parts for women.

I would encourage the UMASS Theater Dept. to seek out plays written by women and to actively encourage their production. I challenge all women interested in drama to press demands for more women directors and for more woman-oriented roles and dramas. I urge struggling women dramatists to write on and to insist on productions of their work. Recognition of women in drama is long overdue and I, for one, do not wish to wait much longer.

"...a crowd of hot angry (but enthusiastic) people, who want to see something they believe in."
—Giovanna at the
'75 Star Trek Convention in New York

And with that one line, tiredly thrown in during conversation among new friends, the whole ST convention experience was summarized. For the benefit of those who've never even heard of a Star Trek Con, let alone been to one, it is sheer, giddy, madness. It's always hard to judge exactly how many people show up for any large convention, but this year's Con (my second, incidentally) boasted of around 12,000. A lot of crowding, a lot of frustration and confusion sometimes, but mostly a lot of good feeling.

Activities at a Con include film of ST episodes, the Dealer's Room, the Art Show and the Federation Masquerade. Of course no ST Con is complete without the appearance of the stars of the show.

Although the filmed episodes of Star Trek are scheduled at the same time as other important events at a Con, and even though they run from 10 a.m. to 3 a.m., attendance is always high. One interesting thing that was observed at the film showing: if you come into the auditorium after the episode has started, you can see Trekers all over the place, mouthing the lines with the actors on screen, because they know the words so well! While seemingly amazing to some, it's par for the course to ST fans.

The Dealer's, or Huckster's Room, is the place to lay your hands on, for a slight fee, almost any piece of Star Trek paraphanalia imaginable. The Dealer's Room is why Star Trek Conventioneers don't think about leaving home for a Con without at least $75.00. Buttons, pens, booklets, T-shirts, slides, tape recordings, jewelry, patches, stationary, greeting cards; if the human mind can conceive it, the dealers will have it or can get it. The Huckster's Room usually has other unique displays set up if you're really into spending your money, such as items of nostalgia, Astrology, Witchcraft and Comic Book Collections to name a few.

Star Trek Conventioneers don' t think about leaving home for a Con without at least $75.00. Buttons, pens, booklets, T-shirts, slides, tape recordings, jewelry, patches, stationary, greeting cards; if the human mind can conceive it, the dealers will have it or can get it. The Huckster's Room usually has other unique displays set up if you're really into spending your money, such as items of nostalgia, Astrology, Witchcraft and Comic Book Collections to name a few.

The Art Show runs a close second to the Dealer's Room in terms of universitality and creativity. It is where anyone with artistic talent of any sort can register, and present their art at the Con gallery, not only for all to see but for art awards as well. Some of the award titles are: "Most Original", "Most Authentic", etc. The Art forms this year ranged from an exhibit of doll making, all in fairly good likeness of ST main characters, to a fantastic 13 foot high full color painting of the shows' main stays in the transporter with the one word title: "Energize". And if you consider your piece good enough, there's also an art auction (the "Energize" piece was marked Not For Sale).

William Shatner (Captain Kirk) and James Doonan (Scotty) together on Earth for the first time in six years.

And speaking of imagination, we have to mention the Federation Masquerade. Coupled with that imagination, I think, is a large amount of nerve. It's not easy to stand in line for sometimes 3 hours, and then parade in front of 10,000 folks looking like a refugee from "Let's Make A Deal". Another point on which these people deserve credit is for the obvious amount of time that goes into making a costume as authentic as possible. And considering that all you may have to work from is an occasional quick glance in the TV show, it's no mean feat. Among this year's entries where "Spock Boy Walton", a Kirk and Spock team ala Groucho and Harpo Marx, and in the non-ST category, the Planet of the Apes were well represented as well as an amazingly good Spiderman. Also worthy of note was a fantastic effort put forth by Helen Wood of Mount Holyoke who arrived as the beautifully Elaan of Troyius, from the ST episode of the same title.

And now for the part of the Con that no one dare miss and that everyone suffers for, the appearance of the stars. (I must say suffers because it's not easy to stand in sardine formation amongst a crowd of 12,000 in a hall originally planned for no more than 5,000. But it's easy, if you take shallow breaths and fight to hold off those unnecessary bodily functions, like going to the bathroom. This year the featured guests were William Shatner (Capt. Kirk), Majel Barett (Nurse Chapel), George Takei (Helmsman Sulu), and last but not least, the "Great Bird of the Universe" himself, Gene Roddenberry, the creator of Star Trek. An extra pleasant surprise was an appearance by Robert Lansing (Gary Seven), who avid fans will remember from the episode "Assignment: Earth". The Creme de la Creme of course, was Bill Shatner. Though it may in fact be six or seven years ago since the last ST episode was filmed, it's still next to impossible to convince fans that Capt. Kirk has forgotten those rehearsed lines long ago. ("But I just saw him saying them yesterday!") Dispite this, Shatner has a very easy-going manner. No matter how inane the question, he comes over with the same straight forward graces which with he handled the crew of the Enterprise. The crowd can't help but respond favorably.

One factor that you come upon in discussion of ST fans is, attitude. Trekkers come from a wide spectrum of ages and all walks of life, many of them learned scientists and scholars. This is said to renounce claims of throngs of immature, hero-worshipping preteenagers with nothing better to do. These slurs are seemingly spread by people who need an excuse for their non-involvement with Star Trek.

One important thing to realize is that ST Conventioneers are united by two factors: one, their obvious and overt fascination with the Star Trek phenomenon and what it represents, and two, their blatant and equally obvious lack of fear or concern at the prospect of being stampeded and-or trampled at a ST Con.

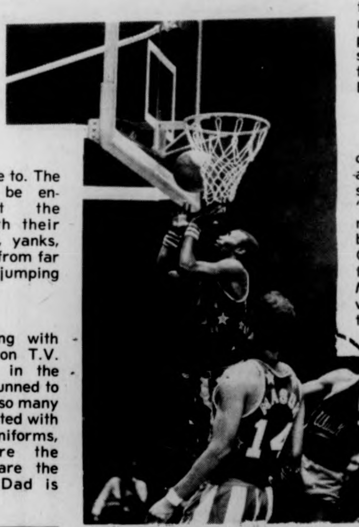
The Globetrotters' dribble doldrums

by Clam & Duck

In Performance
The Harlem Globetrotters
April 2, 1975
Springfield Civic Center



"Ladies and gentlemen—America's ambassador of good will for over 70 million people—THE HARLEM GLOBETROTTERS."

The introduction is the same—the results are the same—an overwhelming ovation to a group of (millionaires) minorities who are doing so much for the United States. Right? But, as famous as they are, few people can name any Globetrotter other than Meadowlark Lemon or Curly Neal, then again, they don't have to. The people have come to be entertained. And out the Globetrotters come with their Chaplinish act of pranks, yanks, pokes, and jokes, looking from far away like nine black jumping beans on a windy day.

The kids are screaming with delight—they saw them on T.V. before they fell asleep in the chair—and were mildly stunned to see the Globetrotters miss so many shots. Mom, who is enchanted with the red, white, and blue uniforms, is wondering who are the Globetrotters and who are the Washington Generals. Dad is taking a longer look—another missed shot, travel, offensive foul, palming, no team work, three seconds—and wondering how he thought they might take on the Boston Celtics in a serious game.

Well, after the first ten minute quarter, the kids are marveling about the Trotters' zany ways and silly stuffed shots. The Clam says, "Bring back the plate spinner", in reference to the tedious delays before the main attraction (a German spinning plates; then frisbee champions, John and Mike). At half-time, the oldsters were checking their eyelids, and the youngsters perhaps a little tired of the runaround routine, were disillusioned and wondered how Roone Arledge could make this team look so good on TV.

Then Butler and Fuji played championship ping-pong followed by Gus, who juggled his balls around until the rest of the family (Ursula and Don, the plate spinner) came out and got into the act. The halftime act boosted concession sales.

The old water act, the deflated ball, and the yo-yo ball act were the main attractions in the second half, during which the fans were glad to see a running clock. What made the second half even worse was that Curly Neal and Meadowlark Lemon sat out much of it, and without them, the Globetrotters aren't as good as the teams in Boyden gym on Friday afternoon. The game ended just before the fatal question: "Can we go home now, Daddy?"

"Captain, we're being probed."

"Source, lieutenant?"

"That girl sitting over by the door."

"Spock?"

"She's blond captain. Medium height and weight, about twenty years of age and certainly attractive."

"Scotty?"

"We've got the power captain but manuverability is a question."

"I'll worry about manuvering Mr. Scott. You just get us over there."

"Aye, captain."

"Lieutenant, hailing frequencies open, I want a clear line of communication to that girl."

"Frequencies open and all channels clear sir."

"All right lieutenant, give me ship to ship."

"Done sire."

"Spock, tie all communications into the computer. Zulu, have shields on standby."

"Just standby sir?"

"You've got your orders navigator."

"Captain, I..."

"Mr. Spock, I'm hoping I won't have to use them at all. I'm counting on the other ships ability to sense whether our shields are up or not."

"As a sign of good faith."

"Exactly."

"Almost there captain."

"Get us in close Mr. Scott. Lieutenant, voice communication please. Computer..."

"Working."

"Lieutenant, put it on the screen."

"Excuse me, do you mind if I sit down?"

"No, please."

"I didn't realize this place got so crowded."

"Is this your first time here?"

"Well, I've only been in Amherst since classes began."

"Spock, initial contact."

"Good eye to eye contact, initial primping...she seems responsive Captain."

"Good. Scotty, how's our energy level."

"Flying high captain."

"Standard orbiting procedures helmsman."

"What's your major?"

"Education. Well, mostly teaching; Maybe third graders."

"Where would you finally like to end up?"

"I don't know really. I've thought of Boston but..."

"Yea, I'm thinking about Boston myself."

"Sensor report coming in captain."

"Go ahead Spock."

"First impressions indicate she's a bit shy, introverted, with minor insecurities."

"Computer."

"Working"

"Inter-personal relationship status."

"Insufficient data."

"Have you been here long?"

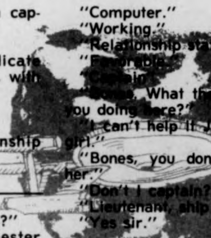
"I'm a second semester sophomore."

"Do you go home on weekends?"

"I used to but my boyfriend and I broke up."

"Was he your high school sweetheart?"

"I guess. We sort of grew apart."



"Computer."

"Working."

"Relationship status."

"Favorable."

"Captain."

"Bones, What the Sam Hill are you doing here?"

"I can't help it Jim. I like this girl."

"Bones, you don't even know her."

"Don't I captain?"

"Lieutenant, ship to ship."

"Yes sir."

"You know, it's funny, but I don't even know you and yet it seems like I've known you for such a long time. I'd like to see you again."

"Red alert! Lieutenant, brace for impact. Scotty get ready to get us out of here, fast.

"That's very flattering but I'm already dating a guy here."

"Oh. How long have you two been going out?"

"For about a year now. He'd be here except he's helping a friend move out of the dorm."

"Shields up Mr. Zulu. Scotty, all stop. Prepare for emergency warp speed. Spock, damage report."

"A direct hit captain. Dilithium crystals took a beating but we can recover."

"How long Spock."

"We need to find another source of energy."

"Zulu, get us out of here. Lieutenant UHURA, break off communications."

"Well, it was nice talking to you."

"I'm sorry."

"I'm just wondering what you're doing here if you're involved with another guy."

"I like to dance."

"Warp factor five Mr. Zulu."

"Warp factor five captain."

"Bones, will you be alright?"

"Damn it Jim, I thought for sure..."

"I know Bones. You always think it's for sure."

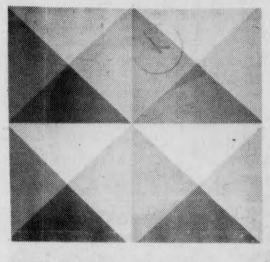
Vibrant colors in geometric designs



by Judith Wolinsky-Soloway

When Jim Kirby says that every one of his paintings weighs a ton, he's not joking. His canvasses are the walls of buildings on the University of Massachusetts campus.

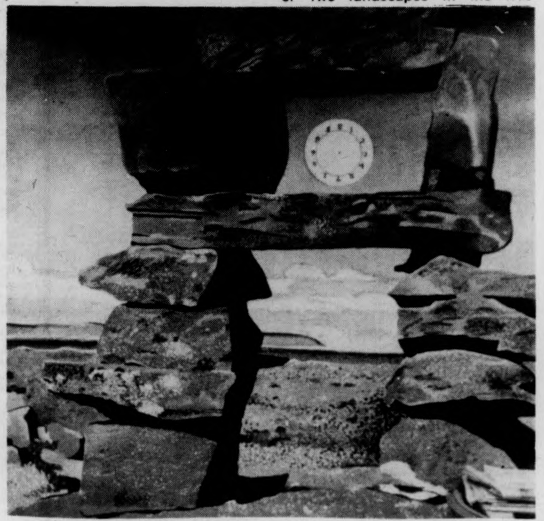
A junior majoring in studio art with emphasis in painting, the Boston native carries photographs of his murals, much as a proud parent carries proof of his progeny.

Flagging him down for an interview meant locating him at his latest "canvas", a vibrant Alaskan rockscape in the Financial Aid Office where Jim was packing up his tools.

Relaxing on one of the few overstuffed couches in the Whitmore Administration Building and lighting up the first of a constant chain of cigarettes, Jim explained the history of his unusual enterprise.

"I transferred here from Boston's New England School of Art where I was painting on 4' x 6' masonite panels. My teachers there liked to work on big surfaces. Now I do, too." he added.

His first "commission" came last summer while he was involved in a work-study program here. Several administrators helped him make work contacts in Whitmore, where one said he would like Jim to paint a mural. Although relatively small, the mural in the Public Affairs Office is visible from the hallway and still generates a lot of interest. Some of the passers-by have become clients, as requests for his services have mushroomed.



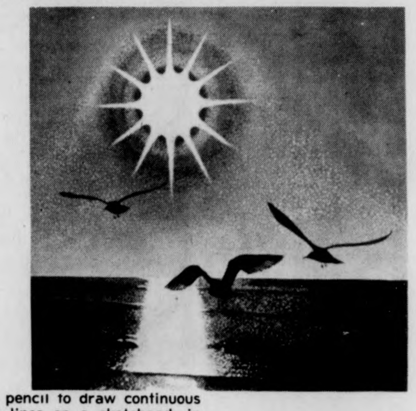
For his murals, Jim is earning six Advanced Painting credits. With the guidance and advice of Nelson Stevens, his faculty adviser who has created huge indoor and outdoor murals of his own, Jim has learned a lot.

Gesturing with a cigarette clenched between two fingers, Jim described his two murals in Crampton and Patterson dorm lounges. He carries glossy photographs of them in his portfolio. One is a 15' x 12' geometric design of bright swirling colors and the other is a 10' by 8' blood-red sunset on a black background.

"I personally like working with round geometric designs. But when I know the person who is commissioning the painting doesn't like my modern designs, I put one or two landscapes in the five samples they have to choose from," he admitted.

In fact, two of the four paintings recently done in the Financial Aid Office are the rockscape, taken from a nature magazine, and a seascape, complete with seagulls, from a calendar. The paintings are drastic changes from the earlier modernistic works that Jim prefers. But in them he used the vibrant colors found in his geometric designs.

Tracing with his finger over a colored pencil sketch of one of his original designs, Jim bent forward to explain their origins. First, he uses a pencil to draw continuous curved lines on a sketchpad, in time to taped music, which is often classical. Then Jim outlines the shapes and finally colors and shades each differently.



Isn't the transfer of the exact sketch of magazine photograph to a wall a monumental task?

With the trace of a smile, Jim says he finds it "easy." His experience as a housepainter, carpenter, and pasteup artist for a publishing company helped him develop his own technique for transferring small to large.

"I make a multi-sectional graph on paper and wall and transfer the original section by section," Jim explained.

"The trick is to remember that I'm changing mediums from pencils to paint and I must keep in mind what can and cannot be done with acrylic paints."

After the mural is completed, he covers it with a matte varnish so the walls can be washed easily.

Presently Jim is doing research in anticipation of his next and largest paintings, a 12' x 20' mural in the Room to Move Drop-In Center located in the Student Union. Meanwhile, he says he is trying to line up some murals to do in Boston for this summer.

And when he graduates? Jim's answer is immediate. "Paint murals everywhere: banks, buildings, schools. I would also like to study art in Europe, someday."

And as his appetite and the wall sizes grow large, "Eventually I may hire a helper," Jim admits.

But before he leaves UMass, there are still some buildings on the campus Jim wants to tackle. The new Fine Arts Center is one of them "because it has some great walls."

The question "why do you paint murals" elicits a few moments of silent contemplation from Jim.

"Basically, the opportunity presented itself. I enjoy working on hard surface and prefer painting big things," Jim answered slowly. "It's also one way to avoid art galleries. My paintings are already exhibited as soon as they are painted."

While Jim stubbed out his third cigarette of the hour-long interview and packed up his portfolio, he talked about how the mural paintings he has done have affected his life.

"I see it as the best thing that has ever happened to me. Before, I was pretty aimless but now I know what I want to do — paint murals."

Blow by Blow
JEFF BECK
(Epic PE 33409) time 42:35

"Rude & Smooth" is the motto and nickname for Harvard's champion crew team. They mixed a brash personality that had them competing to see who could moon the most people in Grand Central Station with silken-pure performances in the water that belied the nasties they yelled to opposing crews.

If Mr. Beck had taken a ride along the Charles River in Boston and seen the Rude & Smooth sign painted on one of the railroad bridges the Harvards row under, he might have picked it as a swell monicker for one of his records (right in keeping with the Truth, Beck-Ola, Rough & Ready, Blow by Blow ideal) as well as providing a handle for all the caption writers of the world to hang on the latest shots of his seedy mug, thus achieving that perfect blend of the immediate visual and the overall persona in a few snappy words.

But he didn't.

Anypath, it was the Rude Jeff Beck that we got first, with his Yardbird wailing screeches that lit up our dashboard car radios. He didn't play what were so much licks as wide swipes of oinking, stringed metal clangings, the likes of which you never (Well, I never, either).

After he slashed his way through the Rod Stewart band, blowing one of rock's superfine ensembles apart in the process, he marked time with the Max Middleton "Jeff Beck Group" (although it was pretty fair time that was marked). The BBA disaster, though, was the first real showing of the smooth Beck that yearned to be free. It was really right around the time of his car crash, after the Stewart band was busted up (just before Woodstock, at which they were scheduled to play and where they would certainly have either bombed or ballooned) that the Smooth Mr. Beck emerged. His bits with Stevie "Play It, Jeff" Wonder were the first sign, but it was the BBA, uh, thing, that unveiled Becky of Slushybrook Farm. Even the dementia that "Superstition" turned into at J.B.'s hands was a mere flash. Jeff's easy-going licks aren't nearly as good as the George Bensons of the world. Beck seems to have too much of a rock-us identity to lose himself in the all-too often blend and never stormy world of le guitar smoothe.

(Dear Printer: Put "Rude & Smooth" caption here.)

Zo here he is. No singer, Max Middleton back along with Richard Bailey (drums) and Phil Chen (bass), were last seen on the Tommy soundtrack. Most important, though, is the old geezer George Martin playing Producer. George must figure Jeff's the misplaced Beckavishnu, and oh say, Eric's doing a bit of the reggae, and...

...and not too much really. George's strings are mostly mis-sweet, and though Beck has a few real swipes to say, he doesn't add much to either the Mahariff New or Reggae houses. Side two is the way Stevie Wonder would sound if he couldn't play or sing or move and became an incurable romantic and hired Beck to front the band. I mean, bland.

Once again, a line or two of rave are in order for the ECM label, and producer Manfred Eicher. At the risk of sounding like an advertisement, "the name ECM is your guarantee of quality", or something along those lines. Intelligent music, flawless production. All right, onward:

Nowadays, when most of us associate the name Chick Corea with the banal zizzy-funk of his Return to Forever ventures, the release of the second volume of his 1971 solo recordings comes as a pleasantly painful reminder of the range and depth of expression he can achieve. As in Volume 1, the album is a mixture of both totally free improvisations and variations on known material, usually his own, but on this album including compositions by Thelonius Monk and Wayne Shorter.

Naturally, when discussing contemporary 'jazz' piano, and particularly solo piano, the name of Keith Jarrett is bound to be brough up in comparison. All right, so be it. Corea doesn't have Jarrett's talent for bringing to synthesis a hundred different musical influences simultaneously, but, unlike Jarrett, he brings an intensely human sensitivity to his playing; it is an act of communication. Jarrett's solo piano works often give me the feeling that he's not playing for anyone, not even himself. In other words, Corea's music seems to come from him, whereas Jarrett's seems to come through him; his playing is an act of transmission. Both are excellent in their own right; Jarrett's music is simply more engaging to the intellect, while Corea brings more response from the heart. Enough comparisons. Well, one more: I love this album, but at least Keith Jarrett is still moving forward. (A)

Next we have a record which seems to derive its influences in nearly equal parts from Miles Davis and Pink Floyd, which, as you can imagine, makes for a great deal of spaciness all the way around. Or, to be really fair, imagine Miles Davis, only heavily into electronics in addition to his normal instrumentation. In short, Love, Love is good, but really, really crazed, a recording engineer's nightmare where trombones, saxes, flutes and three different kinds of synthesizers all solo, often simultaneously, over bass and drums repeating a maddening 15-16ths rhythm. It's the bass and drums that remind me of Davis, because they give the listener the comfort of a sense of structure, even though they have nothing much to do with everything else going on, except where the band comes together to touch on a group statement for a few seconds. As I said before, crazed, but with an inner logic of its own, and extremely listenable, thanks in part to the skillful production and engineering which keep every track distinct. No grade for this one just yet; it may take a while.

ECM
THE CREATIVE LABEL

Expansion of clarity through flawless production and flawless music.

Heading (whew!) in a slightly Earthward direction, we come to the third release from Norwegian guitarist Terje Rypdal. Here is assembled a band that could blow the old Mahavishnu Orchestra off the stage, and not by sheer volume, either. Rypdal himself has the intensity of two McLaughlins, and more musical know-how and taste then three. His back-up band consists of bass, electric piano & mellotron, french horn, and percussion; the french horn and mellotron are used in an interestingly lush contrast to the gut sound of the guitar and the incredible drive of the bass-percussion combination (It should be noted here that the mellotron is not used as a Moody Blues-type string filler, but as a solo instrument). But they are not what I would call a 'riffy' band; the emphasis is much more on ensemble playing than on trading solos. Also, they do not rely heavily on the studio for their sound, using very few overdubs.

But there is another side to Terje Rypdal (Side Two, we in the music business call it). Like John McLaughlin, he aspires to compose for orchestra; unlike McLaughlin, he succeeds, for the most part. Side two is taken up by the title cut, which is subtitled, "Image for electric guitar, strings, oboe, and clarinet", and while he has worked with strings, etc., on his other albums this is the first piece that is almost classical in its orientation, the guitar playing a large but not over-bearing role. The work itself is one of brooding, of introspection and sudden emotion, well-arranged and beautifully recorded. There's not enough space to go into detail here, but it is certainly worth listening to, as is the entire album. (A)

Finally, a thoroughly refreshing, enjoyable and...uh, normal meeting of the minds; hands across the water and all that. American keyboard genius Keith Jarrett meets soulful Norwegian tenor and soprano sax player Jan Garbarek and his friends Palle Danielsson (bass) and Jon Christensen (drums—he also provided percussion for the Terje Rypdal album discussed above). What can I say? It sounds like any other jazz quartet recording from the early 60's, the only difference being that this is better than 90 per cent of them. (A)

P.S. Mucho praise to Tadayuki Naito for creating three of the most beautiful album covers I've ever seen (Priester, Rypdal, Garbarek).

An era of reality

The Orchestral Tubular Bells
MIKE OLDFIELD, DAVID BEDFORD
(Virgin VR 13-115)

What I wanna know is, when is Ken Russell gonna make the movie?

The original Tubular Bells, as performed almost entirely by Mike Oldfield alone, is probably the most interesting of the do-it-yourself albums to be released thus far, relying as it does on a delicate layering of fairly simple individual tracks to create a full sound, rather than trying to show the world what a pyrotechnical wizard the composer can be on all instruments. In other words, it was semi-'orchestral' to begin with. This, coupled with the fact that Tubular Bells is the best-selling album Virgin has released to date, made the idea of a full orchestral version seem viable. The orchestral Tommy had done well, despite much simpler basic material (Though I would guess it was mainly because of the big names involved, plus the built-in interest of the original story-line. T.B., being an instrumental, has neither of these advantages). And let us say nothing of the dozens of orchestrated 'concept' albums we've been plagued with over the years, which, although tottering in the last stage of terminal stupidity, have usually sold well.

Over-all, I would have to say that the O.T.B. is more successful than any of its predecessors, with the exception of O.T.B. conductor-arranger-producer David Bedford's own composition, Star's End (Virgin VR 13-114), on which Mike Oldfield also plays. Bedford has done a mostly excellent job of expanding and re-orchestrating Oldfield's work, and while it comes nowhere near to standing on its own as an orchestral work as such, mainly because some parts of the original simply do not lend themselves to that kind of interpretation, at least the translation from one medium to the other is done with intelligence and restraint. In fact, I'd go so far as to say I like most of part 2 of the O.T.B. better than the same section of the original, even though the orchestra pulls a couple of very obvious bloops.

So, if you enjoyed the original, you might double your pleasure by picking this up. It's far from being the most exciting thing ever released on Virgin, one of the few truly innovative labels in the business, but worthwhile. Let's have original material next time, huh? (B)

Silk Torpedo PRETTY THINGS
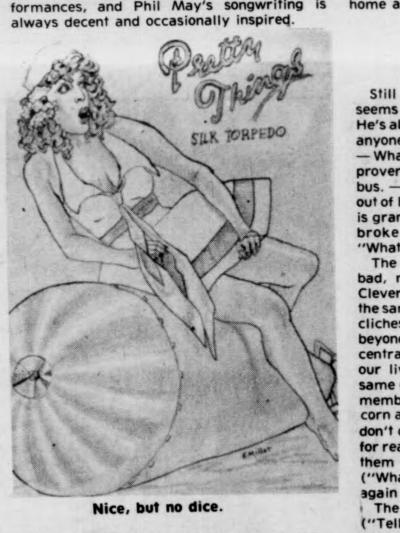
(Swan Song SS 8411)
Total Playing Time: 40:31

Pretty Things is a Led Zeppelin protege of sorts, and the group's name is the key to their music. Silk Torpedo is a pretty record, nothing worse with it except perhaps lack of originality, but full of basically fun music and is a decent background music record. Which is more than some albums can claim. The six-man group always plays well, Jack Green gives pleasant (if a bit affected) vocal performances, and Phil May's songwriting is always decent and occasionally inspired.



Nice, but no dice.

The lyric concerns are pretty standard — love, sex, death, and home. The most interesting song in this regard is probably "Bridge of God", which deals in an abstract way with various Christ metaphors, talking about death as a release and salvation. At the other end of it is "Belfast Cowboys"; this song features a particularly glib, "compassionate" view of the situation in Northern Ireland, with the title as an especially grating metaphor for those fighting there. The best songs overall are "Atlanta", "Is It Only Love", and "Come Home Momma". All three are well-realized musically, with "Come Home Momma" featuring good keyboard work; "Is It Only Love" definitely stands out as the album's peak, due to its use of Sgt. Pepper — like strings and winds. But aside from those (genuinely worthwhile) moments and some especially nice keyboard stuff in "Singapore Silk Torpedo", the album is nothing to write home about. Nice but no dice.

Unrequited
LOUDON WAINWRIGHT III
(Columbia PC 33369) time 37:12

Still caught, forever stuck in the middle seems to be the fate for nice Mr. Wainwright. He's able to turn a nice cliche around as well as anyone in the biz ("Whatever happened to you? — Whatever happened to us? — We missed the proverbial boat — We missed the proverbial bus. — Hey, push came to shove — As we fell out of love — We tore each other apart. — Love is grand — But I can't understand — Why you broke my proverbial heart." — from "Whatever Happened To Us?). And so on.

The question is, can you build good out of bad, new out of old, truth out of cliches? Cleverly shot cliches are an easy way to attract the same type of clever audience that laughs at cliches, by they, like Loudon, can't get too far beyond them or without them. L.W. III concentrates entirely too much on the easy false in our lives until we scream for the true. The same goes for the music as well. All the band members are smart enough to know what's corn and how to pick the corn funnily, but they don't do so well when it comes to laying it out for real. It's too bad, because Loudon can goose them into some fine stuff on occasion ("Whatever Happened To Us?"), and we're again asking for more.

The times Loudon does wax straight serious ("Tell Me You Love Me" from Album III is a good example), it comes out kind of stiff, thus letting me know I should shut up, and leave a good thing alone.

Spring Fever
RICK DERRINGER
(Blue Sky PZ 33423) time 38:42

A shame or a boon? All the love and care (three years worth) Mr. Rick (ex-McCoys, now both Winter brothers' guitar) Derringer lavished on All American Boy his previous, came and went on the charts, with one hit "Rock and Roll Hoochie Koo" and moderate sales.

So Rick has apparently gotten impatient or greedy or both and unleashed one of those rock crank-out pieces we've grown accustomed to from the brothers Winter. Bane or boom? This is most likely going to be a hit in the monied fifteen year-old circles, thus making Rick a bundle and a solo career.

Trouble is, there are a surprising number of ageing folks (mostly early and middle twenties) that found All American Boy a wealth of delight in its smooth rocking grace that only time and taste can establish.

So where is it? Rick's short-changed himself here, methinks, as all the quick cash-in teen stuff (Funk, Chicago, Kisstuff) will wash away, and like the malady of its namesake, Spring Fever will vanish with nary a trace.

New York, Fall 1974
ANTHONY BRAXTON
(Arista 4032)

Anthony Braxton takes his music seriously on his first solo release for Clive Davis' Arista label. As the phonograph needle escapes the last few grooves of the second side of the disc, you can't help but get the impression that Braxton is one stupendously-free-wheeling saxophone player, but a little intimidated by the arranging-producing duties afforded to him by his contract. Why?

I'll tell you why. His good old quartet pieces on side one of this disc display his extremely emotive horn-playing and sensitive leader-compositional abilities for an improvisational unit. His contributions dominate, and rightfully so. And since it's his recording date, he gets to be heard the most, on top of the strong support of Kenny Wheeler, Jerome Cooper (trumpet and drums, last out of the Revolutionary Ensemble), and Dave Holland (last out with Braxton in the Circle quartet with Corea and Altschul). Makes for a nice side of music.

Anthony Braxton's wealth of food for thought.

Side two, a collection of Braxton's compositions performed by bizarre instrumental collectives, are performed with much vigor, but are somehow not too inspiring.

Braxton's playing is melodically scale-like, alternating between Coltrane's flowing figures and Parker's staccato and abrupt punctuation, combined with his own innovations. The arranging is also novel, with cut one on side two comprised of clarinet and snythesizer, while cut two explores the products of the union of alto soprano, tenor, and baritone saxes.

A six-and-one-half-minute duet with a synthesizer is draggy, primarily due to the keyboardist's inexperienced-unimaginitive blippity-bloops. Another composition incorporates a "beat" chamber music ensemble including contrabass, clarinet, trumpet, violin and (the inevitable) "percussion instruments". This tune can only be described as "jazz" instrumentation without that ol' 'jazz' spirit.

Of particular note is the bass of Dave Holland, beautifully fast and clear-walking, or actually running, bass, especially on side one.

For the serious listener, this album offers a wealth of food for thought.

Give side 1 an A, side B a C.

Toys In The Attic
AEROSMITH
(Columbia PC 33479)
Total Time: 36:59

If you thought Aerosmith's first two albums were good (as I did), then you've certainly got quite a surprise in store for you. Much to my chagrin, I must take this time to report that the surprise is not a pleasant one. For, while this group's first two releases were not without merit, this one sure is. Aerosmith's sound of hard-driving heavy metal has never sounded worse. Any originality which was displayed previously has entirely been wiped out. The constant sounds of Joe Perry's harshfully senseless guitar and vocalist Steve Tyler's consistently raspy voice grow irritatingly monotonous as the record drags on. These two facets, which were a plus factor in Aerosmith's previous success, are used in such a way here as to act as more of a hindrance than a help. The group has not progressed lyrically, for the lyrics remain at the same level of immature high schoolism. Each side has but one good tune worthy of mention. There is "Adam's Apple" on side one and "No More No More" on side two. They are not outstanding tracks, but rather are a little bit better than the remaining drivel. I wish that this wasn't so, but it is. Around these parts, Aerosmith is a well-known and well-liked band, only because they come from Boston. Around the rest of the country, they are looked upon as just another band. This could have changed had Toys In The Attic been as good as their previous works. Unfortunately though, Aerosmith has slipped badly. For this disc, chalk up a 'you might have enjoyed this when you were ten' CD.

In Concert:
Johnny Winter
James Cotton
Springfield Civic Center

Friday night in Springfield — arrgghh how awful — but its to the perverse satisf'ction of a lot of people — out cumes the ludes and beer, and let's go the Civic Center to see Cotton and Winter.

Definitely a party crowd. Everybody in attendance was into having a good time, and if they weren't too luded out, they probably did have one.

Cotton, who opened the show, was amazing in his ability to control a crowd as large as the Civic Center's. He has taken his extremely powerful "Blues and Boogie" from bars and made an excellent transition to a large concert situation.

The audience' reaction to Cotton was interesting in that it was very vocal, and equaled that which was given to Winter. Cotton responded with such numbers as "Rocket 88", "Boogie Thing," and as the encore, which finished his nominal 45 minute set, "Fever."

After a few problems in dealing with a few people in front of the stage, who were bent on removing the barricade between them and the stage, the show resumed. Winter, in top hat and jeans, attacked the stage with his crew. Most of the show consisted of numbers off Mr. Winter's most recent albums "John Dawson Winter III" and "Saint's and Sinners." Including such notables off these albums as "Rock and Roll People", "Roll With Me", "Boney Maroney", and to end the first part of the show, the inevitable "Johnny B. Goode". Since the crowd was appreciative to the show, Winter and band returned to a flood of lit matches and other flammables, and lit the audience to a frenzy with three encores, including "Jumping Jack Flash" and "Roll Over Beethoven".

The new addition to the band, which consists of Richard Hughes-drums and Randy Hobbs-bass, is the rhythm guitarist "Leaping" Floyd R. This addition allows Johnny to play lead guitar more often and to fill in where needed. The evening was high energy boogie by two high energy blues-boogie bands in a town that loves to boogie.

JOURNEY
(Columbia Records)
(Member superstars: Gregg Rolie and Aynsley Dunbar)

Lots of bands complain about being cubbyholed — this one gleefully crawls in and sets up housekeeping. On the back of the album cover there's this: "We suggest that you play this album at the highest possible volume, in order to fully appreciate the sound of Journey." They brandish their crutch like a trophy. Not that technological over-dependence is anything new — such inscriptions have long been commonplace on albums by bands like Uriah Heep, Mountain, Deep Purple, Blue Oyster Cult, Black Oak Arkansas — the mere mention of which names implies veritable legions of banshee lead singers and sullen bass guitarists stretching to the horizon. Since its inception, 80 decibel-plus rock has been perhaps the most rampantly proliferous entertainment genre of all time. Every day a new would-be Jimmy Page plugs in his first stratocaster and annoys his first neighbor. Behind every successful heavymetal riff stands a hundred heavier more metallic facsimiles, ready to nag us into going into the kitchen for something. Journey has one of the more formidable collections of these ear-scrapers, interspaced, as is customary with post-Tull riff-rock, with slower, gentler passages. But we are not so easily appeased. The quiet sections are almost apologetically short, and suspiciously transitional. After all, they don't want us to get bored, right? Little do they know we secretly use those moments to hear ourselves think.

What I don't understand is what a perfectly competent drummer like Aynsley Dunbar is doing in an imitation twelfth-wave British Invasion Hard Rock band that plays like they were pounding primitive stone tools? And when I say "perfectly competent", I understate. For years Dunbar has been relentlessly hacking at the barriers between rock drumming and precise drumming (barriers people like John Bonham and Charlie Watts have spent years constructing). His presence on the album is even more surprising when you consider that he used to play with Frank Zappa. Yes, Frank Zappa, who has spent half a lifetime struggling against the very thing Journey so flawlessly exemplifies: play-by-the-numbers grunt-rock. When Dunbar was with Zappa his drumming was frequently a high point on albums more sophisticated musically and lyrically than Journey will be four years hence. The gulf between the two bands is the wildest one imaginable: On the one hand the most original, eclectic, complex and self-conscious music rock has to offer, and on the other the most banal and derivative. So why does Dunbar play with these people? Maybe he likes all the rolls and flashiness he gets to do. It's probably a lot of fun. For him, that is.

You've got to hand it to them, though — they've got courage. How many bands in this day and age would dare play the same teeth-gritting riff eight times in a row, with no improvisation or melody or harmony whatsoever?

Actually, now that I think about it, probably quite a few. (But that does not dimish the stunning audacity of the deed.) And how many people will listen to that riff? Probably quite a few more. For seven years now an entire generation of English-speaking youth has been waiting patiently for another "Sunshine of Your Love" to come along and work the same magic the original did in high school, when life was Somehow Simpler. The attempts keep getting feebler. I am haunted by visions of the year 2030:

WENDY WALDMAN
time 41:14

Please don't judge this album by its infantile cover, as it's a Warner Brothers' attempt to sell Wendy Waldman as a sex symbol and not the powerful woman she is in reality. In this album Wendy's music reflects her intentions much better than any male-oriented company could do. She has not sunk into the trap that Maria Muldaur (most likely the easiest comparable person) has in having her life and music controlled, written and arranged by the men who surround her. Wendy and her music are free to make their own impression.

This album, Wendy's third, is arranged to be much more personal than her others. There are none of the horns that gave intensity to Gypsy Symphony (the last and more popular album) and yet it is more intense and easier to listen to than her first album (Love Has Got Me). This is the quiet, introspective, natural Wendy. The sound is much like her stage performance, her voice controls the song and the music provides a background.

Wendy Waldman has reached a point of consistency in her music. You either like her style or you don't, but what she chooses to do is done well; smooth professionalism in woman's blues. This has its bad points. In someways the style overrides the content of the song and makes each cut blend into the next. Fortunately its only obvious affects are in the first three songs on side one, ("Western Lullaby", "Racing Boat", "Explain it"). After these bands Wendy uses striking rhythms and fantastic backup vocal harmonies to get out of this rut.

This album somehow doesn't have the same all around completeness that Gypsy Symphony has and individual cuts, although good, don't have enough power to override this in any comparison. Wendy Waldman is not as haunting or insightful as the last album. Nonetheless, it is only a step in Wendy Waldman's growth, she continues to be a beautiful voice for all American women, ever powerful, ever changing.

The Girl of Our Dreams is labeled as "a satirical revue". At the bottom of the program one can find the statement, "This revue does not attempt to speak for all women." And it quite obviously does not, but it should speak to all women. Their song and dance routines within the context of a lecture by an anti-feminist clearly expose the myths that we all grew up with. Through humor, we see the fallacies in the fairy tales and "girl's" magazines, the courtship process and marriage, what we are led to believe single women and older women are like. The entire show was written as well as arranged and choreographed by the cast. They obviously enjoyed what they were doing, and that is the most important element in a good revue. But this revue had an important aspect that went beyond that: the audience's reaction to itself as well as the performers.

In the audience there was a really strong, good, woman feeling. There were men there, and I only heard good from them, but there were women and woman feeling. I really cannot describe what it was, a special closeness perhaps. The sort of feeling one can get when you laugh at something that is you and know that everyone else is doing the same thing. This can develop really strong feelings of sisterhood. But I suppose this was not universal. I heard one woman say that she felt like she was the only straight person there. She got the answer of, "Now you know how gay people feel almost anywhere." The revue did have some mentions of gay feminism as it is a real part of where women can be. But, as cast member Annette Townley said, the main thing was women loving other women. It was not anti-male, it was women digging their sisters. If this message is taken as lesbianism, some people ought to explore their own values. There is much too much to this revue to get hung up about your personal sexuality.

The revue will be presented 3 May in Jordan Marsh in Boston as part of twelve days of women's events. For more information about this performance, contact Everywoman's Centre.

The Cavern

THE CAVERN
by Jean Anouilh
Directed by Jon Farris
Studio 75

The Cavern is the play that Jean Anouilh never got around to writing. But, as he states, just because the play has not been written, it does not mean that it does not have a message. The characters are very real and their story equally real, but the author cannot bring himself to write them out. This may be what happens in the head of many authors and playwrights, but Anouilh takes a step further and presents this conflict on the stage. The author is among the cast; his conflict is as important as those of the characters. This twist makes for humor in a very tragic play to an excellent effect.

The play opens with the characters in their places on the set: the nobility on the upper level and the servants "below stairs", in "the cavern." Gene Fahey, playing the author, enters and orders all off. He then explains to us how he has tried to write this play and finally decided to let the characters do the play. We see two beginnings, are constantly reminded by the police superintendent how we want to know who killed the cook. This person at many points was just an annoyance, but in retrospect, he, above, all kept the play from becoming too heavy.

The characters' action centered around Marie Jeanne, the cook who is killed. Anouilh is obviously in love with this character that he sees as "Mother Earth". As with most men, Anouilh over-romanticizes the hard life of a peasant woman trying to see her child has better than she. Marie Jeanne is quite a woman. She once had "the lovliest things in Nice" and turned down a proposal of marriage from her employer because they were of different classes. She swore their bastard son would not be a peasant, though his father would not know of his existance. This part was ably done by Debbie Hull who is perhaps the grande dame of UMass Theatre. I have never seen Ms. Hull in a part she did not make shine; her diversity is amazing. Her Marie Jeanne is a tough cookie who remembers what it was like to be young, and will help the young girls below her in any way. Her only weakness is her son, who is to be a priest.

Another favorite of the author's is Adele, played in this production by Kathy Buda. She is the young innocent who has been through Hell. Her love of the young seminarist is the last straw for her. His mother insists that he is destined for better things, and his refusal to go against her turns Adele to a life of prostitution. This was a most difficult and complex part. The mixture of shyness and the final explosion were handled with great sympathy.

The lesser characters were well played, but tended to be dwarfed by these three fine performances. Leaving the theatre, I felt totally inadequate to write about this strong and very emotionally moving play. While trying to get the characters to behave, Anouilh said that he would rather be a critic and find fault in someone else's plays rather than his own. I would like to thank him for getting this one written.

Skipping, Weeping . .

AGNES DE MILLE'S "SUMMER" SKIPPING, WEEPING, TEARFUL CHEERFUL Susan Doskocil (+"Deadline" Doskocil???)

Agnes de Mille's newest work "Summer" had its world premier this past week, April 10-13 at the Music Hall in Boston by the Boston Ballet.

Two other ballet's, Talley Beatty's "The Road of Phoebe Snow" and George Balanchine's "Serenade" completed the very fulfilling evening Friday night which covered everything from skipping and weeping to a rape in a railroad switchyard.

"Summer", choreographed to and inspired by music of Franz Schubert bespoke the light and gay atmosphere of the frenchman Honore Fragonard's many garden paintings through a series of short dances, each an event long.

Full of coy flirting and a "Well, there's lots of good fish in the sea" attitude, Durine Alinova rightfully stole this part of the evening, just because she didn't overdo but did exactly everything demanded of her roles.

Although Alinova danced "Allegro" and "Flirting" with Woytek Lowski, he was most enhancingly partnered by Gigi Nachtsheim when together they did "Turning".

In this delightful episode, she studiously, complete with brow furrowed in concentration and exacting patience, did an applause-rewarded series of turns. Then she collapsed. (It was beautiful. More applause.) Enter Lowski, beaming with the air that he can match hers, and just the bit more needed to win her. After a dazzling series of similar turns, leaving him not quite dizzy enough to forget to gallantly extend his hand to her, her head pops up — and, amidst laughter and applause, they wearily but determinedly continue turning offstage, trying to outlast the other.

"Weeping", danced by Kathryn Anderson, Kaethe Devlin, Deidre Myles and Judith Shoaff had the audience laughing through tears. You've never seen such sad, pathetic, hysterically tragic heroines as portrayed by these four dewey-eyed maidens! How they kept their faces straight is beyond me.

"Wailing", which logically followed "Weeping" was the other humor highpoint. Such despondancy did Ilene Strichler gloomily exude that Ron Cunningham, after dragging her around the stage in an attempt to get her to her feet, finally dumped her in a line with the four weepers (who now lay forlornly side by side grieving into the floor) and trotted off with one of them.

(The rest recovered, never fear, in gaping amazement to Lowski's brilliant deliverance of "Cheering" which both the audience and the "Weepers" applauded in turn.)

All in all "Summer" was delightfully conceived and certainly received an enthusiastic response from the audience.

"The Road of the Phoebe Snow" danced to music by Duke Ellington and Billy Strayhorn was the most striking and certainly the only arrogant piece presented. We were informed by the program that as a child, Talley Beatty played near the tracks of the train named The Phoebe Snow (after one of it's more distinguished passengers, a meticulously neat lady who was always proper in dress and who disdainfully looked down on the countryside as she passed by).

Supposedly the ballet is about events which may or might have occurred near the switchyard.

Chalk full of heated hate, the two powerful groups, males and females, keep expressing violent outrages whenever any small faction begins to gain momentum. Again and again the innovators are beat and brought back into line by their fearfully jealous and possessive parent groups. A lot of taunting and jeering is reserved especially for any tender, sprouting romances which are inevitably pounded to a powdery dust.

The hot, jazzy brass shouted the already poignant message emmanating from the sleazy yet controlled duet of Ellen O'Reilly and Tony Catanzaro. Danced in lavender and purple costumes it was all too clear what events were impressed foremost in Beatty's mind from his childhood play-days.

Credit is also due to the duets of Anamarie Sarazin and Daryl Robinson, and Laura Young and Tony Catanzaro.

The irritating aspect of this dance, however, lay in its lack of everyone doing the same thing when they were supposed to. Maybe they're bored with this piece, although they put plenty of energy into it, there exists too much individual interpretation where there is a need for group unanimity. There can be no doubt in any spectators eyes about the unity of emotions and feelings; its just that occassionally individual dancers overstepped the boundaries determined by the rules of a multi-person dance. When this happens, as it did Friday night, a disturbing jarring effect is produced, inharmonious with the choreographer's intent.

George Balanchine's "Serenade", undoubtedly one of his loveliest ballets, was last on the program, following "Summer". Already well established in many major ballet companies repertoiries, it was treated with the proper balance of respect, tender loving care and absolutely necessary talent demanded of it. After that performance, I was rather inclined to think that Balanchine had choreographed it specifically for the Boston Ballet. It was splendid!

It's pleasant to speculate on what we'll see next from this company. They have proved that they are very capable of choreographing and presenting their own work, as in the "Experiment in Dance" series presented earlier this season, as well as the ability to perform in a polished and professional manner great works of world-renowned choreographers with the necessary masterly control.

The Fruits of His Labor

directed by Frederico Fellini reviewed by Jeffrey Polman

Our first sight is of a sheet on a clothesline, fluttering hypnotically amidst a gentle onslaught of pollen puffs. Spring has come back to a small Italian harbor town, and Frederico Fellini has subconsciously landed us there.

"Amarcord" translated means "I remember", and we sit patiently while the great Italian filmmaker unfolds a non-stop array of fascinating images before our eyes, a carefully-chosen depiction of a childhood he once knew. But it is one thing to simply recreate your life chronologically. Fellini does it by inter-weaving emotional episodes that belong to not only him (we never really know which character Fellini is supposed to be, if any) but to many of the town inhabitants; so in the end we can feel for the people as a whole and not to one ego-centered man.

He gives us fruitful colors: the turquoise of the Mediterranean, the searing redness of the town beauty's dress, the shiny blue of a peacock's plumage in the midst of a white snowstorm. His ever-moving camera searches down the jubilant night streets, along the sandy ocean front, ever so often stopping at a family's house to eavesdrop on a dinner argument or other emotional situation.

We see the institution we have all learned to accept but have never been fully satisfied within. The school is one long-running joke; frogs in girls' faces, class-skipping, farting accusations — all the adolescent perversities which will be with us for eternity. Fellini makes them so hilarious and perfectly timed that we begin to feel we have the Italian Mel Brooks on our hands. The church, always a satirical target for Fellini, is also played up for laughs. The priest performs open confession with the boys, asking them if they "touched" themselves in the same breath as he gives orders to nearby altar decorators. Later, we even see a glimpse of the local asylum. A family goes there to take their "Uncle Teo" out for a country picnic. He responds to his temporary freedom by first doing number one in his pants and then climbing a tree and refusing to come down unless he is given a woman.

Fellini's world, as always, is made up of gutter-reeking degenerates, enormously fat women, mischievous and super-horny kids, and usually one singularly-seductive prostitute. But here it is all amusing rather than confusing. He uses a narrator: a mustachioed, grey-haired man who is seen now and then in the context of certain scenes to progress the story and give us a feel for the life of the town. In past works Fellini would have filmed the same bizarre rituals without explaining them, would have jumbled the order of events without warning us. This time he has simplified his script just enough so that we can relish in his artistic touches without getting bogged down in an illogical narrative. Surely this is the most entertaining Fellini movie to date.

His characters, although widely different in age, temperament, and morals have one unique trait which ties them all together. It is an enduring love for anything successful, particularly anything American. We are constantly fed glimpses of Hollywood posters and dialogue references to Ronald Colman and Gary Cooper. People who have traveled in the States are looked at in awe; and the climactic scene in the film revolves around the passing-by of an ocean liner, undoubtedly American-influenced. Every inhabitant of the town is out in the harbor on their boats, partying the night away and awaiting the excitement of actually seeing something so huge, such a larg symbol of freedom. And when i comes it arouses them out of thei sleep like a dream: smokestack vomiting, lights twinkling, hor blasting — truly an image you wi not soon forget. These people loo up at the sky and wonder how th stars can be "held up"; intrigued almost instinctively, by the worl they can never experience.

Fellini also does an excellent jo at laying bare the life processes People are constantly eating having sex, excreting or urinating and he makes these important b recycling them, enjoyable b coating them with absurdity. Th only way to get Uncle Teo dow from the tree is to have a midge nun persuade him, and the onl way to stop one of the young boy from sex fantasizing is to have a gigantic-chested woman assaul him with her wares. There are als some camera-conscious moment where characters, for no apparen reason, will look at us and laugh o say some ludicrous comment.

In Amarcord, Fellini accomplishes what he failed to do in Roma; that is, feed us a cohesive record of his past. In his words music, and beautifu cinematography he carves us a slice of his heritage: enhanced, o course, by his typically weird images, but nevertheless, touching and an extraordinary relief from watching people shotgun each other.

. . . And the agony of the male myth

One problem with this portrait of a free-loving Beverly Hills hairdresser named George on the eve of the 1968 presidential election is that we are told more about George than we are shown: the hard evidence is lacking.

Consider these examples: (1) when George chases Jill (Goldie Hawn) in fun, he unaccountably and quickly proceeds to turn serious; (2) when George confronts the younger sister of a lover-client, the conversation is brought to an abrupt close with her question: "You wanna fuck?" This is good for a cheap laugh, but it does little to reveal George's personality, much less his seductive charm; and (3) when two girls enthusiastically greet George at a party, he is merely polite and appreciative of their interest, for he must find his beloved Jackie (Julie Christie). Yet, whenever George meets Jackie, he either whines or screws her. Wherein lies his charm? Why would any girls pursue a man, regardless of his build, who canno sustain a pleasant presence? It would seem that George is less human than a reflection of our various gauzy images of the great lover, the immoralist (one cannot even pretend that George is a moral, for his morality can be traced to his attitude of cool sport toward life and women), and the independent man.

The third example leads to a further, related weakness in the movie. Not only does George fail to embody these images, but he proceeds inevitably to take on a different personality. Two parties indicate contrasting life-views at this point in time (if you will): one party is thrown by a businessman in honor of Our New President — it features jet-set, well-dressed, dull alcoholics; the other party is hip, free-form, also jet-set, with joints instead of booze. How gauzy is our image of George becomes apparent as we realize that he fits comfortably at neither party, because each life-style represents for George something above and beyond what it offers its adherents, as, one might assume, the character of George does for the filmmaker.

The effect of looking in a mirror that makes us look younger than we really are is to flatter our perception. But we must not be conned into turning our backs on the storyline and the characterizations, which must maintain their casual integrity, and from which alone must proceed, say, uncertainty and value disorientation.

CHINATOWN++++

Roman Polanski's latest, a departure from his supernatural tendencies, but still quite unusual. Jack Nicholson plays an eagle-eye detective who sticks his nose into the wrong case and pays for it in the end. Faye Dunaway is great as a millionairess haunted by a turbulent past. This film got royally ripped off at the Academy Awards, but we all know that doesn't mean shit to a tree; works of art cannot and should not be compared. (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

DIRTY HARRY-MAGNUM FORCE+++

The ultimate phallic symbol, Clint Eastwood's gun, ejaculates bullet after bullet in this hard-ass police twin-bill. Plenty of scarlet innards, irrelevant flesh, and outrageous cussing for all you machismos out there. Blow your head off with a revolver in the ticket line and get in half-price. (Mountain Farms Four)

EMMANUELLE++

A new skin flick, which like most of the other failures, tries to satisfy the viewer by not satisfying him. Here we have Penthouse-style photography coated over the perverted proceedings. (Campus Cinema)

FORBIDDEN PLANET++++

One of the great science-fiction films of all time, about an expedition on a far planet which is threatened by a mysterious mental force. Robby the Robot made his screen debut in this extraterrestrial epic, while Walter Pidgeon, Leslie Nielsen, and Anne Francis provide the human roles. Super-duper special effects. (TONIGHT in MAHAR, 8 and 10 p.m.)

FUNNY LADY+++

Barbra Streisand and James Caan shine in the musical sequel to Funny Girl. An excellent evening of entertainment if you like Streisand and-or musicals, but honestly, aren't you getting sick of sequels? (Showcase Cinemas)

GODFATHER II++++

Not to take anything away from Francis Ford Coppola, as this is an excellent film, but its sweep of the Oscar show last week was uncalled for. Al Pacino, Diane Keaton, and the rest of the clan serve up to an excellent original story. (Campus Cinemas)

THE GREAT WALDO PEPPER++

Robert Redford's blue eyes and America's blue skies collide in this tale about World War I flying aces and their aviation feats which follow the end of the War. All the action you'll see is in the coming attractions, so it might be wise to take in a movie where you know this one hasn't arrived yet. Directed by George Roy Hill (who?) (Mountain Farms Four)

LENNY++++

Dustin Hoffman's finest two hours as Lenny Bruce, the dead comic who is more famous today than most of the living ones. Bob Fosse directs in a black-and-white documentary style designed to fill in unaware viewers on the basic highs and lows of Bruce's life and wife (Valerie Perrine). Chock full of hysterical human situations, and alternately depressing ones. (Showcase Cinemas and Mountain Farms Four).

SCENES FROM A MARRIAGE++++

Ingmar Bergman's fascinating study of love and marriage, starring Liv Ullman and Erland Josephsson. Bergie cut the original 6½ hour Swedish television version down to about three here, but it still retains its emotional impact, as every one of his masterpieces has managed to do somehow.

(Amherst Cinema)

1776+

There is a way to be patriotic without being obnoxious. A dumb idea for a musical turned into an even dumber movie. Ben Franklin sings to his kite, Tom Jefferson does a number for Congress, and Betsy Ross grooves on her flag. I can't wait for the Assassination Follies to open. (TONIGHT in the S.U.B. at 7 and 9:45)

SHAMPOO++

The first film about a hairdresser features Warren Beatty as the scissorstud who keeps his customers after shop hours. Julie Christie, Goldie Hawn, and Lee Grant play his girlfriends in this tight, nicely photographed, but incredibly overrated saga of adultery, sex before marriage (ye gads!), and other assorted hot combs. (Showcase Cinemas)

TOMMY++++

Ha, ha, I told you so. Here we have it: 5-speaker sound, sensational imagery, the first and most successful rock opera turned into the greatest musical film ever produced. Stupendous acting and singing by Ann-Margret, Tina Turner, Oliver Reed, Elton John, Eric Clapton, Jack Nicholson, Keith Moon, Peter Townshend, and Roger Daltrey as the deaf, dumb, and blind kid himself. Ken Russell is a genius. To be extensively reviewed in a week or two. (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

WALKING TALL++

Yes, audiences are standing up and walking out of this right-wing drama about a rodeoman-turned-sheriff in a small Southern town who would rather beat someone over the head with a baseball bat than do immoral things like drinking and gambling. Joe Don Baker, who plays the big dink with stone-faced splendor, makes Dan Blocker look alive. There are a few powerful scenes of retributed violence and tears, but on the whole it's a bad attempt at recycling the success of Billy Jack, which was worse than this. (C.C.A., 4-18, 7, 9:15, and 11:30)

A WOMAN UNDER THE INFLUENCE++++ETC.

Still going strong in its fifth week at the Campus Cinemas is this masterpiece of human emotion, directed by John Cassevetes and starring Gena Rowlands and Peter Falk.

INDOCHINA: Students bitter as Cambodia falls

Cambodia falls to Khmer forces

By United Press International

Victorious Khmer Rouge forces set up a revolutionary liberation committee in the heart of the Phnom Penh yesterday and demanded that generals and officials of the defeated Cambodian government report to it under white flags of surrender. Most appeared to have fled.

The black clad Rebel Khmer Rouge forces, some riding in captured American-made jeeps, took over the capital earlier yesterday proclaiming, "We enter Phnom Penh as conquerors." Their leaders pledged the new regime would be neutralist and would not allow foreign bases on Cambodia territory.

Area Viet students bitter toward US

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Staff Reporter

Congressional shut-off of military aid to South Vietnam and an apathetic student attitude toward this issue has spawned bitter feelings among Vietnamese students in the five-college area.

In an interview with the Collegian, Nguyen Hung, Dzung Nguyen and Tuan Nguyen said American neglect in the present Vietnamese situation has left them "frustrated."

Hung, who fled North Vietnam in 1954, is presently working toward his masters degree in Chemical engineering at UMass. Tuan and Dzung Nguyen, brother and sister, are studying at Amherst College and Mt. Holyoke College, respectively.

Tuan, a native of Saigon said, "I feel frustrated, almost betrayed, it's something I never expected."

Hung, president of the Vietnamese Catholic Students Association in America, said, "I don't understand American foreign policy. Everybody seems to be for the North."

According to Tuan, whose father teaches at the University of Saigon, "Most people in the South are anti-communist. I am disappointed when I hear students say 'the South wants communism' their arguments

Town Meeting ok's 9 demands

2200 students tell State House: 'no budget cuts'

By JOE MAHONEY
Staff Reporter

UMass Trustees and the state Legislature will receive a list of nine demands today, overwhelmingly voted at a University town meeting last night.

Some 2,200 students gathered for two-and-one-half hours in the Student Union Ballroom and voted "demands" opposing proposed budget cuts and supporting student power.

The only motion defeated called for cut backs in private colleges as a means of obtaining revenues for the state college system, including UMass.

The Student Union Ballroom was the scene for the largest turnout of students since the 1970 spring strike. In a mass gesture of "student unity", students sitting in chairs surrendered their seats soon after the meeting began, making room for more throngs outside.

The first speaker, Peter Donahue of the Coalition for a Peoples' Budget, said, "Working people in Massachusetts need good public education at a good price."

"This is a very serious time for serious thinking," said Miguel Rivera of the Bilingual Collegiate Program. "We are making important decisions that may determine the future of this University," he said.

Many posters were waved and epithets shouted

Wood, Bromery not disturbed at student strike

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

On a strike, Wood said: "I'm not sure we're at that point and I'm not sure that's an effective kind of action."

UMass President Robert C. Wood and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery reacted coolly to the possibility of a student strike last night and early this morning.

But, Wood said he "welcomed" student help in fighting Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' proposed ten per cent budget cut for next year at UMass.

And Bromery said he would not oppose a demonstration of students at the State House to oppose the cuts, adding that, in his opinion, a student strike at Amherst could be "counter-productive" and pit the Governor and the students as allies in cutting the budget of the rest of the University.

Both men were contacted at their homes by phone after 2,200 students meeting in the Student Union Ballroom adopted a set of demands to legislators, trustees and UMass administrators and set a referendum next Thursday for a student boycott of classes.

Wood, told of the meeting and votes, said his reaction was "one of enthusiasm and one of appreciation, adding: "I think peaceful demonstrations are something to now be seriously considered" in the budget battle and demands to the Legislature.

He also said, while not "negative" to the demands to trustees and administration, they are not as important as carrying budget protests to the Governor.

"But don't say the legislature has proposed cuts," he said. "The legislature hasn't spoken. The legislature will be the jury on this thing...the important thing to center on is what the governor proposes."

Wood also said he will attend a meeting of Student Senate Wednesday in the Campus Center to discuss further budget cuts and their implications.

On tour with son

Reagan pays surprise call on Amherst College

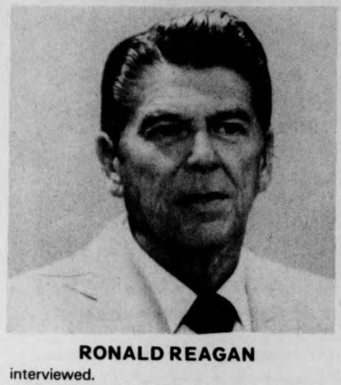
Ronald Reagan paid an unpublicized visit to Amherst College here yesterday, spoke informally with students, and accompanied his high-school aged son on admissions interview before leaving for Yale University in New Haven.

The former California governor, considered a conservative Presidential contender in 1976, was looking at colleges with his son, Ronald P., Jr., who is a junior at a private preparatory school outside of Los Angeles.

A College spokesman said the father and son had also looked at Middlebury College in Vermont, Williams College in Williamstown, Amherst, and were expected to tour Yale Thursday.

But, Amherst College Secretary Horace H. Hewlett said Reagan's son is one year away from actually applying anywhere, adding: "He and his father are going around to a number of colleges."

Reagan spent the night at the College-owned Lord Jeffrey Inn Wednesday night and took several Amherst students to dinner. To the surprise of some, he talked informally with some thirty students Wednesday outside the admissions office as his son was interviewed.



RONALD REAGAN

He discussed the CIA, his taxes, government control over individual freedom and generally sparred with liberal-minded students at the small, but prestigious private College.

Taking criticism for his avoidance of state taxes in 1970 and labelled a "pig" by one student observer, Reagan responded: "I think today's generation will turn out to be a sucker generation. You've got to look with an eye always toward the other side, because there's so much information around today."

Reagan said multi-national corporations based in the U.S. "have upgraded the standard of living and health care...of their host countries," because it is in their interests to do so.

He justified alleged CIA involvement in the overthrow and death of Chilean Marxist leader Salvador Allende, saying: "You know that Allende vowed that if elected he was going to throw out the constitution and institute communist totalitarian rule there."

And he said the Soviet Union is still dedicated to achieving communist "world domination" although he favors "peaceful coexistence."

He said that he owed no California state income taxes in 1970 and admitted to a student that during the same period he was cutting people from state welfare roles. But he apparently became annoyed at some observers who wouldn't let him explain saying: "Well now wait a minute...wait a minute. Do you want to make a speech or do you want me to answer your question?"

On presidential ambition, Reagan said:

"Well, that's down the road. No one can make any prediction in advance on a subject of that kind. Actually I would think that all of us would hope and pray that the fellow in there now can do his job in such a way so there won't be a question of any further change. That remains to be seen, however."

On other current issues Reagan said, that he blames the expected fall of South Vietnam on the United States' not backing the cease-fire, although he said he was originally against committing U.S. troops to Indochina. He added, in response to a student challenge, that the U.S. was correct in supporting the Thieu regime "because we had pledged to do it."

Reagan, a member of a commission investigating reports of illegal information-gathering in the CIA, said he feels "domestic 'spying' on private citizens is OK as long as they're not doing anything wrong or illegal."

Ocean research may help curtail global problems

By NANCY DAWSON
Staff Reporter

An international solution to pollution, population control, and food shortage could come from an engineering approach to these problems, according to the chief producer of the television series "The Undersea World of Jacques Cousteau."

"Man can't react socially nearly as well as he could from an engineering point of view," said Thomas Horton, an associate of Jacques Cousteau and member of the Cousteau organization.

In a press conference held in the Dukes Room in the Student Union yesterday afternoon, Horton discussed world environmental and energy problems in connection with ocean research and technology.

Horton noted there is a low level of government funding for ocean research, which collapsed altogether in 1968, and hasn't quite recovered since.

He said he considers the possibility of the ocean as an alternative life form "economically unfeasible". He added that "It's better having us living on the surface and working underwater. We need to do a lot more work in studying the bottom of the ocean."

With regard to ocean farming, Horton said he hopes the government will channel money in that direction to spur further advances. The ocean furnishes 13 per cent of the world's total protein supply.

"We're already overfishing the ability of the ocean to produce," Horton warned, citing as an example a 90 per cent reduction in the haddock species over seven years alone. He said the ocean has to have "a chance to catch up."

Despite his prediction that "mankind is heading for a horrible twenty-five years to come," Horton says his outlook is optimistic.

"We face a very good possibility of damn near burning ourselves out in the next 25-50 years," he continued, "but it's going to be an exciting challenge and I'm not going to miss it."

Mention was made of the Bermuda Triangle, a region of the ocean surrounded with reports of mysterious disappearances and events. Horton said, "We, the society of Jacques Cousteau, are not interested in the Bermuda Triangle, or the Loch Ness monster, or the lost continent of Atlantis."

Asked how he came into contact with Cousteau, Horton answered, "I blundered into the relationship."

Presently the vice president of Thalassa, Inc., a Cousteau Group Company, Horton has been involved in ocean research throughout his career and has made several valuable contributions to the field, including his conception of the first manned submersible diving program in the United States in 1964. In addition to the Cousteau organization, Horton is a member of the Marine Technology Society and a Director of the Oceanic Society of San Francisco. He is the author of various publications on marine engineering and operations.

University bars obey fire laws

By DAVE FARRELL
Staff Reporter

Measures have been taken to concord with state fire laws in the Top of the Campus, the Blue Wall, and the Hatch, as a result of a Collegian investigation into violations of these laws conducted last October, according to Campus Center Director John W. Corker.

The Collegian investigation discovered the following five violations:

—The TOC had not been assigned an occupancy rating; nor had it been inspected by Massachusetts officials.

—The TOC carpets had not been checked for flammability.

—The Hatch had no sprinkler system.

—None of the three Campus Center Bars had occupancy signs posted, as is required by law.

—The Hatch had no lit exit signs.

In addition, two of the Blue Wall's three exit signs were located where they could not be seen by the majority of patrons. The signs have since been relocated.

At this time, most of these violations have been rectified. All three bars have been inspected by state officials and have been assigned occupancy ratings, although neither the Hatch nor the Blue Wall have theirs posted. Lit exit signs have been installed in the Hatch; and the TOC's carpets and curtains have been inspected and determined safe by officials.

No sprinkler system has been installed in the Hatch, and, according to Edmund Goetzl, University Fire and Safety Officer, there are no plans for such an installation in the future. "I don't see why there should be," he said, adding that the law does not require existing buildings to install such a system.

Grad student computer could assist surgeons

By MIKE KNEELAND
Staff Reporter

UMass computer science graduate student John Woods says he is ready to test a computer system that could improve the efficiency of medical operations.

Called PAMELA (patient anesthetic monitor alert system), the computer program is designed to simultaneous monitor a patient's EKG (heart waves), EEG (brain waves), and respiratory pattern.

"I've established that it convincingly works," Wood says. In two weeks he and his advisor, Niko Spinelli, M.D., will test PAMELA during surgery scheduled for a cat.

The system is a simple one in theory. Before an operation, Woods explained, a patient's EKG, EEG, and respiratory pattern will be programmed into the computer.

'My device does not deal with non-significant data'

During the operation the computer will continually check the patient's status against his normal signs already in the computer. If a change develops, Woods says, the computer will sound an alarm to alert the surgical team.

While the alarm is sounding, the teletype will give the team a readout on what has changed in the patient and what condition the patient might be entering.

At this early stage, Woods says, those conditions include tachycardia (abnormally high heart beat), bradycardia (abnormally low heart beat), cardiac arrest (failure) or arrythmia (abnormal rhythm).

Woods says the system could even be programmed, with the help of expert surgeons, to give a printout of possible actions the surgeon might want to employ to restore the patient's normal signs.

"The computer is no substitute for experience," he says, "and they will be recognized as suggestions."

Although other groups are also working with computers and operations, Woods' program is unique. PAMELA only "looks for" abnormalities in the patient while a Stanford system, for instance, is constantly gathering and analyzing even normal data.

"My device does not deal with non-significant data," he says. That means that hospitals would not need as large a computer which means less money, he says.

Woods, who was graduated as a speech major here in 1970 with added emphasis on physics and math, says PAMELA is designed to handle eight simultaneous operations. A hospital could, therefore, put PAMELA in a central glassed-in area overlooking eight different operating rooms.

Provisions have been incorporated in PAMELA that would allow a surgical team to store an updated program of a vital function into the computer. That would be needed, Woods says, because a patient's brain waves can be changed, yet remain normal, under the influence of the anesthetic.

Woods says the computer system could also store such valuable information as a patient's blood type and drug allergies. If a patient, unfamiliar to rotating interns or doctors, went into crisis in his hospital room and had to be operated on, then PAMELA could give a quick up-to-date patient history.

Students' gain nil from Dukakis talk

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

Four UMass student leaders travelled to Boston yesterday, met with the Governor, and brought back no news concerning proposed budget cuts.

Student Government Association President Rick Savini, Student Senate Speaker Cindy McGrath, Graduate Student President Jim Lindsey and Chairperson of Academic Affairs Joe Beals attended the meeting. Secretary of Education Paul Parks and Representative Jim Collins (D-Amherst) were also in attendance.

According to Savini, the meeting was what he expected it to be. "I knew he (Dukakis) wasn't going to back off on the budget cut. I'm not sure that he knows the university and I think he's asking us to help him understand it," Savini said.

Dukakis said he would like to meet with the student leaders more regularly "like every two or three months" to "let each other know what's happening."

The meeting marked the first time since the Governor took office in January that he met with any UMass student leaders. He said, "We need your participation in this process (referring to the implementaion of the budget cut)."

The Governor and the student leaders discussed ways a budget cut could be made at UMass without affecting students. Parks said, however, that a 10 per cent cut cannot be made without "going into student programs." He said other state universities are meeting the guidelines of the budget cut.

When Savini mentioned administration and overhead costs should be cut first, Parks said "the salary schedule (at UMass) really upsets me. That's what I'm trying to get at."

On the same point, Dukakis interjected, saying, "I want to see a sense of giving. I have a staff person who cut his salary from $60,000 to $34,000. I would like to see more of this type of act in the world," Dukakis said. As far as the budget cut is concerned, Dukakis believes "it all depends on whether you have a can do or a can't do attitude."

Meeting with the students for forty-five minutes, Dukakis said "The last thing we need is a confrontation between this administration and the university administration."

When Parks was asked about a possible tuition hike at state universities, he said, "I'm trying to hold the line on that. The proposed budget cut guidelines do not include a tuition hike," Parks said.

After the meeting, Collins said he is going to ask Parks next week for a specific breakdown of the budget cut. "I don't think they (the Governor and Parks) know where they're making the cuts," Collins said.

The Governor is expected to visit the campus May 5.

The Academic Matters Council (AMC) brought the "F" one step closer to being included in students' cumulative averages by approving a package of revised undergraduate academic regulations last night.

The Council also accepted an extensive report which takes the entire Southwest Residential College programs into review.

Other academic rule changes presented by the committee of undergraduate deans include the following:

—Students electing the pass-fail option may receive a letter grade for the course if it would improve their cumulative average.

—The add period will be shortened from 28 days to ten calendar days. Although students will continue to have 28 days to drop courses, they will only have ten calendar days to drop them with no record.

—An attempt will be made early in a student's academic career to identify, and, if necessary, place on academic suspension those students having academic "trouble".

—Students will be allowed no more than ten semesters to complete all graduation requirements.

'I think the administration will be more than happy to tell us as much as they can. I feel strongly that this is an open university...' said Otto Stein.

The package of academic rule changes is now on its way to the Faculty Senate for a final decision.

The SW report, which was presented by the AMC's subcommittee on special programs, specifically affirmed SW's current commitment to problems of "human oppression," particularly those of racism and sexism.

John A. Hunt, acting associate provost for special programs and former master of SW said, "This report affirms the importance of an alternative academic program in a residential area both as an instrument to create community and to provide learning in areas not treated by the rest of the University."

The AMC will review some of the report's recommendations and will send those remaining to the Rules Committee of the Faculty Senate.

In other AMC business, the Council expressed strong interest in having the administration publicize where and how many staff cuts will be made on this campus. The Council received "earlier assurances" from both Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and President Robert C. Wood that "staff cuts would be equitably distributed and that such action would be made public."

The Council also expressed its concern over the fact that "approximately 100 faculty positions will not be filled for the coming academic year."

A motion was unanimously passed by the Council requesting the offices of the Provost, Chancellor, and the President to furnish it with the appropriate data concerning projected staff cuts.

Otto Stein, professor of botany, said, "It was agreed by the President and Chancellor at a recent Faculty Senate meeting that the University would make public the areas and degrees to which staff reductions would take place, having in mind that such burdens should fall equally in the administrative and academic areas."

"My feeling is that this is something which is the right of the whole University to know. I think the administration will be more than happy to tell us as much as they can. I feel strongly that this be an open university and that there should be a free flow of information."

North Vietnamese troops advance toward Saigon

Gen. Minh demands that Thieu resign

SAIGON [UPI] — North Vietnamese regular troops were sighted less than 12 miles from Saigon yesterday. Gen. Duong Van (Big) Minh demanded that President Nguyen Van Thieu resign before Saigon "becomes another Phnom Penh."

In Washington Sen. John Sparkman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, met yesterday with South Vietnamese Foreign Minister Vuong Van Vac and said the Saigon government is prepared to enter into unconditional negotiations for a cease-fire.

Sparkman said, however, that the North Vietnamese so far have refused any negotiation unless Thieu resigns, the United States ends its aid to South Vietnam and a government of national reconciliation is formed in Saigon.

American officials were preparing a special processing center at Saigon's Tan Son Nhut air base to expedite the evacuation of non-essential American citizens and their Vietnamese families as ordered by President Ford.

Military sources said elements of a North Vietnamese troop unit were spotted just northwest of Gia Dinh, which is 10 miles northwest of Saigon. It was the first time Communist regulars have been reported in that area within Saigon's northern defense perimeter since the Tet offensive of 1968.

Earlier yesterday, the sources said, South Vietnamese war planes destroyed three Communist 130mm long range artillery pieces only 31 miles from Saigon.

Northeast of Saigon, battered government forces fought to hold positions along Highway 1 as hordes of refugees streamed past them toward Saigon, the ultimate goal of rampaging Communist troops.

To the southwest of the menaced capital, Communist forces moved 130mm artillery pieces to the southernmost section of the Mekong Delta and used them to shell a South Vietnamese transport ship, military sources said.

Minh, an arch political rival of Thieu, said that if Thieu remained in power in Saigon, South Vietnam would collapse.

Minh, who led the 1963 coup that toppled the government of the late Ngo Dinh Diem, spoke at a luncheon he held for reporters at Thu Duc, six miles north of Saigon.

"The present situation is not hopeless," Minh said. "Non-Communist Vietnamese can still negotiate a relatively good political solution with the Communists within the framework of the Paris peace accords.

"But the urgent problem now is that the government of President Nguyen Van Thieu should resign, for the national interest, and in Saigon, there should be a new government which can implement the agreement."

"The remaining time is short," Minh added.

A group of South Vietnamese troops sit back on a truck in Hung Loc waiting to be evacuated after having been wounded in the fighting in Xuan Loc, 40 miles east of Saigon.

Indochina developments

Funds delayed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee refused yesterday to vote any evacuation funds until the White House speeds the removal of Americans from Saigon.

Some members accused Graham Martin, the U.S. ambassador to South Vietnam, of dragging his feet on evacuation plans, but committee Chairman John Sparkman, D-Ala., said:

"The President has assured us that the message will go out to the ambassador that the evacuation will be speeded up." Earlier, Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., said a Viet Cong representative had assured him the Communists would cooperate in the evacuation of Americans and not interfere with the departure of South Vietnamese

Viet Cong to assist

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., said yesterday a Viet Cong representative had assured him the Communists would cooperate in evacuation of Americans from Saigon and not interfere with departure of South Vietnamese.

Solarz, whose report came amid growing congressional demands for quick removal of Americans from South Vietnam, urged the State Department to act on that assurance "immediately and with diplomatic vigor."

Solarz told the House International Relations Committee that he received the assurances in Paris Wednesday at a meeting with Phan Van Ba, chief of the Viet Cong's mission in the Paris capital.

Aid vote expected

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Chairman John Stennis, D-Miss., said yesterday he expects his Senate Armed Services Committee will vote new military aid to South Vietnam, but stopped short of predicting the full Congress will go along.

Stennis said the panel is considering a $515 million military aid package, which it arrived at on its own without consulting the administration.

US must seek new world order: Kissinger

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said yesterday Americans must "pay the price of our setbacks in Indochina" by striving even harder to lead a new world order.

In a confident pep talk on what he called "the new order" of world affairs, Kissinger said most Americans have the "confidence" and "bouyancy" to reject isolationism in spite of "a deep and chromic self-doubt...in the great urban centers."

"We must learn the right lessons from today's trials," he said in an address to the American Society of Newspaper Editors. "We shall have to pay the price for our setbacks in Indochina by increasing our exertions" in the foreign policy field.

"Our nation is uniquely endowed to play a creative and decisive role in the new order which is taking form around us," he said. "The world still looks to us for a protecting hand, a mediating influence, a path to follow...

"We have come of age and we shall do our duty."

Kissinger mentioned the concrete problem of emergency aid for Vietnam only once in his 3,000 word speech, saying: "The Vietnam debate has now run its course...

"Let us all now abide by the verdict of the Congress, without recrimination or vindictiveness."

His conciliatory remarks contrasted sharply with those of President Ford, who told the editors Wednesday that America had failed to fulfill its commitments to South Vietnam and said "it makes me sick every time I read about it or hear about it."

Kissinger conceded many Americans regard U.S. involvement in Vietnam as "a dreadful mistake," and are dispirited by it. But he said they are in the minority.

"When one ventures away from Washington into the heart of America one is struck by the confidence, the buoyancy and the lack of any corrosive cynicism..." he said.

"There is a great resevoir of confidence within America. We have the values, the means and we bear the responsibility to strive for a safer and better world."

Administration refuses talks at Brown

Attendance drops to 5% on 3rd day

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — Students continued their boycott of classes at Brown University yesterday with no sign the administration would renew discussions in a dispute over the Ivy League school's new austerity budget.

A spokesman for the Student Coalition Coordinating Committee said 95 per cent of the Brown undergraduates stayed away from classes in the third day of the so-called "strike."

The boycott, which started Tuesday, has been peaceful, unlike the campus strikes around the country in the late 1960's.

After two coalition calls for renewed talks, there was no indication the administration desired to meet again to discuss student demands for an extra $350,000 in next year's budget to fund increased financial aid, student services, faculty teaching time and minority programs.

The trustees meet on campus Saturday to take final budget action.

Monday, Brown president Dr. Donald Hornig said he saw "no prospect at the moment of continuing talks because I am not really aware of anything new to talk about."

He estimated Brown was losing $4 million annually and had to cut its spending next year by $2 million to get its feet on the ground.

Attendance at classes Thursday was heaviest in the science areas but university and student leaders both estimated overall non-participation at about 75 per cent.

Jury acquits Connally on bribery charge

Compiled from Wires

WASHINGTON - A federal jury acquitted former Treasury Secretary John B. Connally late yesterday of charges he took a $10,000 bribe for helping to persuade President Richard M. Nixon to raise price supports for raw milk.

Connally, who had been reading a Bible while the jury deliberated six hours and 45 minutes, sat motionless as the jury foreman stood and said in a calm voice: "We find the defendant not guilty."

Connally's wife Nellie nodded her head and whispered "Oh, thank you."

Connally, a former Texas governor and once touted as a presidential candidate, was one of only a handful of persons to be freed of charges among the more than 50 accused of Watergate-related crimes.

Connally, was the fourth member of Nixon's Cabinet to be accused of official wrongdoing. The other three-former Attorneys General John N. Mitchell and Richard G. Kleindienst and former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans - were convicted.

Connally still faces charges of conspiracy and perjury in connection with the same indictment. But it is believed extremely doubtful that those charges will ever go to trial inasmuch as the bribery allegation provided the basis for them.

Before handing down the verdict, the jury had asked Hart for a transcript of the two days of Jacobsen's testimony.

The jurors were dismissed with expressions of "deep appreciation for your careful consideration" by the judge. The entire procedure lasted only five minutes.

Figures show recession is deepening

By United Press International

The recession has become the longest and most severe since the Great Depression, but inflation has eased to the slowest rate in nearly two years, the government said yesterday.

The Commerce Department said the economy, as measured by the gross national product, plunged 10.4 per cent in the first three months of the year. It was the sharpest drop since the nation dismantled its wartime industry in 1946.

But consumer price increases slowed to an annual rate of 8 per cent since January. This is a significantly slower rate of inflation than the 14.4 per cent increase in the last three months of last year and the lowest since the 7.3 annual rate in the second quarter of 1973.

Commerce also said production fell faster that prices could rise in the first quarter. In this measurement of actual GNP, the decline was 3.2 per cent, the first in 15 years.

news summary

Primary defeated

MONTPELIER, Vt. [UPI] - Vermont's bid for a March presidential primary was aborted by the Vermont House yesterday, to the delight of New Hampshire officials readying legislation to preserve their first-in-that-nation primary status.

A bill allowing Vermonters to express their presidential preferences on Town Meeting Day March 2 - the same date as the New Hampshire primary - was killed on a 65 to 79 House roll call.

During more than an hour of floor debate, supporters argued a presidential primary would boost Vermont's economy during election years and focus national attention here.

Celebration planned

CONCORD, Mass. [AP] - From all over the country, they're coming, each in his own way, to celebrate the men who 200 years ago "did great things, unconscious they were great" at a rough-hewn wooden bridge in Concord.

President Ford, in his first visit to Massachusetts since taking office, will be among the more than 120,000 visitors expected Saturday in Concord.

Estimates of the expected visitors have run as high as a quarter million, but town officials say they'll close off the town limits when the 120,000 mark is reached.

Hamster elected

EL PASO, Tex. [AP] — University of Texas — El Paso students have elected a hamster to a student senate seat. The hamster, named Stripers, was run under the slogan "the only candidate honest enough to admit he's a rat."

Nutrition-conscious groups urge Americans to change eating habits

United Press International

Nutrition-conscious groups in more than 20 states urged other Americans Thursday to change a pattern of eating habits that "is leading to tooth decay, obesity, bowel cancer and heart disease."

Proclaiming the opening of Food Day, Washington biologist Michael Jacobsen said, "Our food policies have been guided by economic interests rather than nutritional or humanitarian interests. We're encouraged to eat foods bad for our health."

Despite the lack of the usual joint congressional resolution supporting such "national" days, and a cloud of controversy within the food-nutrition industry, Jacobsen enrolled an impressive list of activists in the observance he initiated on a shoestring budget six months ago. Mayor Frank Rizzo officially proclaimed Food Day in Philadelphia. In Boston a traveling van called town meetings on food questions. Some students at Stanford University in California fasted for one day in "sort of an Earth Day for the tummy."

The nation's Roman Catholic hierarchy joined Food Day observances by calling for a comprehensive national food policy governed by the needs of the hungry rather than profits. The American Vegetarians called for elimination of animal products, mainly meat, from American diets that develop bigger-boned people with the "body of a Grand Prix and a Volkswagon engine." The grain used to feed meat animals could feed more people if used directly, a group coordinator said.

Esther Peterson, consumer adviser to Giant Food, a Washington-area supermarket chain, proposed in a full-page newspaper ad Thursday a "Terrific Ten" program of good foods, including whole wheat bread and vegetables with "crunch."

Jacobsen, a member of the Ralph Nader-affiliated Center for Science in the Public Interest, roused the ire of nutritionists and part of the food industry some months ago by issuing a list of the "Terrible Ten" foods he said "epitomized everything wrong with the American food supply."

Along with such "empty foods" as some popular breads and soft drinks, Jacobsen included grapes — not because of nutritional lack, but because the United Farm Workers are boycotting them. He also included foods grown with chemical fertilizers.

Jacobsen said no single food is destroying America's health but added, "It's the pattern of eating that's developed that is leading to tooth decay, obesity, bowel cancer and heart disease."

★ Student Town Meeting sends State House, trustees 9 demands

calling for a strike throughout the course of the meeting.

The last strike by students here, called for two years ago today in a similar meeting, demanded a halt of the escalated U.S. bombing campaign of Vietnam and the end of racist and sexist oppression on campus.

According to UMass administrators reached yesterday by the Collegian, a student strike would not be a "good tactic."

Vice chancellor Robert W. Gage said in a telephone interview yesterday, "A strike is not an effective strategy. It would not be productive because it would not help us get more money here."

Strike Committee member John Pepi said, "The strike is a crucial event allowing students to organize en masse for both lobbying and pressuring the State House. A strike would build support for a fee boycott which will put the crunch on the University administration."

The nine demands and their respective student actions include: no budget cuts, no financial aid cuts and no tuition increase.

ACTION — A peaceful rally at the State House, recognition of the Coalition for a Peoples' Budget (CPB);

ACTION — endorsement of CPB; no cutbacks in special programs, no cuts in minority and general enrollment, no cuts in human services, and no worker cuts;

ACTION — Educate people about results of budget cuts. Affirmative action policy implementation and a complete statistical report by Wednesday.

ACTION — A call for complete access to affirmative action data. Equal student input in decisions regarding day care, campus parking, and mandatory dorm living and meal plan;

ACTION — Formation of a University Community Meeting negotiating team. Trustee recognition of the Union of Student Employees. Trustee adoption of the Student Union Enabling Act; ACTION — Educate students on union power. The Student Center for Educational Research (SCER) be given access to Campus Center records. No state welfare cuts.

In addition, the following four items were carried by a strong voice vote from students:

—a referendum calling for a strike or educational moratorium of classes next week to implement the demands.

—the formation of a negotiating team representing the University community at the trustees' Student Affairs Committee meeting Tuesday on campus.

—A University Community meeting for Wednesday to receive a report from the negotiating team.

—A mass demonstration outside the Student Affairs meeting Tuesday in the Campus Center.

Dr. Wa Nsanga Mukendi

Visiting geology prof provides African insight

By MIKE SILVA
Staff Reporter

He speaks six languages. At different stages in his life he has worked as a secondary school teacher, a research assistant at a geography and resource institute in Germany, and as a mining geologist in Africa.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery calls him "one of the few people who really understand the economic geography of Africa from an African perspective."

Profile

Dr. Wa Nsanga Mukendi left his post as a professor of geology and geography at the National University of Zaire this semester to join the UMass faculty as a visiting professor. Mukendi is teaching in the Department of Geology and Geography in the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies.

Although his specialty is mining geology, Mukendi's research interests reach into such areas as economic geography and land development in central Africa, the geography of frontiers and the development of black Africa generally. Through his research he hoped to come up with answers to some very important questions — In which direction should African development go? What would be the benefits of unification for all of Africa? Emphasis on which one first: development or unification?

A native of Zaire, Mukendi spent the greater part of the past decade studying geographic and geological sciences at the University of Cologne in Germany, receiving his Ph.D. in 1968. Upon returning to Zaire, he took on the job of a mining geologist with a mining firm in Shaba, his home province.

Since his return, Mukendi has become aware of a growing expressiveness of ideas among the people which was not possible at the time of his leaving for Germany. "When I was younger, Shaba was part of the Belgium Congo and when I returned, Shaba was an independent part of Zaire. The attitude of the people is now freer than in the past because if a man is free, his behavior is more expressive than if a man is not free," said Mukendi.

In regard to the development of Zaire and of Africa in general, Mukendi stresses more diversification in production and increased localization of consumption. At present, most of the benefits of Zaire's development are being enjoyed by the countries in Europe and North America which carry on trade with Zaire. Because its economy is geared toward exploration, the development of the mining and agriculture "sectors" is dependent upon the needs and wishes of foreigners.

What must be accomplished now, according to Mukendi, "is to create different services such as the transportation of manufactured goods and agricultural products from the production centers to the local consumption centers." The end result, hopefully, he says, will be less expensive products locally, more fluent circulation and exchange of money, and a more equal distribution of wealth.

"The result of this confrontation between these two elements, man and land, is the influence that the man has upon the land — the geological research and the mining for sources of energy and power," said Mukendi. He cautions, however, that the mining will be an important source for development only if "those in positions of responsibility can influence the economic and political decision-making with regard to which direction the development must go."

Concerning his research on the geographic frontiers of Africa, Mukendi hopes to show the political leaders in Africa the common interests that the African nations share and how "we work against our own interests if we maintain the boundaries."

5-College committee funds groups, invites science lecturer

By NANCY DAWSON
Staff Reporter

The Five College Lecture Committee in a meeting last Tuesday voted to fund the UMass Southwest Center for Racial Understanding and the Hampshire College Third World Festival Committee.

The group also decided to bring a guest speaker, Emmanuel Velikovski, to the Five College area in early May. He is the author of the book, World in Collision. According to Ken Kassler, member of the Five College Lecture Committee and Amherst representative to the Five College Student Coordinating Board (FCSCB), Velikovski is "a scientist and philosopher of science." He is to give a lecture, Kassler said, and "travel around to classes" among the five colleges. The location for the lecture, however, has not yet been determined.

The Southwest Center for Racial Understanding will hold a People's Liberation Week May 1-4. Kassler explained this is a symposium on prejudice and racism that will take place on the UMass campus.

The 1975 Festival presented by the Third World Festival Committee began April 13th and will continue to April 25th. The theme of this festival is "Shanti — the Third World in the wake of cultural nationalism." Kassler said "speakers, concerts, and dancers" are involved in this event, which is on-going at Hampshire College.

Kassler spoke a little about the Lecture Committee itself, one of several committees of the FCSCB. It is completing its second functional year, and Kassler said he has been a member since the fall. Five professors, one from each college, belong to the committee. The Five College Coordinator in charge of Academic Affairs, Jacqueline Pritzen, serves the committee in the capacity of chairperson and secretary.

The Lecture Committee operates through supporting proposals for symposiums, lectures, and films. Basic funding guidelines, said Kassler, require that the group or cause seeking support be publicized throughout the Pioneer Valley and have a wide appeal. There should also be five college participation in the sponsored activity.

"Our guidelines are not rigid," Kassler said, "so we have a really wide variety of things coming in."

One problem is that most proposals are introduced to the Lecture Committee in the spring, because they are usually worked out during the fall. Kassler said, "As a result we have nothing in the fall and a heckuvalot in spring. We're thinking of soliciting proposals for the coming fall."

The Lecture Committee meets again next Tuesday.

Attorney speaks on legal writing

By PAUL BONARRIGO
Staff Reporter

"Malpractice suits against lawyers often result from the lawyer's failure to interpret contracts effectively," said distinguished New York attorney, Eliott Biskind, to an audience of prelaw students in the Campus Center last night.

Biskind pointed out that legal terminology today is the same as it was in eighteenth century England. He said he was against most legal terminology because it is ambiguous.

Ambiguity can change the meaning of a contract, a legal statute or a court decision, Biskind said.

"To avoid this you should arrange words so your sentences tell exactly what you want to say," advised Biskind. "Keep related words together to make your meaning clear. Always use active verbs; the passive blurs meaning and bore judges. You can often make use of literary allusions to make your meaning clear. Communication requires style and logical coherence. A lawyer writes constantly and must communicate effectively in his writing."

Eliott L. Biskind has written books on simplifying legal writing, Real Estate law, family law, and city planning.

Campus Bicentennial Panel gives approval to 15 projects

The University of Massachusetts Amherst Campus Bicentennial Committee has settled on the theme "A Past to Remember — A Future to Mold." The Committee has been meeting since September to help the campus organize itself to celebrate the Bicentennial.

Thus far, 15 projects have been approved by the Committee: A special Bicentennial issue of the Massachusetts Review; Concert of 200 years of Music, Art, and Letters of Black Americans; 200 Years of American Dance presentation; Improvisational childrens' theater for local schools; Massachusetts Wide Bicentennial Youth Debates; Premier Bicentennial opera "Stranger in Eden";Taping the oral history of the University; Radio series focusing on critical issues in America's future; Field Guide for the study of America's folk traditions; Symposia on Legal, Scientific, and Ethical issues in America's future; Public presentation of Broadsides and the press during the Colonial Era; Bicentennial Student Essay Contest; Musical production of "1776"; A Bicentennial film library to augment Public Speakers; A nationwide book contest;

The Bicentennial celebration on campus will follow the model proposed by the federal government: Heritage '76 (the study of our past); Festival USA (the birthday party); and Horizons '76 (the contemplation of likely and preferred futures).

Want to speak at Commencement?

Student Matters Committee voted recently to allow two students to speak at the 1975 commencement exercises May 31 at Alumni Stadium.

Anyone interested in speaking can apply at the Student Senate office in the Student Union. Each applicant must submit a position paper on their topic and must explain why they want to speak at the graduation by May 1.

The applicants must choose a topic that is of interest to all attending the exercises. The only requirement is that each applicant must be a senior.

The Student Matters Committee will review the position papers and interview ten finalists. The committee will select the two speakers by May 9.

50% of alcoholics are women

Women make up at least 50 per cent of all alcoholics, according to Evelyn Duston, health educator from the University Health Services.

Duston spoke on "Women and Alcohol" to a small group of women Tuesday at the second meeting of the Health Education Division's series of programs on topics in women's health.

Although society considers alcoholism primarily a male disease, Duston said that it is due to the fact that such a large number of female alcoholics are women at home with children. Even single career women are more apt to drink alone, she said.

"For every man in a bar, there is a woman drinking somewhere where she won't be seen publicly."

Duston gave examples of three different women alcoholics and considered the reasons for their problem drinking. The audience was asked to pinpoint personal or societal pressures which could be responsible in creating female alcoholics.

Because there is no common agreement on a definition of "excessive drinking", women are apt to become alcoholics by not being culturally limited or pressured to curb their drinking. In cultures where the limit is defined, said Duston, alcoholism is minimal due to peer group pressure against excess.

According to Duston, other reasons for female alcoholism include: drinking to relax and feel less inferior to men; confusion over conflicting role models; boredom from having no goal-oriented as housewives and mothers; and guilt or fear over conflicting sexual mores and pressures.

Added to these are feelings of anger and inadequacy, Duston said.

How can the problem of female alcoholism be dealt with? The first step is to bring women with drinking problems "out of the closet" and include them in programs which to date have been male-oriented.

The next meeting of the University Women's Health Series will discuss the topic of pelvic and breast examination, and take place at the Colonial Lounge at noon Tuesday.

FEMINISTS OVERCOME DOWN UNDER is the word from the Indiana Daily Student. The Bloomington campus newspaper reports that the Australian government is honoring the International Women's Year by naming storms after men.

PROFS HAVE LONG SUSPECTED what Sylvia Porter now confirms in a recent syndicated column: one out of every 15 Americans is afflicted with loss of hearing.

It is the most widespread malady in the U.S., affecting more Americans than heart disease, cancer, blindness, tuberculosis, venereal disease, multiple sclerosis and kidney disease put together, she says.

UMass has an efficient free hearing disorders clinic, by the way, which will test, diagnose and recommend correction of hearing problems.

Do you hear?

HARASSING LOVERS is brounds for eviction from dormitory rooms in New Jersey, according to a recent court ruling reported in the Torch of S.E. Mass. College.

Seems that a roommate surprised her roommate in a compromising position with a boyfriend, "just stood there pointing fingers and calling names while the poor guy in bed didn't know what to do," according to court testimony in a case involving Jersey City State college.

There's no written rule against fornication on campus at JCSC, so the action concerned which of the roommates who didn't get along would be forced to move out. The witness to the bed scene refused to move out, even though she had least seniority, which is the basis for resolving disputes of warring roommates, school officials said.

The college took the case to court and won an eviction notice for the coitus interruptor.

'Tis good to know the law loves lovers, too.

IPO funds close to zero

In two years the Student Senate has cut funds for the International Programs Office (IPO) from close to $4,000 to nothing.

Kevin Muldoon, Chairperson of the Student Senate Budget Committee, said that the IPO was not benefiting a large enough number of undergraduate students to receive funds.

"IPO is a Whitmore operation, with a full-time staff and a Whitmore bank account," said Muldoon. He added that a $5,000 Educational Honoraria Fund, and a Foreign Student's Loan Fund provided some money for IPO use.

IPO head Barbara Burn said in an interview that the loss of Student Senate funding means that "some students who require scholarships to go overseas won't get them."

Burn said that students must now apply for financial aid and that it is harder to get that aid now. Burn feared that "the program may become only for those who have money. I hate to see that," she said.

Prior to the past two years, Student Senate funding of the IPO had been rising. Muldoon said that a motion to fund IPO had been defeated this year, but did not rule out the possibility of the motion being re-introduced next year. "It might get on next year, but it still might not get passed," said Muldoon.

Kyogen, Comic Theatre, to appear

UMass Arts Council will conclude its 1974-75 Third World Cultural Series Sunday, April 20, with the presentation of Kyogen, National Comic Theatre of Japan in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

There will be one performance only.

The classic Noh-Kyogen theatre of Japan is one of the oldest in the world.

Together they create the universal cycle of Yin and Yang, Heaven and Earth, Light and Shadow, Tears and Laughter.

The Kyogen production will feature for the first time in this country two distinguished acting families, the Nomura of Tokyo and the Shigeyamas of Kyoto.

Kyogen, in form and substance, often delights in lifting the veil of pretense to reveal the frailties of man in a refined and telling variation. It is considered funny, impudent and irreverent, often daring in its treatment of materials in the art of pantomime.

Tickets for the event are now on sale at the UMass Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall (545-0202) and are priced at $4 and $3, UMass students, half price. Special group rates may be arranged.

The result: A beginning

By B. J. ROCHE

The men in green were there in Campus Center best; Channel 22 was there, and a rumor was circulating that Dylan was going to appear. Dylan did not make it; however over 2,200 students did show up for a Town Meeting of sorts last night, at which a strategy was set for next week to protest budget cuts and administration actions and inactions.

A certain electricity filled the air as the Ballroom filled with more people than had been expected, such that the meeting had to be broadcast over MUA and people had to be turned away. It wasn't a concert, or even Irish night at the Bluewall; students seemed ready for anything from an evening of entertainment to a riot. Amid a somewhat confusing atmosphere some concrete resolutions were approved.

Demands made at last night's meeting will be forwarded to the administration, the Trustees and the Legislature. This action is intended to cover all angles on the protest, both on campus and in Boston.

STUDENT UNITY

Activities are organized for today, beginning with an open meeting at 10:00 this morning to select a negotiating team. The team will then present demands to the various bodies, working with the administration until Tuesday. In addition, organizational activity will take place all day today. For information, attend this morning's meeting if possible.

On Tuesday, the negotiating team will then meet with the Board of Trustees Student Affairs Committee at 1:00 p.m. A mass demonstration is being planned for that day, with the location to be announced. If sufficient action to demands is not taken prior to or at Tuesday's meeting, a second Town Meeting, similar to last night's will take place on Wednesday evening. At that time, a strike referendum will be discussed and voted upon. If it is a[illegible]ved, a strike vote for the University community will take place on Thurs[illegible]

The exact de[illegible] of a strike has not yet been determined, but it will be discussed and defined more sharply at Wednesday night's meeting. There are still many questions to be answered, and hopefully discussion and organization will be the vehicles for alleviating the confusion.

Last night's meeting was a milestone. The fact that so many students could get toget[illegible] in one room (we all know about Sylvan singles) is a feat in itself, but th[illegible]generated in the SUB last night must not be allowed to diffu[illegible]e to a lack of knowledge of what's going on, or even due to a [illegible]end.

For those who are going home, talk about it to your parents. Even though we are adults, we have been told to get our parents to write the Legislature. It may be humiliating, but war is hell.

Next week may be the turning point in the protest. We have seen what can be done when enough of us get together, now it must be carried on: to the demonstration on Tuesday and to the Town Meeting on Wednesday night.

Capitalism: Soviet style

By Norm Robinson

This past week Sports Illustrated had a very good article on the Russian athletic hero, Vasili Alexeyev, who is labeled "The World's Strongest Man". Not only his phenomenal feats were depicted in the article but also revealed were some background aspects of life in Shakhty, Alexeyev's current home.

The portrayals between the different employments were especially interesting. According to Alexeyev, the average Soviet teacher or office worker earns about 130 rubles a month, which amounts to some $45.00 a week. Doctors make around $52.00 a week. The coal miners of Shakhty, who break their backs working in the deep, dangerous mines, earn the "hefty" salary of $70.00 a week. These miners are considered the backbone of the city, which shows why they are paid more than doctors, teachers, or businessmen.

This shows a direct comparison to Great Britain in its heyday, which was from the latter 1700's to middle 1800's. During this era Britain was extensively capitalistic and powerful. Only when interests in better standards of living, better wages and working conditions and other forms of humanization took place did Britain start to decline in its worldly influence. As with the Russian miners, Britain's proletariat toiled for long hours of the day, and then spent their evenings getting smashed to cope with their hard days. Alexeyev pointed out that many Soviet miners currently get drunk and violent each night, which is why the Sports Illustrated author wasn't permitted in any of the local people's nightclubs or restaurants. Alexeyev himself, who is on the Soviet Weightlifting Team, also has to work a second job as a mining engineer. So revealed that he does get many benefits being a world champion, but that outside of exclusive brackets such as this no such benefits are given to the Soviet people. This is why he had to push so hard all his life to get to be anything.

Gordie Hower makes more money than the entire first Russian hockey team and reserves combined. If they only get a fraction of what they're worth, then who gets all the surplus money from their endeavors? The state? If the people get it, it comes in the form of higher prices. Goods in Russia are in no way inexpensive. This seems to me to be very capitalistic. To extract everything possible from the proletariat in exchange for low wages and benefits could be called little else.

One of the better illustrations of Soviet capitalism was in the engaging of arbitrage with our wheat. Here the U.S. hopefully learned their lesson.

This might explain where Russia gets all the money it uses to sponsor its interests in foreign countries. And its interests are to be seen everywhere in the world. James Nollet was quite correct when he stated that nobody whenever disruptions come from a leftist origin. But will Russia ever make the "mistake" that Britain made? Will they ever take an interest in humanization? I tend to doubt it. They have too much to "lose." Thus the disease of Communism will probably keep spreading, and only the strong will survive. That is why Russia only concentrates mainly on weak subjects, like Vietnam and Portugal.

How much apathy can we feel for the common Soviet people? After long years of Soviet brainwashing, they seem to be content, if not happy. Acceptance is being evidenced as time wears on.

Are they really missing something valuable? Even though it seems we have few choices to make sometimes, at least we have the freedom to make these choices. The Soviet citizens will never know this freedom. Unless...But I'd hate to think of what this 'unless' would require. Only time will tell. Until then, just a dream will have to suffice.

Striking out at Whitmore

We have heard much talk of the inappropriateness of strikes. We feel that these arguments are based on several misconceptions. First, there is the feeling that students will not be able to complete their semester's work if they participate in a strike. Also, the notion is often expressed that student strike leaders are in it for their own gains. Strikes are seen as merely short term mass actions, rather than long term activities involving mass education and organization.

The faculty has indicated broad based support in our present struggle since it is their struggle as well. As to whether strike leaders are invloved for their own gains - this is totally foolish, there is nothing to gain for the individual in a strike. There are many people involved in this strike action intent upon establishing an effective, grassroots student lobby.

For several reasons a strike is necessary. Students have to be educated as to how Whitmore and the Trustees have disregarded students' needs and student input into decision-making. The people in power have even disregarded the Student Government Association -- The previously established means for student input. Obviously, it's time for a change!

It is imperative that the people who control this University are shown that the students are not apathetic. What this type of mass demonstrative action will do is let the administration know that students are ready, willing and able to involve themselves in self-determination. There is currently no mechanism that provides for grass-roots student participation. During the strike the students will be able to become involved for the first time. For these reasons we feel a strike is immediately essential!

Rational look at sexism

In reference to Carl Mathewson's letter of April 11, 1975:

Carl,

You have every right to criticize the Collegian for printing articles and letters that are particularly offensive to your set of values. I'll agree with you that there is some material printed that is extremely offensive to me also, but that also is based on my set of values. The one thing that does stand out as a positive point for the Collegian is that it is a forum for providing opposing points of view. If you put it on paper I sincerely believe they'll print it eventually.

There is sexism built into our system and our socialization that oppresses both men and women. Women have borne the brunt of that oppression. Men, as a whole, do hold the positions of economic and political power in this country. A more equal sharing of that power is what is being called for and constructively worked for.

There is oppression of men in subtler ways. We, as men, have the money, the control, the power. Everything that is valued in our society we as men already have. In order to maintain the possession of these things, men are conditioned to serve as workhorses for the system. We are work objects. Our value is measured in the amount of dollars we can produce for the company. Materialistic gains as a measure of manhood are waved in our face like a carrot.

I am presently involved in a men's movement that is beginning to grow in small ways on this campus and around the country. I see it as having two goals at the moment: 1] becoming aware of and fighting sexism that oppresses both men and women; 2] creating formats for men to look at their lives as males in this country and gaining awareness of what that means to them as individuals.

By the way, there is a "Manspace" entitled "men's affairs" on a board in the commuter's lounge. It is open to anything concerning men that you wish to put there. As a matter of fact, you can contact me by putting it to use. Just leave your name and number in the "Manspace".

Troublemakers 'in' again?

I am responding to a statement made by Sam Bowles who spoke at the Rally on Tuesday. This speaker suggested that the school's administration and the country's capitalist authorities have been noticing lately that the schools of higher education are turning out not only responsible citizens that work well with the system, but troublemakers, as well. He proceeded to exclaim, "Let's hear it for the troublemakers," at which point the crowd broke into an enthusiastic applause.

My concern is, do we, as students who desire the administration to understand our position on cutbacks, really want to be known as troublemakers??

CHILD DRAMA. Janet Erickson. This workshop will focus on activities in child drama & theatre games.

It's spring, a time for light winds and bright flowers. Rain, tennis, scenic drives. And the Marathon at the School of Education.

Marathon, Spring '75 will run from Tuesday through Thursday, April 22-24. The program will include a mini-marathon on sports in education, and sessions on Vietnam-related topics.

Opening day, Tuesday, will focus on four current education topics: Chapter 766 and the impact of this special education law on Massachusetts, the Constitutional rights of students, competency-based teacher certification and its implications for the State, and sexism in education.

Workshops, demonstrations, and other activities will be offered beginning at 9 a.m. each of the three days, and continuing through 5 p.m. Tuesday and through 6:30 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday. Several of the events will be presented on more than one day; final schedules will be available at the Marathon, in the School of Education building on the north end of the campus.

Here is a sampling of events scheduled.

Opening day events on the four education topics will include: Chapter 766 — "766 and Its Impact in Massachusetts," a panel discussion headed by Dr. Robert Jackson, Special Education chairman at UMass. Constitutional rights of students — UMass Prof. Harvey Scribner and several school superintendents will present a panel titled "Constitutional Rights of Students: A Judicial Challenge to the School Community." Competency-based teacher certification — another panel, titled "Competency Based Education — Implications for Massachusetts." Sexism — "Sexism in Children's Books."

The mini-Marathon on sports will offer such sessions as: "What the Hell is a Gym Class?", "Chapter 766: Where are the Physical Educators?", "School Athletics: Education or Mis-Education?" Vietnam-related topics will include: "Amnesty," and "Vietnam in the News — Myths and Realities."

Day care will be offered each day, from 8:45 a.m. to 5:15 p.m. in the Kindergarten room of Marks Meadow Elementary School. There will be no fee for this service, but children must be toilet trained, and no older than nine.

All Marathon events are open to the public.

Bullets used by Amherst police

Dum-dum issue: Police power vs. civil liberty

News analysis

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

The controversy over which bullets the Amherst police department should use which surfaced in newspaper stories last week is a replay of a similar controversy in Boston last summer.

And the controversy would appear to be a classic conflict between the need to provide full power police as opposed to protecting — or overprotecting — the civil liberties and right-to-life of suspected criminals.

The dispute is between the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts (CLUM) and police departments — including Amherst's — which admit to using a kind of revolver ammunition which supposedly inflicts massive wounds in suspects. But the ammunition also is less likely to ricochet and hit bystanders to a crime, so police chiefs argue it is safer to the public than regular bullets.

The ammunition differs from regular bullets in its shape and material. It speeds to its target at up to twice the speed of regular bullets, and one state medical examiner says it does more damage than regular bullets.

On Saturday, Amherst police chief Donald H. Maia acknowledged that the Amherst police department uses .38 caliber, flat top, semijacketed, soft-nose bullets in an interview with an Amherst Record reporter.

The bullets would appear to be the same used by the Boston Police Department. That department refers to them as "high-energy, flat-tipped, wad-cutters" a police spokesman has said.

Although Maia says no clear definition of which bullets are called what, CLUM spokesmen and most police agree that such flat-tipped, soft lead bullets are commonly called "dum-dums."

The bullets mushroom on impact with human flesh, spreading the wound area and lodging inside a victim instead of passing through. The bullets the Amherst police appear to be using, however, do not "mushroom" as much as bullets the Massachusetts State Police acknowleged using last summer.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis ordered the state police to stop use of the "dum-dum" bullets several months ago. Former Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent had supported their use, saying his office had received no complaints. In the Amherst Record interview, Maia said Amherst police had fired their weapons only once recently — and that was a straight-up warning shot to a check-forger.

The hollow-tip "dum-dum" bullets used by state police until the Dukakis order are almost the same as the solid lead ones, but they have flat, instead of rounded noses. And the flat surface has a hole about one-sixteenth of an inch in diameter drilled into it. Thus, the tip peels back on impact.

The bullets the Amherst police appear to be using do not have the hole drilled, but the tip is somewhat flatter that the standard ammo used by police in most Boston suburbs.

Suffolk County medical examiner Dr. George W. Curtis said in an interview July 11 that he can tell when a shooting victim was hit by a hollow-tip bullet because of the wound. He said they do more damage than solid-lead bullets.

"In my opinion a hollow point bullet will cause more damage to an organ than a regular bullet...I know that they show tearing of organs — they have a rupturing effect on a victim."

CLUM director Joan Tuttle told the Record that her group is studying the partially-flat lead bullets Amherst uses and will have a report in a few weeks on them.

While members of the JFK Lower dorm government look on, Dr. Doug Forsyth, special assistant to the Chancellor, draws the winning ticket in their bike raffle. The prize, a Raleigh ten speed, was won by Ken Michaud of 496 North Pleasant St.

College head 'creamed' by pie desperados

BRUNSWICK, Maine [AP] — The infamous "Bowdoin Baker" and his lieutenants scored the biggest hit of their career Thursday, pelting Roger Howell Jr., the college president, with three cream pies.

A student in disguise, the baker caught Howell at high noon as the president was walking from the Bowdoin administration building toward his home.

The incident was described by students as the climax of a pie-throwing spree in which the baker, his lieutenants and "hit men" landed the mushy pies in the faces of more than 40 students and faculty members.

This generally quiet campus has been enlivened during the past two weeks by pie-throwing escapades, aimed at raising money for Vietnamese orphans.

The $50 "contract" on Howell was the largest ever made with the baker and his hit men. In the past, the standard fee has ranged between $2 and $4 for a student victim and $25 for a professor.

Nearly 100 students were gathered outside the student union as the pie-throwing combine approached Howell by car from various directions.

Wearing their customary garb, including ski masks, goggles, ponchos and sneakers, the hit men scattered firecrackers while the baker and his lieutenants fired the pies in rapid succession.

Managing a smile as he wiped the mess from his face, Howell flashed a thumbs-up sign to the crowd and said the timing, rather than the assault itself, was the big surprise.

The pie throwing phenomenon has blossomed in recent months at colleges throughout the nation, becoming perhaps the biggest campus fad since streaking.

Governor attacked by flying meringue

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. [UPI] — Gov. Ray Blanton was hit on the face with a lemon meringue pie Thursday as he was walking out of the Student Center at the University of Tennessee — Chattanooga.

The pie-thrower, identified as Paul Scates, a former student, was quickly taken into custody by campus police, but Blanton said he would not press charges.

"With my many years in politics, I was lucky I haven't had something thrown at me before," Blanton said from behind the meringue. He walked into the Student Center men's room, wiped the gooey pie from his face and later went to a hotel to change clothes.

The *Can*didate

"The highest perfection of society is found in the union of order and anarchy."

— Pierre Joseph Proudhon

Next Tuesday the Holy Enclave of the Student Government Association will present their annual equivalent of the Debutante Cotillion, the Presidential Elections. Yes, they'll all be there, the committee chairmen and women, the court jesters, the Deaconess of Detroit, the whole crew. They'll be about as representative of students as the South Vietnamese Government is of its people, and just like that government they won't give a damn that they're so worthless.

There will be one decent candidate for President that night, and for the first time in three years it won't be Henry Ragin. His name is Peter Lewicke (Ragin is his campaign manager), and he's been a Student Senator for as long as I've known of him. But don't hold that against him, he's an alright person. He's most noted for the fact that since he's been a Student Senator he has constantly submitted an amendment to the SGA constitution to delete it in its entirety, ending Student Government.

Obviously, that motion has never passed, since we're still burdened with the damned SGA albatross. Yes, I too took the Student Government seriously for most of my time here at UMass, but I've earned my cynicism. Consider:

—That the Student Senate has never done anything genuinely effective for students except to disburse Student Activity Tax Fund (SATF) money, which could be done by a few competent accountants. That every time something momentous comes up. the Senate is forced to accept a compromise with the administration, swallowing such innocuous bullshit as the "input they are given on policy making bodies as a cheap rationalization for their continued existence. In reality, the administration hasn't conceded a key point to any student body for as long as I can remember.

—That much of the Senate's time is spent in the hideous process, growing more prevalent every day, of students screwing students. That senators interested in their own personal advancement have stifled the efforts of the decent minority 100 per cent of the time.

—That it is these people who acquiesce in such decisions as the raises in room and board prices that have occurred over the past few years, and such things as the end of over 21 dormitory exemptions. They call these things "inevitable" after listening to the administration rap on the subject, thereby dooming their poorer fellow students to a premature end to the higher education to which they are entitled, since they just can't afford to go on. These are our representatives? WHO NEEDS THEM!

Lewicke would do this. He couldn't be reached on the phone for comment, but Ragin was. He laid out the Lewicke platform as follows:

—"We're not about to take any shit from the Administration and the stupid bureaucratic hacks who run the Student Government."

—"We want to do away with institutional organizations."

—"We want to do away with SATF."

(Ragin is realistic about Lewicke's chances.) "We don't anticipate our chances being very good," Ragin says. (Ragin was defeated by wide margins in both his presidential attempts.)

Maybe things will be different next year when the election goes to a popular vote. Maybe we'll finally get rid of a biased Student Judiciary, which is wrong even when it's right, using political bias and "what ought to be" in place of real legal interpretation.

Maybe we'll get rid of the Campus Center Board of Governors, an organization traditionally loaded down with junior bureaucrats so infatuated with their management status that they'd sell their fellow students down the river in a minute (are we supposed to shut up about them, since they held the CC fee stable for next year? Big shit.)

Sure, Peter Lewicke isn't the most serious candidate you'll ever see, and it's hard to agree with such a hardcore platform as his completely. The only plans he has should he win is to "demand a recount" according to Ragin. But he does represent people's efforts to try something non-traditional in this place, our laboratory for life. If we can't break free of the rotten system here, when the fuck will we?

Potpourri

By JAMES A. NOLLET

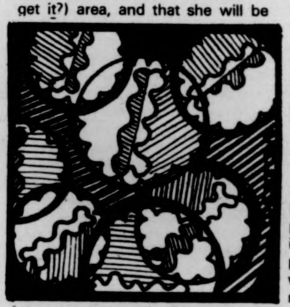
I have another case for the Joanne Little Committee, concern — one Miss E. Garcia of California, who recently was raped by two men. The first thing she did after being attacked was to go home to get a rifle, in order to execute her assailants. She succeeded in shooting one of them to death, and at her subsequent trial (!) remarked in a Nathan Halelike way, "I regret but that I only killed one of them."

And what was the judge's reaction? Did he congratulate her for her act of self-defense? No, to the contrary — he gave her a suspended sentence on a manslaughter conviction!

Note the similarities with the Joanne Little case. Both individuals are women. Both are members of ethnic minorities. Both are poor. Both were sexually molested, and both have been on trial for defending themselves.

For more information, see the editorial commentary page of the Friday morning, March 21 edition of The Boston Globe. I don't know what can be done for this poor woman, but I hope that some responsible committee takes up the cause on her behalf.

I hope that Patty Hearst IS in fact in the Amherst (Am — HERST — get it?) area, and that she will be arrested — but not before the end of the semester. Reason? I would like her to remain at large enough to write a letter to the editor condemning my reactionary attitudes. Imagine, being put down by Patty Hearst. What an addition such a letter would make to my files!



Speaking of radicals, I noted with satisfaction the recent interview Newsweek made with Eldridge Cleaver. In the interview, he admitted being disillusioned with Marxism, and stated his opinion that the Russians "would prefer that the U.S. cease to exist. I came to the conclusion that they were capable of launching a surprise attack." As a surprising corallary, he also went on record as favoring a strong U.S. defense establishment.

Eldridge Cleaver is a fortunate man. Of the many millions who have had the misfortune to experience Communism first hand, he is one of the few who are in a position to talk freely about it. And whatever else he is, Mr. Cleaver is no stooge, or an Uncle Tom. I only hope that his words, coming as they do from him, have a sobering influence on the various leftist groups in this country.

But I doubt it.

Wedding bells, wedding bills

On the front page of Wednesday's COLLEGIAN there appeared an article by Dave Kowal entitled, "Stefano Wedding Food Bill Remains Unpaid." Under normal circumstances it probably wouldn't attract much attention to it.

But look again. The wedding was last August. Eight months ago, even. So that raises a question: Why is it taking so long to get the bill paid off?

The next paragraph in that same story contained the statement made by John Corker, director of the Campus Center, who said he was not aware of the bill until he read about it in the COLLEGIAN.

Unaware? Of a $2400 bill outstanding since August? Which raises another question: Where was John Corker all this time?

Toward the end of the article, Vice-Chancellor Robert W. Gage said he is "leaving everything up to Corker." Which raises yet another question: What's Gage doing that's more important than the interests of students he is supposed to protect?

And finally the article said, according to Milton Kerstein, a member of the Campus Center Board of Governors, that the Board directed Corker to look into the matter and come to some conclusions (Corker reached no conclusions). Which raises still another question: what power does the Campus Center Board of Governors have, if any?

Judging by the way things look so far, I can honestly say that an acceptable answer for any of the above questions would be most difficult to obtain, if not totally out of the question.

Indeed, if questions such as these were raised about a multitude of issues involving this campus (and questions HAVE been raised), acceptable answers would most assuredly be few and far between.

For example, does anyone remember Mark Vogler's articles about alleged pilfering of dining commons food by employees? How about Avis Yuni's articles on Campus Center employees and the whole riff about overtime and layoffs? Surely you haven't forgotten our own Chancellor's statements, saying he wasn't sure whether student critiques of courses were to be considered as confidential information or not.

But if these things escape your memory, then look at the more recent revelations, such as the School of Ed scandal, or the case of Tony Tartaglia being fired from his job in the Bluewall for no given reason. Maybe President Wood could possibly explain why the state has to shell out $150,000 a year for his Government Center offices, and provide a helicopter for his use on top of that.

Starting to remember a few on your own? Then there was this, that and the other thing, right?

Now let me be the first person to state that I don't have ALL the information on these campus issues. If I did have, you can believe it wouldn't take people very long to find out what I knew. But since no one can find out more than what's already been said, and nobody else is volunteering any more information, it would be ridiculous to expect people not to make judgments on the stuff that's available.

So here mine come, ready or not.

Robert Wood makes $65,000 a year, not including the offices and the chopper. Randolph Bromery makes over $41,000 a year. Robert Gage, over $36,600 a year. John Corker, about $25,500 a year. So between the four of them, we as students are paying out toward over $168,000 a year in salaries alone. What are we getting in return?

Robert Wood, as far as I can tell, is seldom heard from and is seen even less. Randolph Bromery has been "looking into" Tony Tartaglia's case since the spring vacation anyway, with no decision one way or the other. Robert Gage has done little more than label students as irresponsible. And John Corker, who in the past has defied the rulings of the Campus Center Board of Governors repeatedly by refusing to reinstate Tartaglia, has now shown himself to be incapable of keeping track of a $2400 bill.

Since August!

Just how many people have run up a bill for $2400 in the Campus Center lately, if at all?

$168,000 would be enough money to pay a year's tuition for 560 students. Instead it is going into the pockets of four bureaucrats who have let the prestige of their titles overcome their common sense, but their questionable actions go unchecked. But the real fools in this whole sorry episode are the students themselves, because they are financing this school without doing very much to stop the waste.

Four administrators are receiving what 560 potential students will never have a chance at, so the students paying the bills (that's you and me, UMIE) should see that they get their money's worth. Theoretically, students are paying the Whitmore bunch to work for them, and students have the right to see that they get what they pay for.

But past events have clearly proven students to be powerless here. Whitmore is looked upon as the bastion of the enemy. Dialogue between students and administration is next to non-existent. Administration acts without student consent, but fails to listen to student requests. Student policies are binding only upon administration approval.

Now insult is added to injury with threats of tuition increases, universal fees, utilities fees and the like. How long will it be before students collectively rise out of their featureless expressions of apathy and tell these people to either get out or go to hell?

This unpaid $2400 bill apparently isn't just one isolated incident at this university. Rather, it appears to be more of a way of life, and my fixed income tells me there's no room for this anymore. It's just got to stop.

FABRIC recruits

There is a new wave of cultural awareness happening, as anyone who has noticed such signs as "Irish Cultural Week," "Armenian Students Meeting," or "Franco-American Students Meeting" might well realize.

This is, generally, a white ethnic pride movement. When it is exploited by politicians — as the Kennedys and Hicks have exploited Irish pride — this kind of ethnic awareness can become a divisive and ultimately oppressive movement. However, when white ethnicity is controlled by its real members — the nonwasp working people — it can be one of the most powerful tools there is for unity among workers of all races and "nationalities."

The most obviously revolutionary movements in this country have been the racial pride and radical feminist movements. Members of these movements have found a constant source of energy in the discovery of their own history and of their cultural differences from those who would oppress them.

The Franco-American Bicultural Resource and Interest Center [FABRIC] seeks to serve today's need for a popular history, beginning where we are: in our own families, our own communities. This history — the history of French New England — has been generally ignored. The result of this ignorance is that the average Franco in Massachusetts does not realize why it is a common French attitude to be against labor unions and to remain aquiescent in the face of exploitation. Thus, the average Franco is a slave to these attitudes and can easily be assimilated to the dominant wasp culture.

One cannot help but recognize sisterhood among black neighbors when one realizes that the current deportation policy of puppet Trudeau is to get rid of Haitian refugees because these people have been swelling the French-speaking population. Other black people have been accepted into subordinate positions in English Canadian society, but there is obviously too much danger in allowing large numbers of black immigrants to merge with their linguistically and religiously similar white neighbors.

Anyone who is interested in the real issues of our class-ridden society ought to join FABRIC to help us research and celebrate our culture. Call 545-0497 to join. We'll be bringing out a journal soon, and we'll be offering great cultural events to the whole university if we get enough student input.

Gage and the dorm requirement

An Addendum to Dr. Robert Gage's proposal to make mandatory the dorm system for all non-exempted students. [p. 1, MDC, 4-14-75]

...It is said that more than by the superior firepower and numbers of the US Cavalry, the Kiowa nation of American Indians was ground away by the grim relentlessness of the Cavalry's approach; by the inhuman persistence of the onslaught. While I am indisposed to speak for all UMass students, I must admit that the inner horror of the Kiowa is much the same feeling that grips me upon reading, in neatly re-arranged form each morning in the MDC, the dusty rhetoric of the inevitable Dr. Gage. It is unfortunate that this person, whose objectives differ so radically with those of students, exerts such a determining influence on the ways of student life. It is perhaps more regretable that so many of the Vice-Chancellor's tales are made topics of front-page discussion.

Why does the Doctor insist on playing the media game with the emotional, physical and psychological needs of the student population? In the light of much that has taken place on this campus in the past seven months, is he incapable of sensing that the pulse of the "student body" is quickening and that this heretofore sleeping giant is becoming increasingly intolerant of the unequal distribution of profit and power on this campus?

The residency system on this campus is rife with common symptoms of urban unlivability such as escalating crime, psychological breakdown, alcoholism and suicide. With similar social phenomena causing serious doubt in the status quo in most other sectors of 20th century humanity, how do the administrators of the corporate university rationalize their unwavering support for the inadequate residency system?

But wait, perhaps the questioning is too harsh, even misdirected. Am I merely accusing the tireless administrator[s] of causing problems that they are laboring mightily to solve? Yes, indeed, it is all quite clear now. All that is really necessary is the filling of the towers and the halls to 100 per cent occupancy [as opposed to their present 95 per cent]. Then, when 5 per cent more folks are mired in the concrete Wonderland, the discomfort will be more widely distributed and equity among all segments of the university complex will have been achieved...

When more of us students at UMass reach a point in our evolution as an entity that "education" becomes an empty fiction if we are denied the experience of making the basic decisions, then we can commence discussion of "maintain[ing] human services at their present level"

Jim Jordan

Racism reversed?

Once again the student body as a whole has been shafted in favor of a privileged minority. SPECTRUM, which accepts contributions from the whole academic community [including blacks if they didn't they would be called racist], has a budget that is less than half that of the racist DRUM, which accepts material only from minority [read: black] contributors.

I propose a solution: scrap DRUM, and give its appropriation to SPECTRUM. I have not seen any requirements in SPECTRUM concerning race, merely quality of material. If the material submitted by blacks is so great, it will be published. If it isn't, perhaps some good white writers will get a chance to be read, as they deserve. The whites on campus should have the same rights as the blacks. If the situation were reversed, with SPECTRUM accepting white contributions only and having twice the budget of DRUM, the blacks would scream "racist!" loud and long. Yet, since there are more than twice as many whites as blacks on campus, this would be justifiable. The actual situation is absolutely inexcusable and ludicrous.

In reference to Mr. Cleo Abraham, the reason that the School of Education was charged with misuse of funds is the fact that there is proof that this is the case [Is the F.B.I. racist also?]. If he will check the spring records of 1973, he will find that complaints were filed against the School of Education for discriminating against non-minority applicants. The School of Education is hardly racist, at least as far as blacks are concerned, and to accuse it of racism is rather ironic. UMass is not looking for a "scapegoat" as Mr. Abraham states, but a crook who misused federal funds. If it turns out that it is you, or any other black, who is responsible, you will be charged on legal, not racial grounds. I want to see the people responsible charged, regardless of race, but your apparently unsubstantiated charge does a disservice to you and the university community.

Benefit for Ganienkeh

Through this last semester, George Washington Lower has provided a viable alternative to the crowded Blue Wall, Hatch, and some-what expensive T.O.C., through its bi-monthly coffee house held on the 5th floor lounge. Offering a warm, candlelit atmosphere, as well as some of the best student entertainment on campus, these free coffee houses with a "bring your own beer and wine" policy have proven to be much more economically acceptable to students.

This Saturday, April 19th, the coffee house will be held as a benefit concert for Ganienkeh, the Mohawk Indian take-over in up-state New York. Near Eagle Bay, the Mohawk Nation has reclaimed a 600 acre tract of land that was the site of a girl's camp until it was abandoned three years ago. This tract of land [along with much of the Adirondacks and Vermont] is rightfully theirs according to the Treaty of Peace and Friendship of 1794, which was signed by representatives of the United States and the Six Nations Iroquois Confederacy.

However, due to hostile confrontations by white people and the BIA, they are now being threatened with a roadblock to cut off supplies which are essential to their existence. Desperately needed are staple foods, potatoes, flour, grains, as well as garden tools to tide them over until their fall harvest.

It is our hope to help raise some money for the support of the Ganienkeh Nation through our coffee house this Saturday night, and for this reason a $1.00 donation will be asked at the door. As always, we will have our fine musical entertainment, along with a brief talk concerning conditions as they now exist at Ganienkeh, and a slide show depicting the nature of the Indian cause. Call the Veteran's Coalition for further information.

Among resolutions made at last night's Town Meeting of approximately 2,200 students was the decision to hold a mass demonstration at Tuesday's Trustees Student Affairs Committee.

The demonstration called for will accompany a negotiating team of students who will present the list of demands to the trustee committee.

The importance of the demonstration, according to organizers, is for students to recognize themselves as a political force and show the trustees that student unit exists here.

News analysis

Any power that students have is in student mobilization, they said, a statement that was loudly applauded at last night's meeting.

"The last time this issue was brought to the trustees it was just passed over, and the demonstration will call upon the Board of Trustees for action," an organizer said.

Organizers also added that, "In our numbers we can show the legislators that we have an interest that must be attended to and the students will not stand still for being excluded from the decision making process insofar as it affects us."

are not convincing."

"People talk about Vietnam like the moon," said Tuan, "or intellectualize it like some novel...theorizing is getting away from reality."

Most people have no idea what's going on in Vietnam," Hung said.

"At Mt. Holyoke it is the same thing," said Dzung, "nearly 90 per cent of the students signed a petition opposing further military aid to South Vietnam. I asked one girl why she signed, she said, 'I don't know anything about Vietnam but I don't want aid given.' She didn't want to see more tax money sent," said Dzung.

"There is a confusion as to how much military aid South Vietnam got from America," said Dzung, "I believe much of the money went to the well-being of the GIs."

Speaking of the North Vietnamese, Tuan said, "Our adversaries have military aid from Russia and Red China which is much more military aid than South Vietnam has."

"It's the way they (communists) work so secretly," said Dzung, "In this country it's discussed but in Russia and China you don't know how much they give."

We have had a long war — since 1954," continued Dzung, our people don't want this war. We continue for our survival. We have no choice," said Dzung resolutely, "We don't want communism."

"I am glad the GIs have pulled out," said Tuan, "the American soldiers gave a bad image."

"The communists claimed they were fighting Americans, not Vietnamese," said Hung, "in this respect it's good the GIs left."

The Vietnamese students agreed the airlift of orphans to safety was beneficial. In a long-term view, however, "Vietnamese children should be brought up by Vietnamese parents," said Dzung. "It's fine to send GI orphans here to live but, it is the adults who will suffer under the communists not the children."

"We hear how cute American housewives think the babies are," said Tuan, "The airlift has helped to make the American conscience feel good."

★Cambodia falls to enemy forces

Phnom Penh's defense commander, the brother of ex-president Lon Nol, and senior monks from large pagodas heeded the rebels' orders and went to the Information Ministry to give up, official Radio Phnom Penh said.

But sketchy reports reaching Saigon said most members of the former Phnom Penh regime fled by plane and helicopter, some to Thailand and some to set up an anti-Communist resistance base outside Phnom Penh.

The victorious rebel forces spurned government offers Wednesday to negotiate a cease-fire so they could enter Phnom Penh in triumph. The jubilant insurgents fired shots into the air as they marched or rode in their captured jeeps through the streets amidst a sea of white flags.

★ Wood, Bromery not disturbed

Bromery, interviewed shortly after midnight this morning, said he wouldn't support a strike "because it isn't going to convince the governor of anything...out here (in Western Mass) there's no visibility."

Bromery said a strike might appear frivolous to the public, because of the spring weather. "We have to demonstrate to the Commonwealth that we're not frivolous and you can't have anyone saying you're having a strike because of the warm weather," he added.

He said the administration has not proposed cuts in student employment or in affirmative action and has not advocated tuition increases "because we don't know yet what the budget is going to be." He said he was "insulted" at suggestions he would cut minority or third world enrollments.

Correction

An article in Wednesday's Collegian inaccurately quoted Sam Bowles speaking at a rally against budget cuts. Bowles was quoting a report from the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education which he says is a strategy to preserve private inequalities in higher education. The Collegian regrets the error.

TIMES CHANGE DAILY

International Fair tonight

This year the Foreign Student body would like to present to you an International Fair Day tonight and all day Saturday. We are presenting a show of exhibits and people of different nationalities will be available to discuss topics of interest. Cultures from countries in Latin America, Europe, Africa, and South East Asia will display their national dishes, slides, films, dancing and other cultural aspects. Also on Friday night there will be a dance from 10:00 p.m. till midnight for everyone to enjoy.

Armenian Club holds dance

UMass Armenian Club is holding its First Annual Spring Dance on Saturday at 8:00 p.m., in the Campus Center Auditorium. Featured will be The Richard Berberian Ensemble, a Boston group specializing in Armenian and Middle Eastern music for dancing and listening pleasure.

Firm offers free summer work info

Scientific and Professional Enterprises will make available to any interested person an information sheet of summer jobs searching. This is absolutely free, and all that is necessary is that the student request this from us and enclose a stamped self addressed envelope. We do research in this area, and are more than happy to release this to students in search of summer jobs.

There will be no UMass bus service this long holiday weekend! (Saturday, Sunday, Monday)

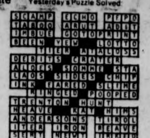
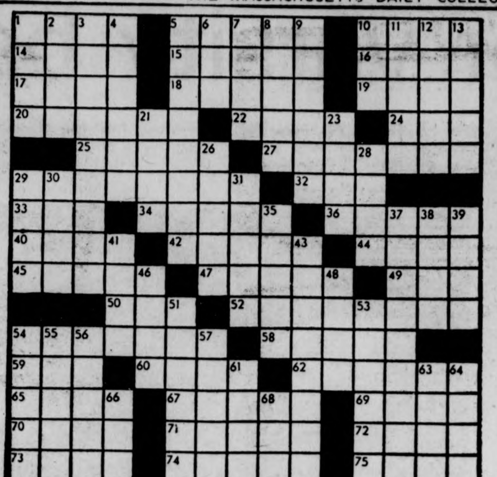
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved





Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

FRIDAY, April 18 — Born today, you have tremendous nervous energy, but you are very much inclined not to know what to do about it. Efficiency and output can be greatly increased once you learn to harness your energy to your purpose -- but such harnessing is not easily come by. Indeed, years may elapse between the time you realize the force and drive inherent in your untapped nervous system – but once you do, there will be little if anything that can keep you from the success your talents marked you for initially.

You have a great desire to get ahead but may decide to settle for mediocrity rather than risk the giant steps required for real success. You are imaginative but somewhat frightened of your own fancies, for you realize that the difference between the reality and the wish, the fact and the fiction is always present and often vast. At the same time, you know the value of originality -- and it is for originality that you strive, even when you are wary of your own creativity.

As a youngster, you may be inclined to turn too often to others for help in attaining your objectives. As an adult, you may suffer from quite the opposite affliction; you may not be willing to turn often enough to those who may know better or have more experience than you do. A happy medium in both instances would serve you well.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Saturday, April 19

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Postpone activities which would involve you in business negotiations. This is not the time to attempt to expand on a commerical basis.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) —Rest and keep as free from worry as you possibly can during afternoon and evening. Morning hours may bring some mental hardships -- but not so much that you can't cope.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Don't burden others with the difficulties that are presently on your own shoulders. Children especially should be made to feel free.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Outside interference can spoil your chances for a successful Saturday within the confines of your own home. Take a loved one's advice.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) —Today's challenges may flatter you – but they may also cause you to overextend yourself. Take care that you are not talked into a risky situation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Anything can happen today -- and well may, unless you are really on your toes. You can prevent early morning argument with loved ones if you keep your head.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Vanity could cause you to take on more responsibility than you can reasonably be expected to handle. Don't bite off more than you can chew!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Notions too fanciful to be practical should be ignored when seeking for a basis upon which to depend for your decisions. Look to the past.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) —Contacts with others should be kept on a personal basis. If you attempt business dealings with friends, you may be in for difficulties.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) —Activities at evening may be upset through an incidence of ill-health -- your own or a loved one's. Don't try to outguess nature.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) —If you are prepared to handle extremes, there is nothing in this day that can really upset you -- much less defeat you. Look ahead!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — There is nothing like a little compromise to make others suddenly realize how cooperative you are. Win your way to the top; give in on small matters.

Greek area will sponsor Women's Week

By CHARLENE MURPHY

The Greek area is sponsoring a "Women's Week" next week. The week will be filled with a variety of workshops and special presentations dealing specifically with women's issues.

The workshops are planned to cover such topics as "Rape and Self Defense", "Career and Life Planning", "Pregnancy and Childbirth" and "Women and Physical Competence".

Speakers for the presentations will include, Rev. Elizabeth Rice, the Executive Director of the Mass. Council of Churches Task Force on Women, the Greek Peer Sex Education Team, and Lynne Lockhart, from Everywoman's Center.

Cindy Waldron, the undergraduate assistant in Women's Programming at the Greek Affairs Office, has been coordinating the program for several months. The program is open to all university women and they are urged to attend. Waldron sees "non-Greek" Participation as being of major importance in obtaining the goals of the program.

Waldron said, "Although the workshops and presentations themselves will be of great value to the participants, my overall intention for the week is that it serves as a vehicle for interaction between women of the various sororities in addition to providing the women from the remainder of the campus with an opportunity to view the Greek area on a different level."

For additional information, contact Cindy Waldron at 545-0939.

Recipients fight Welfare cutbacks

The Coalition To Fight The Cut-backs is calling for all Welfare Recipients and concerned citizens to attend a People's Hearing Thursday at Boston's Tremont Temple.

The rally is being held to demand the legally mandated cost of living increase for Welfare recipients and to fight the reduction in assistance programs as proposed by Governor Dukakis. For more information and travel coordination, call Neil Cronin 253-2755 or Western Mass. Legal Services 584-4034.

UNH foe for varsity batsmen

By BOB HIGGINS

The UMass baseball team will begin playing for keeps this weekend when they open their Yankee Conference season with a Saturday doubleheader at the University of New Hampshire.

Craig Allegrezza and Jeff Reardon will be the starting pitchers for the Minutemen, who went 0-8 in the conference last season.

Pitching, as usual, has been the big factor in the team's performance so far. On Tuesday, they looked unbeatable as Allegrezza shut out Boston College, 12-0, on three hits. But on Wednesday, four UMass hurlers turned in mediocre performances, and the team looked horrible in an 8-4 loss to Springfield.

Allegrezza, who is now 2-1 with an earned run average of 0.93, seems to have bounced back fully from last season and has become one of the top pitchers in New England. Against BC he mixed his pitches extremely well, put the ball where he wanted it and also had a little extra when he needed it.

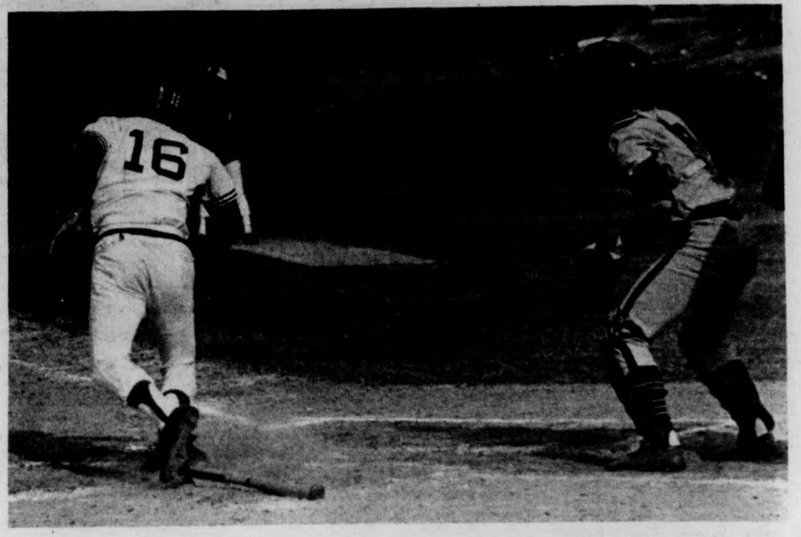
Reardon, who will start the second game, has had a week's rest since his win over Northeastern last Saturday. In that game, he pitched six innings and gave up only one run in upping his record to 2-1.

Starting for the Wildcats will be 6'7" Rich Gale, perhaps the best pitcher in New England. Gale is expected to sign a professional contract after this season, since he will have turned twenty-one. The other UNH pitcher is unknown at present, but could well be Buff Young, who combined with Gale last season to sweep a doubleheader from the Minutemen last season here in Amherst.

UMass Coach Dick Bergquist said that, despite yesterday's disappointing showing, his squad can still have a great year and do well in the conference. But, as he put it, "if you're gonna win the conference you really can't afford to lose more than one game." There are only five teams in the conference and eight conference games, so the pressure will be on starting tomorrow.

Until yesterday, the Minutemen seemed to have few problems with their offense. Against Springfield, however, they could only manage four hits, although one was a home run by Jerry Mondalto, the fifth of the year for the team (Pete Backstrom has the other four).

SCRATCH HITS:...UNH, like UMass, has yet to play a Yankee Conference game. Maine has jumped out to an early lead in the conference, winning a doubleheader from URI...Rhody is 1-2-1, UConn is 0-1-1...Backstrom still leads the team with a .395 average...After his performance yesterday, freshman hurler Rich Kelly has an ERA of 1.04...Former UMass star Bob Hansen has been sent down by the Milwaukee Brewers, but don't be surprised to see him back up soon.



Co-captain John Healy sprints to first in Tuesday's game against Springfield.

Crew team hopes to top Ivy boats

By BOB NORTON

Harvard... Brown... — immediately they conjure thoughts of Ivy League, tradition, and nothing but the best. According to UMass crew coach Bill Mahoney, "this Saturday, we're out to make them prove they're as good as their reputation." Mahoney should know of the reputation involved since, in 1973, he co-captained the Harvard varsity crew.

As the situation stands, the UMass crew — defending small college national champions — will travel to Boston and the Charles River this Saturday to challenge Brown University and defending national university champion Harvard. Mahoney hopes that his oarsmen will "come to grips with the situation." As co-capt. Bill Fitzpatrick said, "win or lose, we'll have to row our best race."

To dabble in some history, on July 21, 1871, the first National Collegiate Rowing Association championships were held on the Connecticut Rowing Association championships were held on the Connecticut River just south of here in Inglefield, Mass. The only three contestants were of course, Harvard, Brown, and the Mass. Aggies. The six oared shell that carried the Aggies to victory to this day is hoisted above the rafters in Curry Hicks Cage.

This time, over a century later, these three crews will take up where they left off. By now though, Harvard has well established itself as a perennial rowing power. By racing them this weekend, Mahoney stated that, "we'll have the opportunity to establish ourselves as one of the best in the country." He added that "there is absolutely no guarantee of success for any competitor. This victory is worth fighting for — with it we would win some notoriety and the rewards would be extreme."

Bill Fitzpatrick emphasized that "we'll be out there to show them what kind of guts we have."

Paddling Past... the shell that the UMass varsity crew races in was the first of its kind in the nation and is nicknamed the J.P.T. (just plain tough)

Lacrossepeople are in limelight

By BEN CASWELL

Garber's Gorillas will have the weekend off. On Monday they will take on the Eagles of Boston College.

The UMass lacrossemen are coming off four straight victories, the most recent being a 15-7 manipulation of Harvard College.

"Boston College is a traditional rival just like in any other sport," said head lacrosse coach Dick Garber," and it should be a good game. They are a well-coached team with a group of gung-ho guys that want to beat us."

Boston College's record is 4-2. The Eagles play Harvard under the lights tonight.

Last year the Gorillas beat Boston College, 13-8, in a game UMass controlled for the most part.

The Eagles have a premier scorer in Wally Cox, who ranks eighth in the nation in assists.

"Boston College's defensemen play a real bruising type of defense," said coach Garber. "Their midfielders do a lot of hitting and they play a dodging type of attack," said Garber.

The Gorillas might have had a game this weekend if negotiations with Army had worked out.

Army was originally scheduled to play a game with Air Force tomorrow. The Cadets cancelled out on the game because of travel expense costs.

When UMass was made aware of Army's open date, arrangements were attempted to be made to get the Cadets to come to Amherst this Saturday. It seems that Army would have rather had the Gorillas come to West Point, so they refused any offers by UMass scheduling officials.

The Gorillas, on the other hand, have been going to New York for scrimmage games for the past ten years. They did not want to go to New York this weekend, so the game plans were canned.

SCOOP SHOTS — The Boston College game time is 2:00 p.m. UMass' next game is at Williams on April 26.

The UConn goalie makes a stick save off a shot by UMass attackman Frank Garahan. The Gorillas will be in action Monday at 2:00 p.m. against the Eagles of Boston College.

The women's lacrosse club raised their record to 2-0 yesterday with a come-from-behind 7-4 victory over Northfield Academy.

After clobbering Northfield last year, the women made the trip yesterday expecting an easy game. Perhaps over-confident, UMass started the contest with their B team only to fall behind at halftime by a 4-3 score.

Realizing the game would be no cake-walk, the women combined the A squad with the B in the second half. Northfield clung to their lead until UMass exploded in the final quarter for four goals in a span of two minutes to take command of the game. Elaine Senosk, the UMass standout in the victory, led the explosion with three of the goals. Sally Boy, Cyn Flint, Pat Conklin, and Tarny Hagerman added support to Senosk's output with a goal apiece.

Mary Murray continued her fine goaltending as she made her entrance into the nets after the first half, and shut out Northfield for the remainder of the contest. Player-coach Lori Nazar also praised the performance of Barb Martelle, who although absent from the scoring column, had a fine game.

Nazar, commenting on the progress of the club, explained, "We're looking alot better than we have in practice. Our offense is starting to click, while our defense is beginning to better understand the ideas of their position.

"They (Northfield) really started out tougher than we expected; they were much improved over last year," added the player-coach.

SURE SHOTS... In a schedule change, the women will host Springfield College, Monday at 4:00. The game was originally scheduled in May to be played at Springfield... The following day, also at home (the only two home games for the year), Williams College will oppose UMass...

BC relays for trackmen

By MIKE BERGER

Although having lost an extremely tough meet to Dartmouth 95-91, UMass is looking forward with confidence to the B.C. relays at Boston College — Saturday, at 10 a.m.

The secret to victory here will be the depth of the UMass squad against top rated Dartmouth, Northeastern, Boston College, and Brown.

The key to many of the relays will be the endurance and strength of Mark Healy, Dave Lupinsky, Tom Beland, Steve Crimmin, Curt Stegerwald, and Toney Pendleton who will be running more than one relay.

UMass can expect first place finishes in the long and triple jumps. Although Springfield and URI intend to challenge, Ken and Bob Adamson, Ron Harris, and Mike Geraghty hope to finish at least second.

In addition, the combined efforts of Pete Famulari, Curt Stegerwald, Al Suprenant, and Jeff Browne are expected to beat out Dartmouth in the 440 shuttle hurdles.

Precise execution of the baton will be the secret to the 440 and 880 relays. Brown and B.C. look the best, but UMass's combination of Toney Pendleton, Tom Beland, Mark Healy, and Dave Lupinsky (880) are expected to finish at worst fourth.

In the mile relay, Steve Crimmin, John Richards, Curt Stegerwald, and Dave Lupinsky will find it hard pressed to finish ahead of B.C. with super miler Keith Francis.

An interesting race shapes up in the 2 mile relay where freshmen Pete Bloom, Mike Hanson, Steve Ridge, and upperclassmen Jim Hunt will go against the top notch half milers of Dartmouth and Boston College. All have reached 1:56 which is definitely good enough to place at least 4th in this meet.

UMass's strength in the distance events will hopefully make an appearance in the 6 mile (Randy, Thomas and Bob O'Neil), 3 mile, John McGrail, Frank Carroll, and Robb Leary, and the distance medley of Mike and Bill Gillen, Steve Crimmin, and Chris Farmer.

The outcome of this meet may be determined in the field events where instead of the individual performances, the combined efforts of four men will determine the placings. Northeastern, Dartmouth and Brown are favored in the shot put. Rusty Kendall, and Joe Martens (still hurting from a severe muscle pull) are expected to finish no worse than second in the high jump. Although U.R.I. is expected to finish first in the pole vault, the continued improvement of Joe Granolini, Ted Power and Eric Gudmand may boost UMass into no worse than third. The same can hold true for Jim Mason, John Willis, and George Ennis in the discus as Dartmouth and Northeastern come unbeaten.

According to Coach O'Brien, only Dartmouth, and Northeastern come close to match UMass in depth. The meet's stepping stone to getting ready for the Yankee Conference — two weeks hence.

Crew women

By TERESA HANAFIN

"We will go for the lead right from the beginning and row until we get it."

With typical determination, Bob Spousta leads the women's crew team to the Charles River for a race against B.U. and Connecticut College this Sunday.

The 9:00 A.M. race will only be 1000 meters, in contrast to last week's 2000 meters vs. Radcliffe. This is a relatively short race that should be over in less than four minutes.

"We'll channel all our energy into those four minutes," emphasized Bob. "The women have plenty of staying power."

He stressed that B.U. will not be an easy opponent. "They won't be as tough as Radcliffe, but they're no soft touch."

No seating changes are contemplated by the oarswomen's coach — "I feel I have the best."

The JV rowers will go against the B.U. and Conn. College seconds at 9:45, along the same route as the varsity at the B.U. bridge.

In another race this weekend, Rose Sellew brings her beginning boat, coxed by Margie Morse and stroked by Janine Wong, down to her old neighborhood to race Saturday against the Middletown Rowing Club.

Juan Marichal retires

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Juan Marichal, the high-kicking fastball pitcher who ranked among the best in the game in his day, announced Thursday he was retiring from baseball.

Marichal, 36, pitched two games with the Los Angeles Dodgers this season opened and was knocked out both times. He was shelled from the mound in a four-run inning Wednesday night in the Dodgers' game with the Cincinnati Reds.

The Dominican-born Marichal had his greatest successes with the San Francisco Giants from 1960 through 1973 and had a lifetime career record of 243 wins and 142 losses.

There was only a brief statement by Marichal issued through the Dodgers announcing his retirement.

"My biggest regret is that I was not able to help the Dodgers," he said. "I worked very hard in spring training and hoped to be ready to pitch but I'm not ready."

The Dodgers signed Marichal as a free agent March 11 with hopes he might return to form and become one of their starters. He played last year with the Boston Red Sox.

Ironically, Marichal had long been the nemesis of Dodger batters when he was with San Francisco.

Raqueteers string out MIT

By BILL EDELSTEIN

It was a typically close home match for the UMass tennis folks yesterday as they out - pi - r - squared M.I.T., 5-4.

With the victory greatly aided by the combo of Barnaby Kalan and Dave Abramoff taking third doubles (the last match to leave the courts).

The overall score of the match was 4-4, while the tally of the third doubles contest stood at one set apiece (4-6, 6-3) three games apiece by the time the spectators had run out of knuckles to crack, fingernails to bite, hair to pull out and breath to hold. If the fans had had seats in which to squirm and cliffs from which to hang, they would have run out of them also.

Kalan and Abramoff then figured that since dusk was rapidly setting in, the time had come to break the M.I.T. service. A couple of split games later, the score stood at five games to four in favor of UMass.

With Kalan dishing up balls with the aid of the wind, a victory seemed imminent, but, quicker than you can say pneumonoultramicroscopicsilicovolcanoconiosis, the M.I.T. duo tallied the first three points and a love-40 (although Barnaby's mutterings were of anything but love) advantage went to the Engineers. Kalan then initiated a heavy service charge (sorry about that, tennis fans), and the good guys surged to an advantage in deuce. M.I.T. held off the first match point against them, but a long return made the second match point the last one.

CHRIS POST

The racketeers swarmed onto the court, Kalan jumped the net, the sun quickly set and that, as the old saying goes, was that.

The team of Chris Post and Marc Ouellet also won for the Minutemen, while the duo of Billy Karol and Kevin Garahan was the only UMass double loser.

"This was the first time all season that the doubles came through for us," said an elated coach Steve Kosakowski.

The singles matches were highlighted by a captains' duel on court two, as Post, defeated his opposite number for M.I.T., 6-2, 6-0. "It was Chris' best match of the year, enthused Kosakowski.

BILLY KAROL

Fifth singles man, Ouellet, came from far behind in his first set to continue his winning ways, 6-4, 6-2, and Kalan remained undefeated at fourth singles with an efficient 6-2, 6-2, dissection of the Engineer that was unlucky enough to be placed at court four. (Barnaby reduced him to a rambling wreck.)

Karol wasn't able to retain his unbeaten streak at the supreme court, however, as he suffered a 1-6, 6-2, 6-3 setback in a well played match.

Art Cloutier turned in a respectable performance in a 3-6, 4-6, loss on court six, while third singles man, Kevin Garahan continued to have his problems, dropping a 2-6, 1-6 verdict.

STRINGING YOU ALONG — The win over M.I.T. was especially sweet as the Engineers always have a good club (no exception this season) and continually beat UMass ... The racketeers pack for Springfield and a 3:00 match today.

Golfers continue winning; shoot down BC, HC

By RON ARENA

The list just keeps getting longer. Yesterday, Holy Cross and Boston College became the latest victims of the UMass golf team, as the Minutemen clubbed their way to a 393 total, as compared to the Crusader's 406, and BC's 425.

The par-72 Pleasant Valley course in Sutton (outside of Worcester) provide UMass with a few problems, but not nearly enough to cause an upset. With the present condition of Hickory Ridge, the switch to the Holy Cross course compares to first driving a Volkswagon and then a Rolls Royce. UMass just wasn't ready for the good conditions. (Pity Holy Cross and BC if they were.) The greens, smooth and fast, caused what Howie Terban described as "treacherous putting."

Glenn Sullivan, however, was one who had few problems as the freshman led his team with an impressive 74. Sullivan, who hadn't played until last week, semms to be gaining finesse with every round.

In his first match, Sullivan played well until collapsing on the final two holes. At that time, Coach Fan Gaudette noted that "Sullivan would have to learn to finish off his round." Sullivan double-bogied the 17th, and one wondered if his last hole would be a disaster. Sullivan responded to the pressure situation with a birdie proving he indeed can finish well.

Need it be said that Joe Artman continued his consistency? Captain Joe, proving to be one of the best golfers in the East, finished with a 76.

The Pleasant Valley course in Sutton provided putting problems for Howie Terban yesterday.

John Lasek (77), Howie Terban and Jim Haggerty (both at 83) finished off the UMass scoring. Lasek battled the greens all day, but they put up a good fight. If not for his putting, Lasek would have finished at even par, as the junior three-putted on five occasions.

Terban also struggled with his putting, but may have been affected by his illness. Terban could not practice Wednesday, as he was bed-ridden by a cold. He responded with a seven on his opening hole, and never pulled together.

Haggerty has been hovering around the 80-mark most of the season, and a fifth man at that score shows some depth on the squad.

CHIP SHOTS ... Artman's play has earned him the nickname Joe "Superstoke" Artman from his teammates ... Sullivan had shot a sparkling one-under-par 71 in a practice round Wednesday at Hickory Ridge ... Rick Olsen had an off-round of 85, but Gaudette was not too concerned. "He's played well all year except today," he explained. "You gotta expect that." ... The golfers play host to AIC in a Tuesday match at 1:00.

Minutewomen softballers fall to Bridgewater State

By GREG LEVINS

All thoughts of an undefeated season for the UMass Minutewomen's softball team went by the boards yesterday, as they were nipped 2-1 at Bridgewater State College.

The Bear's senior pitcher Pat Hurney was the major thorn in the Minutewomen's side allowing only two hits, striking out four, in addition to blasting a game winning two run double.

For the first four innings the contest was a classic pitching duel between the veteran Hurney and UMass freshwoman Lu Ann Fletcher. During these opening four stanzas Hurney was nicked for line single to right by Barb Doucet while Fletcher was immense, allowing only an infield single off the glove of Terri Pudlo.

But in the bottom of the fifth inning things began to happen for Bridgewater. Errors by shortstop Karen Fruzzetti and second sacker Pudlo put runners on first and second with nobody out. However, Fletcher refused to lose her cool and got Cheryl Burlingame to ground into a force at third and Joan Declaire to pop out. But just as everything seemed to be straightening out, none other than Miss Hurney strolled up to the plate and laced her double into deep left center field. On the play, Hurney was gunned down at third on a strong throw from Terri Kennedy to retire the side.

UMass mounted a mild comeback attempt in the top of the sixth inning. Karen Dolphin led off the inning by winding up on second base due to a two base throwing error by the Bear's third baseman. On the next pitch Karen stole third base and eventually scored on fielders choice, to account for the lone UMass run.

For the Minutewomen Lu Ann Fletcher was immense in a losing cause. Lu Ann tossed the full seven innings giving up just three hits and whiffing five Bridgewater batters.

As Coach Jaque Elliott noted, the lack of hitting power cost the Minutewomen the game. "We had trouble with our batting, but defensively I'm not upset at all."

INFIELD FLYS... The Minutewomen weren't the only ones having hitting problems as the only ball knocked out of the infield was Hurney's clout... Terri Pudlo came up with the top defensive play of the game for UMass spearing a hard line drive and doubling up the runner at first to end the second inning... Pat Hurney proved herself a more than adequate fielder also by stopping two consecutive shots driven at her in the fourth inning... The next game for both varsity and J.V. (who were soundly beaten 6-0) is April 22 at home against Westfield State. Game time is slated for 3:30.

Fairness on the track

By SCOTT HAYES

There will be some type of women's program in track and cross country next year, according to Assistant Director of Athletics, Vivian Barfield, the Collegian learned yesterday.

Depending on the amount of money alloted for equipment, travel and coaches, however, the program may not be much of an improvement over the present situation at UMass, in which women compete on a club basis.

Barfield pointed out that there is some interest in college track and cross country for women and that the high schools are pushing girl's track and field. The recently-appointed assistant AD also said she has received many applications for scholarships from high school athletes and stressed they should expect some type of women's track program in college.

Presently Barfield is trying to form a nucleus for next year's team. She is not happy with the situation, especially since there are fine women athletes like Charlotte Lettis on campus. Lettis was very successful in national cross country competition last fall and Barfield believes the UMass runner "is probably Olympic material."

Track coach Ken O'Brien has recommended that an assistant coach be hired for the women's program and to help with men's track. Barfield referred to an example set by UCLA, where a former Olympic standout and her husband were hired to coach both the women's and men's programs. The chances of a man and woman being hired to assist with the men's program as well as getting women's track started was not ruled out by Barfield.

Barfield commented that there may not be enough money to provide uniforms for the team and hopefully the women will be issued shoes for running. Barfield was not particularly pleased with these facts.

In 1974, there were 19 colleges in the Eastern region that offered women's track and field programs. In addition there are AIAW (Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) championships. It's not as if other colleges and universities didn't have track teams — the system has already been started. Barfield is attempting to schedule meets this month for what O'Brien and the women runners on campus hope will become a precedent-setting season.

Much depends on the number of women who tryout for the first-year teams during the 1975-76 athletic year. The facilities at UMass are excellent for track and the countryside is more than suitable for cross-country running.

If little interest is generated by women harriers and track competitors, the administration won't be to blame for a non-existing program for women in track and cross country. While the athletic department is taking action now, its efforts, however restricted, should be accompanied by student interest.

Thieu resigns, claims US 'led people to death'

Tran Van Lam

Compiled from Wires

SAIGON — Nguyen Van Thieu resigned as president of South Vietnam yesterday but the move was viewed here as probably too late to keep the Communists from taking the country by force. In fact, more heavy fighting was predicted by Thieu himself and others.

The weeping Thieu quit with an embittered blast at his long-time supporter, the United States, as having "led the South Vietnamese people to death."

"If the Americans don't want to support us any more, let them go, get out," Thieu said.

"Let them forget their humanitarian promises."

Fighting back tears, Thieu read a letter he said had been written in 1973 by then U.S. President Richard Nixon, guaranteeing all necessary aid for South Vietnam to defend itself if Thieu would sign the Paris peace agreements.

Communists launch offensive

SAIGON (UPI) — Refusing to wait for negotiations with the successor to South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu, Communist forces Tuesday morning launched a new attack on the "rice road" from Saigon to the Mekong Delta just 16 miles from the capital.

As the Communist noose around Saigon tightened despite Thieu's resignation Monday, Americans fled Saigon by the hundreds and Australia closed down its embassy.

Military analysts said South Vietnam's battlefield position appeared hopeless after the Communists gobbled up their 20th and 21st provincial capitals of the current offensive — Ham Tan and Xuan Loc — and shelled the big Bien Hoa airbase almost at will, all north of Saigon.

Voice opinions on Town Meeting demands

Bromery accepts, Gage skeptical

By MIKE IZDEPSKI
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery accepted the University Town Meeting's nine demands from members of the Student Action Committee's (SAC) negotiating team on Friday. Vice Chancellor Robert C. Gage criticized the "lumping together" of demands, calling them "unfair."

In a special meeting Sunday afternoon, Gage told members of the negotiating team: "I agree with the principles of a union of students, although I don't know how it will work."

The SAC, a group of 80 students who met Friday morning, set up the 7 member negotiating team who would convey the demands passed Thursday night by the University Town Meeting to legislative and University officials.

During a brief meeting with the negotiating team, Bromery would not comment specifically on any of the nine proposals, but admitted, after taking a quick glance at the demands, that he didn't see anything he wouldn't support.

He also said there would be no cutbacks "starting at the bottom" if he could help it.

When asked his opinion on a possible student strike as a form of protest the Chancellor replied: "You're fighting something for the right reason with the wrong actions."

He pointed out, a strike would play into the Governor's hands, because it could be interpreted by the legislature as evidence of student indifference towards studying, thus prompting further cutbacks.

Confronted on the issue of establishing a student union, Bromery said he didn't know what a student union was: "I've read the Collegian, all the papers, and still I haven't found a definition."

If however such a union were to be based on collective bargaining principles, he said he could not support it: "For even if 51 percent of the student population voted to establish such a union, who would guarantee that all students would accept the decision of the majority?"

Strike, rally, and poll

Here are the major developments in the actions against budget cuts and in favor of student power:

—a Student Action Committee formed Friday has slated a noon rally today at the Whitmore ramp, followed by a march to the Campus Center where the Trustee Committee on Student Affairs is meeting inside. Negotiators from the SAC will present student "demands" to the committee, chaired by Trustee Alan Shaler.

—Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage told a nine-member SAC negotiating committee Saturday he supports a student union in principle.

—About 23 radical faculty caucused in private last night to support no budget cuts or tuition hikes. Also a delegate will be at today's Student Affairs meeting.

—The executive committee of the Mass. State Employees' Assn. meets today to discuss a reaction by the 1,100 member union to budget cuts.

—Legislators and trustees Friday were sent "mailograms" detailing student "demands", but as of last night, most contacted had not yet received them.

Faculty supports student demands

By JUDY BOUCHER

A group of faculty here have called for "strong support" of student demands to the Legislature and the UMass Trustees for no budget cuts and tuition hikes, according to a spokesman for the group.

The group of about 23 faculty "representing many departments" met last night and agreed to send one of their members to the Trustees Student Affairs Committee meeting today, said John Brentlinger, an associate professor of philosophy.

"We will involve ourselves actively in support of the students demands," said Brentlinger.

The group, calling themselves the Socialistic Faculty Caucus, will meet Wednesday and develop a position that will be presented to the Town Meeting that night.

According to Brentlinger, other plans call for educating student and faculty for support of the demands as well as participating with students in lobbying for no budget cuts in the Legislature.

The University Town Meeting last Thursday voted on nine demands calling for no budget cuts and more student power.

The group met in a closed session for approximately two hours after which the following

Legislators sent student message

Key State Legislators are expected to receive today the student message demanding no budget cuts and more student power.

The University Town Meeting last Thursday voted on nine demands and forwarded them Friday via mailograms to eight state officials.

Some of the legislators contacted yesterday said they have not yet received the demands. However, they were not in their offices yesterday due to the State holiday.

Organizers also say the reaction of the legislators is not a top priority this week.

The three legislators contacted yesterday said they could not comment on the demands until they personally reviewed them. They also said they had not seen the University's proposed budget for the next fiscal year.

Speaker of the House David Bartley of Holyoke said, "Based on my past track record I have usually supported the University's budget." Bartley said he could not

Platforms vary as six vie for SGA presidency

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

Presidential platforms for Tuesday's Student Government Association (SGA) elections range from increased student input to the total elimination of all institutional organizations.

The six candidates for SGA President are: John O'Keefe, chairperson of the commuter assembly, and five members of the Student Senate: Bob Coven, Craig Ghidotti, Peter Lewicke, Cindy McGrath, and Tim O'Brien.

O'Keefe said his platform offers "not a 'vote for me and I'll set you free' program, but proposals for complete top to bottom restructuring of the SGA as a beginning toward collective control over the programs, events, and monies that shape our lives here at the University and in the community."

O'Keefe's platform includes: a student union to replace the SGA, open Senate elections, an upgrading of student participation and communication, a permanent fund raiser to check money sources, tenant control of dormitories, a complete reorientation of the Student Affairs Office, and a recall of those Board of Governors members who vote management over student interests.

O'Keefe said, "The function of the SGA President is to be an adamant spokesperson for students, not to create policy."

Bob Coven, said he is disturbed by the amount of student input.

"Of the 116 seats in the Senate," Coven said, "approximately 90 are filled. This doesn't speak well for a group that represents 26,000 people."

Coven said, while he is not totally opposed to student unionization, he thinks "the basic core" for student government exists in the Senate now.

"Lots of things can be done under the present system," he added. "We don't have to complicate things."

The budget cuts, Coven said, "are a gross travesty of injustice. They can't be tolerated."

A third candidate is Craig J. Ghidotti, chairperson of the Governmental Affairs Committee. Ghidotti favors decentralization and unionization.

"Decentralization," Ghidotti said, "is giving greater power to area governments. Area governments are more directly related to their constituency and should have greater say in what happens to them.

"Decentralizing power," he added, "will also better mass the student's strength which is so direly needed at this point in time."

Ghidotti said unionization can be helpful to a qualified education because students will have a definite say in what happens to them.

Ghidotti's platform includes: no cutting of student programs without student consultation, a more equitable teacher evaluation, and committees to analyze the efficiency of offices and programs.

Peter Lewicke's platform is "the elimination of institutional organizations of all sorts — the U.S. government, the Catholic Church, the Student Organizing Project, the Student Government Association."

Lewicke said institutions raise people not to think.

"Rather than educating people," he added, "they lose what they had before."

Lewicke said, "We can eliminate these institutions by not paying attention to them, not appointing people to fill positions, and using whatever influence we might have."

Senate Speaker Cindy McGrath is also a candidate for SGA President.

McGrath said unionization, collective bargaining rights for students, is the most important issue in her platform.

"Unionization is starting through the governmental process now," she continued, "and alot of work has to be done before it reaches the Board of Trustees in October. If it doesn't go through, I would push it on legal and legislative rights."

McGrath said it is also important "to insure that student monies are indeed used as student monies. I believe in student fiscal autonomy. A student levied tax on students should be decided on by students."

McGrath's platform also includes complete legal services.

"Our lawyers are not able to sue the University or carry on criminal litigation," McGrath said. "This ties in with student fiscal autonomy. It's our money, but we're prevented from using it the way we want."

McGrath's platform also includes: student evaluation of the University administration; a student-run - student-owned dormitory system; expansion and development of more complete non-profit student services, such as lecture notes, the stereo co-op, and the student credit union; a permanent, strong lobbying unit coordinated with the state legislature; a Student Major's Dept. Council for all department decision making; and a program to research the University so that viable alternatives to the present system can be proposed.

Tim O'Brien, president of the Central Area Government, is also running on the issue of unionization.

O'Brien said, "The trouble with student government is that they're trying to organize from the top down, instead of from the bottom up. No one's ever really tried to do that."

O'Brien said the SGA President has the political power of 18,000 voters, as well as the faculty and others with vested interests.

"The attempt has never been made to mobilize this power," he added.

"SGA is a misnomer. The SGA should fight for student rights. It should not be a legislative association, but an advocacy group," said O'Brien.

Author to address 'post Vietnam syndrome'

By PATRICK POWER
Progressive News Service

Robert Jay Lifton, author of Home From The War, a book written with, by and about Vietnam veterans will speak at the Student Union Ballroom on "Post Vietnam Syndrome: a National Affliction" Thursday, at 1:00 p.m.

Lifton, presently associated with Conn. Mental Health and the Yale Law School of Psychiatric Medicine, is a noted psycho-historian and long time critic of the Indo-China war.

Post Vietnam Syndrome (PVS) is a malady affecting all of America, not only the Vietnam Veterans but also their wives, families, friends, and associates. PVS was first introduced as a concept by Lifton at a Senate Sub-committee in January 1970. He suggested "that there would be great psychological effects that would result from the Vietnam war."

The guilt-ridden veteran is the living symbol of our country's conscience. By constantly searching his soul for the answers to the riddle of Vietnam he is an obvious reminder to a country who wants to forget the tragedy of the Indo-China war.

The nation's guilt is now being brought to the surface by the outpouring of affection for the Vietnames war orphans. This flood of affection is seen as a vehicle for relieving the guilt many families have assumed for the role their husbands, sons and country played in the on-going tragedy.

The Vietnam veteran has the most severe case of PVS to deal with. He must justify his presence and acts of violence he committed while under the auspices of fighting for freedom. The confusion and betrayal by the country toward the veteran is a vital part of PVS.

commentary

Society was stuck in a quagmire caught between two opposing forces, one telling it to stand up and fight for democracy and freedom, while the other telling it that we were wrong in spreading our imperialistic nature to a people who did not want us in the first place.

We have become a nation of troubled survivors of a war not yet over and still just distantly perceived. We experience a continuing sense of threat, of 'Immersion In Death', and resulting survivor conflicts can take many forms, such as lack of trust, guilt, withdrawal and resentment.

In 1972, 700,000 Vietnam veterans were treated by the V.A. or were referred to other agencies for "suicidal tendencies." According to the Gold Star Mothers for Amnesty, the leading causes of death for veterans since returning home have been: (1) suicide, (2) drug overdose, and (3) one-car accidents. Since the signing of the Paris Peace Accords, 55,000 veterans have died from one of the above causes.

According to Larry Hatfield of the San Fransisco Examiner (8-9-74), one-third of the 120,000 Vietnam veterans have been treated at V.A. hospitals for psychosis or other psychiatric disorders. Heroin addiction among veterans is as high as 250,000. The more conservative government figures is 50,000 - 100,000 addicts, of which 20,000 have been detoxified.

Lifton sees the understanding of rage, guilt and protest as a healthy constructive method of building something more positive toward alleviating the problems currently affecting us.

Many veterans who have returned from the war are continually running into the stereotyped veteran as portrayed in movies, TV, and books as a crazed killer, which in turn is acting as a reinforcer to the veteran. A veteran in a rap session expressed it poignantly: "When I go for a job interview, the prospective employers look at me and think, 'There's a murderer, a monster.' I sometimes still think that myself."

Dorm living in store for students over 21

By LARRY KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

The Principle Administrative Officers made their final decision Friday that, starting in September, no students will be exempt from forced dorm living because they are over twenty-one.

They also decided to exempt all veterans from the dorm requirement. The changes will not affect seniors, married students, students living in fraternities and sororities, or students commuting from the home of their parents.

"All students living off-campus now who are currently exempted from the present regulation will not be required to live on-campus next fall," according to Bruce Cochrane, Director of Housing.

Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, Robert Gage, said the changes were made "in order to have a clear and non-arbitrary determination of those people living in residence halls."

"I hope this is the beginning of a program to eliminate the dorm requirement over the next three years," he added.

Gage said he hopes to have the requirement apply only to freshmen and sophomores by fall 1976, and freshmen only by fall 1977.

The room rent is expected to increase by $30 a year starting next year he said, but that has not been finalized.

The Principle Administrative Officers consist of the directors of several administrative areas on campus. They include Gage, Warren Gulko, Director of Budgeting and Institutional Studies; and Jack Littlefield, Director of Planning.

Unions 'unsure' about support for student strike

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

The two leaders of the unions that represent about 2,400 non-professional employees on campus said Friday they are not sure yet whether they would support a student possible strike vote Thursday.

Carol Drew of the 1,300-member local 1776 (AFL-CIO), and Bernard Turner of the 1,100-member Mass. State Employees' Assn. local, say they would have to meet with executive committees before actually calling on employees not to cross student picket lines.

Turner's executive committee meets today on campus, he said. Drew said it would be much easier for her group to support a "boycott of classes" rather than a strike with picket lines.

"If it would help the students, I will support you as an individual," Drew said, adding: "at this point, as far as crossing picket lines — it would have to be up to the individual employees."

She said her members are more concerned right now about Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' refusal to grant an 11 per cent cost-of-living payraise to state employees than his proposed ten per cent cut in the higher education budget.

She said she agreed with statements made by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery in Friday's Collegian that a strike could be ineffective at fighting budget cuts. She said a State House demonstration would be "far more effective."

"I would hope students would show up at the State House," she said. To the legislators, she said, "Masssachusetts stops at 128 and they don't seem too concerned about what happens out here."

Turner, while sympathetic to student problems in a telephone interview, refused lengthy comment on a student strike, saying he would have to talk about it with his executive committee today.

Local 1776 employees work in the dining commons, the campus farm and the police department. MSEA employees include secretaries and technical support staff on campus.

Together with over 1,800 professional and academic employees, the two unions are the largest single work force in Western Massachusetts.

comment on the proposed 10 percent cut since he hasn't reviewed the budget.

Senate Chairman of the state committee on education Michael Daly from Boston said, "Basically, I do support the budget demands, but I can not categorically say, I have not looked at them."

Daly also said, "Some legislators have a hang up about demands — they get nervous about demands, especially when the Legislature appropriates a couple of thousand a year for each student."

UMass President Robert C. Wood has requested $118 million from the state for maintenance of the University's three campuses. UMass-Amherst is slated to recieve $80.8 million.

Gov. Michael Dukakis and State Secretary of Education Paul Parks have asked that UMass chop the budget by 10 percent.

The Representative Chairman of the committee on education Walter J. Boverini of Lynn said he was opposed to anyone saying that a budget cut should be "cut from the bottom line."

He added he was opposed to anyone cutting the budget without naming specifics.

Wood also said he could not comment on the demands made by the 2200 students who attended the Town Meeting before studying the demands. Organizers said Wood received a copy of the demands.

Other officials who were sent the demands are: the Senate and Representative chairmen of the ways and means committee, the Governor, Secretary of Education, and the UMass Trustees.

These officials were unavailable for comment last night.

Wood to chair May 3 summit

The long-awaited summit meeting of legislators, administrators and trustees concerned with public higher education in Massachusetts will be held May 3 at Bunker Hill Community College in Charlestown.

Announcement of a date and location for the summit was made Friday by the office of Senate President Kevin Harrington, who proposed the get-together earlier this month.

Panel discussions on fiscal autonomy and the future of Massachusetts public higher education and addresses by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and Education Secretary Paul Parks. UMass President Robert C. Wood will chair the meeting.

Dukakis and Parks have proposed a ten percent cut in the public higher education budget in Massachusetts.

McCartney, former secretary, dead at 57

Robert J. McCartney, University secretary from 1964 until last year, died Sunday at his home after a long illness. He was 57.

He lived at 245 Amity St., Amherst, with his wife Norma Louise (Hanforth) McCartney.

A 1941 graduate of UMass, McCartney was University news editor from 1948 to 1953 and director of publications from 1953 to 1956. He was a member of the international journalism fraternity, Sigma Delta Chi and was founder and first editor of the Alumnus, the alumni bulletin of UMass-Amherst.

From 1956 until 1964 he was director of University relations at the U of Maryland.

He was a consultant during that period to the Greater Washington Educational Television Assn. and the Southern Educational Television Foundation.

McCartney became President Robert C. Wood's assistant for liason services last year and a new secretary, Gladys Keith Hardy, has taken over his previous job.

Wood called McCartney's death an "enormous loss to the University" and described him as a "constant source of inspiration and information."

"He was a very great servant of the University who from one administration to another put the University ahead of any personalities and above any partisan views," Wood said.

The job of secretary carries as one of its chief functions attending all official full Board of Trustee meetings and meetings of its committees.

As secretary, McCartney was the public's eyewitness and minute-taker at all the meetings, reporting extensive minutes in regular reports from his office. The reports were remarkable for their clarity and detail.

Last year, McCartney was awarded a University Outstanding Service Medal during a trustees' meeting when he stepped down as secretary. He has been hospitalized intermittently since.

McCartney was president of the New England Land Grant Public Relations Council, a member of the American Alumni Council and a charter member of the American Assn. of Land Grant Colleges and State Universities.

He was a native of Salem and attended public schools there, graduating from Salem High School in 1938. He was born Sept. 6, 1917.

Besides his wife, Norma, he leaves four children and two grandchildren, all of Amherst.

Services will be Saturday at the UMass Newman Center. Burial will be private. Arrangements are from the Amherst Funeral Home.

The family requests that memorial contributions be made to a UMass orphans' scholarship fund through the office of treasurer Kenneth W. Johnson.

House panel approves Vietnam aid

Weyand labels Viet 'virtually hopeless'

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The House Appropriations Committee yesterday approved $330 million in military and economic aid to South Vietnam, although a top administration spokesman described the military situation there as "virtually hopeless."

Rep. John C. Flynt, D-Ga., disclosed the voice-vote decision to approve $165 million in military assistance and a like amount in economic and humanitarian aid. He said the measure would be sent quickly to House floor.

The vote was taken in closed session after the committee heard public testimony from Army Chief of Staff Frederick C. Weyand. The general had urged the committee to approve the full $1 billion in overall assistance President Ford requested, although he acknowledged under questioning that the South Vietnamese position "from our standpoint is virtually hopeless."

Congressional sources said the House committee recommendation faces an uphill fight in both the House and Senate. Last week, the Senate Armed Services Committee killed a proposal to authorize an additional $515 million-and a variety of lesser amounts-for military aid to Saigon.

The speedy committee action was on a proposal by committee Chairman George H. Mahon, D-Tex., who originally suggested $200 million in military aid and $165 million in economic and humanitarian aid.

Sources said some committee members adamantly opposed to more military aid voted for the proposal to get it out of committee and onto the floor of the House where they anticipated it would be reduced or killed.

Weyand said the administration wanted the full $722 million in military aid Ford requested because the Saigon government had not given up hope - although he indicated the United States did not share that optimism.

When Rep. Clarence D. Long, D-Md., asked if these statements did not constitute "a contradiction in terms", Weyand responded:

"It surely is."

He explained that the United States was supporting a principle of aiding a people who wish to defend themselves and live under a system in which their actions are not dictated from above.

"We say it is hopeless," Weyand continued, "but they say there is still hope. As long as they think there is hope, I think the principle we hold to is valuable for us to hold to."

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, testifying before the same committee, said that while the administration still wanted the full amount of President Ford's request, it would help if Congress approved the proposal of committee Chairman Rep. George H. Mahon, D-Tex.

Earlier yesterday, Mahon proposed that Congress appropriate $200 million in military assistance and $165 million in economic and humanitarian aid.

Kissinger and Weyand testified as the Senate took up a compromise contingency aid plan that would give the President limited authority and funds to use American troops and money to evacuate Americans, and perhaps some Vietnamese, from Vietnam.

A heavily damaged government armored car lies in the middle of a street in Xuan Loc, South Vietnam, the scene of heavy fighting recently. Yesterday, South Vietnam abandoned the provincial capital that is 38 miles northeast of Saigon.

Indochina developments

Senate urges accord

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The Senate, acting just hours after the resignation of South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu, yesterday urged President Ford to seek a new political settlement of the Vietnam War.

Senators approved by voice vote a resolution urging Ford to "undertake immediate efforts to obtain a cessation of hostilities in Vietnam through negotiation and to promote a political settlement."

The White House meanwhile said the United States expects to work with the new Saigon government.

VC may hold MIA's

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Gen. Frederick C. Weyand, Army chief of staff, said yesterday the United States knows that the Viet Cong is holding the remains of 57 U.S. military personnel listed as missing in action but refuses to release them.

"We must press for an accounting," Weyand told the House Appropriations Committee. He said he saw no reason why, if the South Vietnamese government enters into negotiations with the Communists, that this subject could not be raised.

Thieu may get asylum

WASHINGTON [UPI] - A State Department spokesman said yesterday any request by former South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu for asylum in the United States would be considered with "sympathy."

"The question has not arisen. If a request is made, we obviously would look on it with sympathy.

South Vietnam loses 2 provinces; Americans continue evacuation

SAIGON [UPI] — South Vietnam lost two more of its provinces by military defeat and its president by resignation yesterday. Americans fled Saigon by the hundreds and Australia decided to close down its embassy.

Military analysts said South Vietnam's battlefield appeared hopeless.

Viet Cong and North Vietnamese forces backed by tanks and artillery overran the province capitals of Xuan Loc and Ham Tan, and had an estimated 150,000 men in position for a possible major assault on Saigon itself.

South Vietnamese regulars defending Saigon were outnumbered three to one. Their defense line was pushed back to within 26 miles of the capital.

Americans were leaving the country in an around-the-clock evacuation. Of the 8,000 U.S. citizens in South Vietnam a few weeks ago, less than 3,000 were left Monday. U.S. Air Force C141 Starlifter jet transports flew throughout the night to take out more and reduce the total here to about 1,000.

Australia announced from Canberra it was closing its embassy in Saigon — the first western nation to do so. Its ambassador, Geoffrey Price, warned other Australians still in South Vietnam to get out immediately.

Ham Tan, on the coast 75 miles east-southeast of Saigon, and Xuan Loc, 38 miles northeast of the capital, were the 20th and 21st of South Vietnam's 44 province capitals to fall to the Communists since their offensive started in mid-March.

South Vietnam's abandoning of Xuan Loc, flattened by 13 days of heavy fighting, removed for the Communists a key block on one road to Saigon. The government pulled its troops back to a new defense line 26 miles from the capital and just east of the American-built bases at Long Binh and Bien Hoa.

Communist forces paving their way with a tank and artillery attack swept into Ham Tan after South Vietnamese defenders fled two bases north of the city.

Western sources said the Bien Hoa air base, South Vietnam's largest, may be next on the Communist list.

Brown students return to classes

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
Associated Press Writer
Medeiros is a former Collegian reporter

PROVIDENCE [AP] — Brown University students returned to their classes for the first time in a week yesterday but vowed that the rejection of their demands for a restoration of funds in next year's school budget could result in new protests.

A student referendum, the third within two weeks on the budget issue at the Ivy League School, was scheduled today to determine a future course of action by the students.

The Advisory and Executive Committee of the Brown Corp. on Saturday approved, despite the protests of the students, a $51.7 million austerity budget proposed by Brown President Donald F. Hornig.

The students wanted the committee to restore funds in the budget for financial aid; student services; faculty positions; and program affecting minorities.

But Chancellor Charles C. Tillinghast Jr. said Hornig's proposed austerity budget "begins the absolutely necessary process of restoring financial ability to Brown University."

The campus was described as normal yesterday in contrast to last Tuesday when students began their week-long class boycott and picketed classroom buildings and administrative offices.

"It's quite a contrast to last week," one student said. "Today the campus looks mobbed compared to last week. It's in a kind of sad state of flux, calm before the storm."

In today's referendum, the students will vote on the committee response to the student demands and whether future action should be taken or the protests ended.

The Student Coalition, the negotiating body for the students during the budget dispute, has called the committee response "inadequate" and said the student demands have not been fulfilled.

"There were dormitory meetings held across the campus Sunday in which students expressed their extreme frustration at the committee's response," Mark Argosh of the Student Coalition said.

High Court hears death penalty plea

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A lawyer for a condemned black man told the Supreme Court yesterday the death penalty should be abolished forever as an affront to "evolving standards of decency."

All nine justices were present to hear the historic 90 minutes of arguments over capital punishment.

Prof. Anthony G. Amsterdam of Stanford University Law School, representing the NAACP in a test case from North Carolina, said there is no evidence that "death is reserved for the most heinous cases" in that state.

US embassy stormed

ATHENS [UPI] — Left-wing demonstrators stormed the U.S. Embassy Monday, smashing doors, windows and furniture on the eighth anniversary of the "abominable April 21" when a group of officers set up a military dictatorship in Greece.

A government spokesman said groups of demonstrators, accusing the United States of having supported the now defunct rightist military regime, broke through a heavy police cordon guarding the embassy and into the building itself.

Portuguese fight

LISBON [UPI] — Political violence between left-wing extremists and members of a right-of-center party left more than 25 persons injured and added a new dimension yesterday to the final days of Portugal's election campaigns.

Paratroops were forced to open fire to disperse the mob after left-wingers burst through a cordon of local police and disrupted a meeting organized by the conservative Social Democratic Center Party at a theater in Guimaraes in northern Portugal.

Kennedy tops Ford

NEW YORK [AP] — Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., is the only one of six Democratic presidential potentials whose current popularity surpasses President Ford, the Harris poll reported yesterday. However, two others are on a par with Ford.

Although he has said he will not seek the nomination, Kennedy is favored over Ford 50-43 percent in the Harris survey. Most of his vote comes from persons under 30 and from blacks rather than whites.

African drought continues to plague residents

Mass starvation is averted through aid

EDITOR'S NOTE — In the aftermath of a seven-year drought that claimed more than 100,000 lives in West Africa, a half-dozen nations are trying to get back on their economic feet. But some people, faithful to their Moslem beliefs, think it's all in the hands of Allah.

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

NIAMEY, Niger |AP| — The rains have returned, the harvest has been good if subnormal, and mass starvation has been averted in the six nations that rim the Sahara's southern edge. But the drought crisis is far from over.

Rescued by a massive international relief effort that delivered more than a million tons of food, the herdsmen and subsistence farmers of the Sahel have for the most part left the refugee camps and are drifting north again to a wasteland of dead and dying trees dotted with the bleached bones of their decimated herds.

Seven years of drought in the two million square miles of the Sahel — Arabic for edge — where the desert meets West Africa's sparse savannas of brushland, and a half century of land mismanagement and overgrazing have wrought enormous disruptions in the lives of the 20 million inhabitants of Mauritania, Mali, Niger, Chad, Senegal and Upper Volta.

The terrible drought and its accompanying diseases claimed more than 100,000 lives and killed off 35 to 50 per cent of the cattle. But somehow the locusts, army worms, jackels, hyenas and other predators managed to survive and even increase.

Fishing has been severely crippled in the rivers of the Sahel, badly affected by salting up when low flow during the draught permitted the ocean to back up into the dry beds.

Enough food has been stockpiled throughout the Sahel to see the people through another growing season, but the fourfold increase in oil prices has put such necessities as pesticides, fertilizers and fuel for the tractors, irrigation pumps and trucks bringing firewood beyond their reach.

Rain in the Sahel has always been a sometime thing: a good rainy season would be 10 heavy rains of 15 to 20 minutes duration from July to September.

The West African heads of state, at a planning meeting a year and a half ago, estimated $800 million was needed for long-range development of this chronically impoverished corner of the world.

A number of planning and climatological studies have been launched, but the bulk of the money is nowhere in sight.

"The huge relief push averted mass starvation," said Jim Ekstrum, director of the U.S. Peace Corps in Nigeria. "Getting the people back on their feet and back even to their fragile way of life is something else."

The United States, which contributed about half the food and more than half the funds to the worldwide relief operation, has budgeted some $3 million in short-term aid projects in the Sahel over the next three harvest seasons. These include programs to save the date palm trees, encourage small agricultural cooperatives to increase millet and sorghum yields, fence off grasslands against predators, dig wells and irrigation canals, and a reforestation plan for West Africa's "tree of life." It is the goa tree, which gives shade to the crops, holds back the sand, provides forage for the cattle and, as a nitrogen fixer in the soil, increases millet production.

"Since before World War II, modern veterinary medicine and pest control have brought a vast increase in the goat and cattle population," said a British agronomist returning from the Bamako conference. "The French and the British colonial administrators saw the problem coming, but they were getting out in the wave of independence. They hoped the new governments would do something but unfortunately they had other economic woes."

In political repercussions of the drought, the government of Niger was overthrown and replaced by a military regime amid charges of corruption in distributing relief supplies. Chad for a time refused to accept U.S. aid after accusations of corruption and inept handling of relief aid appeared in American newspapers, and Mali and Upper Volta are still making war-like noises in a boundary dispute over water rights.

Governments have talked of banning goats in favor of cattle, of replacing camels, which eat the root systems of the trees, with Land Rovers — highly unlikely at today's gasoline prices — and forbidding the huge religious celebrations that bring nomads by the thousands with their camels and goat herds to the few remaining water holes.

The people themselves rarely blame the governments for their problems or pay much attention to official advice.

State senate continues debate on reinstating death penalty

BOSTON |UPI| — The Massachusetts Senate resumes debate this week on legislation reinstating the death penalty for nine categories of first degree murder.

Previous roll calls on the measure indicate there are sufficient votes to send the bill to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis who, like his predecessor Francis W. Sargent, has promised to veto it.

The bill is considered veto-proof in the House where the only roll call on the issue came when it was given initial approval on a 155-70 tally, safely above the two-thirds needed to override a veto.

However, 14 votes in the Senate are all that are needed to uphold Dukakis' veto and last week when the upper branch approved a slightly amended version of the House-passed bill the votes appeared to be there to sustain the veto — but just barely.

The Senate vote on the measure was 25-12, but senators on both sides of the issue acknowledge that a vote to sustain a veto probably would be 26-14. Included in the 14 would be Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem, who has remained out of the controversy since it began in 1972.

Attempts to reinstate the death penalty have been made annually since then. That was the year the U.S. Supreme Court ruled capital punishment, as it was meted out in most states, was unconstitutionally arbitrary and capricious. Massachusetts' death penalty statute was declared invalid.

However, the ruling was anticlimactic. There hadn't been an execution in the state since 1947, but the electric chair, which replaced the hanging rope in 1898 as the form of execution, claimed more than 60 lives during the 49 years it was in use.

Notes on the economy

...the enigma of inflation

Inflation. It's the same word used to describe what's happening when you blow air into a balloon.

But, for the past few years, the word has meant something else to most people. It's meant higher and higher prices which wages haven't been able to catch up with. In many ways it has changed our mode of living, yet inflation isn't something most people really understand.

Business Economist Robert H. Plattner of the UMass School of Business says some kind of inflation is inevitable.

"This has occurred," he says, "perhaps, because, except for the post World War I depression years, prices for goods and services have risen steadily, and dramatically at times, in all industrialized countries since the end of the 19th century when the industrial revolution began to cause a basic reorganization in almost all aspects of economic systems."

With the industrial revolution came organization of labor, and the tendency for labor to want more of a share of profits from production. If workers request wages above what the existing profits will allow, prices will be increased to cover that wage request, and perhaps at the same time to expand profits.

Prices go up to provide wages, wages go up to pay the higher prices, and more price increases are necessary for the higher wages. "Once the wage-price spiral starts, it's difficult to stop," says Plattner.

That's not all. The "galloping" nature of today's inflation is due also to some extraordinary circumstances. A few years ago the United States agreed to sell wheat to Russia, because we had a surplus. Seemed like a good idea at the time. Farmers would be able to sell more than what the U.S. market would bear, and U.S. wheat prices would not have to increase to satisfy the farmers.

But (and economics is full of "buts"), the next wheat crop was not as good as expected, so there went the surplus. This left a too-small supply of wheat for United States consumer demand. So, prices went up.

Then there is the oil situation. The unusual aspect here is that prices went up so high on a commodity so widely used, a commodity whose nature it is to affect so many other commodities. When the price of oil increased, other goods and services had to increase also. The economy is still feeling the shock from last year's oil price increases.

Inflation means prices go up. People keep buying, showing willingness to pay the prices, prices keep going up. Buying feels inflation. Prof. Plattner explains that people keep buying because they look ahead and try to beat the still higher prices they see coming.

This creates another problem. People who are spending are not saving, at least not as much. With less money deposited in savings banks, banks have less mortgage money to lend prospective homeowners. So, banks and the home building and real estate industries suffer. On the other hand, if people stopped spending and saved their money instead, the demand for goods and services in other businesses and industries would go down, and people who work for those would be out of jobs, creating a recession.

Inflation involves climbing prices. Recession has to do with unemployment, but then so does depression, and economists haven't decided when recession becomes depression.

During the 1930s when about 30 per cent of the labor force was out of work, that was depression, economists agree. Unemployment is threatening toward 10 per cent today, and combined with inflation, the economy is in trouble, "depression" or not.

Plattner, who specializes in the economy, compares inflation to something else we view and suffer helplessly — the common cold.

"The cause, cure, and impact of inflation on an economic system and economic behavior are not well understood. Like the common cold, it is all too common, yet still largely an enigma. However, one thing has become clear to economic policy makers, the trade-off for inflation is unemployment. And the effects of unemployment are more well understood and feared, at least politically, than are the effects of inflation."

Prices climb. People slow down their buying. Consumer demand for goods and services is down, so people are put out of work. This way, inflation cures itself, or at least slows itself down. If people are not buying, prices will be lowered to entice customers. But, Plattner points out, such a process poses a moral problem: society cannot let some of its people starve, or at least suffer severe economic hardship, so that the economy will straighten itself out.

So, the welfare payments, and programs such as CETA (Comprehensive Employment Training Act) which provide people with money to live on become necessary. Since spending feeds inflation, and such programs provide spending money, they can be considered inflationary.

Even a tax reduction can be considered inflationary by this definition, since it puts more money into our pockets. A tax reduction can encourage spending which encourages higher prices. And the backlash is apt to be that these higher prices discourage spending, and thereby cause unemployment. Because "rising prices cannot be easily controlled without the accompanying threat of rising unemployment," Plattner explains, "policy makers have generally tended toward allowing a moderate degree of inflation to occur while attempting to minimize unemployment levels."

He notes that "A steady rate of inflation and low unemployment offers greater prospects for economic efficiency than periods of alternating high inflation and high unemployment. Because with low unemployment, purchasing power is more constant and more efficient use is made of available resources — both labor and capital."

So, inflation is a cause of recession, when people are scared out of buying by the rising prices. Keeping the inflation going are the after-effects of last year's oil price increases, which Plattner says, are still working their way through the economy and influencing price increases for other items and services.

Plattner said the basic reason home mortgage rates are so directly influenced by inflation is that people are spending more and saving less, so savings banks are taking in less money than they need for lending.

People are spending more to beat higher prices they expect in the future. "Thus," Plattner notes, "a rising price structure often leads to a higher rate of spending from current income than does a stable price structure. But, a higher rate of spending from current income also means a lower rate of savings, which are necessary to supply funds for mortgages to buy housing and other capital goods."

The economist says the ever-rising prices create problems for savers, who know that if they deposit money in a bank, when they withdraw it to make a purchase, prices will have gone up, and their dollars will therefore have lost some value. So, instead of saving, people spend, trying to get maximum use of their money, using it before it loses more value in purchase power.

"In an inflationary economy," Plattner explains, "the yield on savings must be higher than the yield in an economy with a stable price structure. This causes an increase in the cost of mortgage money and the cost of real property purchased with mortgage money."

To encourage savings, then, banks must increase the interest they pay on savings accounts. And, to finance this increase, they must then take in more interest income, by raising mortgage and other lending interest rates. And many people with money to "save" seek other ways to let their money earn money, with various investments instead of savings accounts.

"In an inflationary economy there is a dual upward pressure on the price of real estate. There is an upward pressure on prices because of consumption demand, arising from general high levels of income and the expectation of continued high income. There are also supply pressures from a lack of savings and hence mortgage money, and also a higher cost of mortgage funds because of the need to compensate savers for the loss of purchasing power due to inflation."

One pressure on mortgage money comes when, as now, business is competing with home buyers for savings bank money. Business needs it because consumers are demanding more products, and business must expand production to satisfy that demand. Since interest rates are generally higher than rates for home mortgages, banks would prefer to lend to business.

...and optimism on recession

The turning point in the recession may be here.

Professor Sidney C. Sufrin of the School of Business Administration at UMass told businessmen gathered for an economic outlook conference the signs are optimistic.

But not without complications.

Sufrin doesn't believe the back of the "depression" can be broken in six months. But he thinks unemployment can show signs of easing, profits signs of increasing and prices signs of levelling off within that time.

These changes are affected by several factors. First, he explained, is the question of fiscal and monetary policies. These are complementary, never mutually exclusive, in Sufrin's view. Both imply intervention in the economic system by the government, an implied necessity.

The heart of the problem likely to shape the immediate future is the interdependency of the government and state of American business. The government influences the well-being of business on one hand, business influences the well-being of the government on the other.

This ebb and flow, according to Sufrin, has caused some business commentators to erroneously assume large expenditures now planned by the government will cause large deficits in the public budget, $35 billion this year, twice the next year.

Tax rebates and other government actions will increase sales and output, however, thus increasing public revenues, said Sufrin.

Government income may be higher than expected and expenditures less because unemployment and other transfer and benefit payments will decline. This is called the multiplier effect, said Sufrin. The effect may vary in immediacy, depending on whether tax rebates and cuts are spent or put in banks, thus immobilized.

Making the picture more complex is an apparent action by the Federal Reserve to slow the easing of its money policy. Sufrin said the Fed seems to have decided the decline in interest rates and the increase in money supply has gone far enough.

But, that stop and go policy is uncertain, deficit financing and tax rebates cost money. The Treasury will have to go to the market to borrow funds. As a result, businessmen find themselves competing with the government for funds, pushing interest rates up.

This is called "crowding out." Sufrin said it may also cause inflation due to the time lag between borrowing and the creation of goods and services.

In light of this, Sufrin said some businessmen are in favor of a slow growth rate which will not put extraordinary pressure on the money market. But, he added, this approach doesn't face the question of the social and personal costs of unemployment and low levels of activities in the private sector.

Others support rapid action to end the recession. The "big push" supporters believe funds are available for production.

More money and higher interest rates stimulate prices but increases will be quickly offset by goods and services flowing into the income stream.

Nobody wants to buy the ivory tower conception of long-term declining unemployment (5.5 per cent in 1980) now popular in Washington, Sufrin told his listeners, at least not those whose job security and family welfare depends on earned income.

Sufrin called for appropriate monetary policies. High interest rates reflect the policy of the immediate past, he said. But, he added, business cannot expand without available money.

Turning to the situation in Massachusetts, Sufrin said the state and regional economy depends on the nation's economy. He said statistics indicate the western part of the state seems as effective as the eastern, industrialized section.

The state budget, however, presents an enormous problem in the management of the public economy, he said. The problem is replicated at the local level where there is greater dependency on property taxes for revenue. But the state will be the harbinger of better times, Sufrin said, since it is essentially an exporter of goods and services.

Sufrin also predicted some gloomy events. He said the nation may face a shortage of strategic goods and services, increased demands for higher wages and energy shortages due to high prices.

Sufrin concluded by asserting that the future may not look ideal but it appears to be much better in business than it was two months ago.

Then there is the oil situation. The unusual aspect here is that prices went up so high on a commodity so widely used, a commodity whose nature it is to affect so many other commodities. When the price of oil increased, other goods and services had to increase also. The economy is still feeling the shock from last year's oil price increases.

Inflation means prices go up. People keep buying, showing willingness to pay the prices, prices keep going up. Buying feels inflation. Prof. Plattner explains that people keep buying because they look ahead and try to beat the still higher prices they see coming.

This creates another problem. People who are spending are not saving, at least not as much. With less money deposited in savings banks, banks have less mortgage money to lend prospective homeowners. So, banks and the home building and real estate industries suffer. On the other hand, if people stopped spending and saved their money instead, the demand for goods and services in other businesses and industries would go down, and people who work for those would be out of jobs, creating a recession.

Inflation involves climbing prices. Recession has to do with unemployment, but then so does depression, and economists haven't decided when recession becomes depression.

During the 1930s when about 30 per cent of the labor force was out of work, that was depression, economists agree. Unemployment is threatening toward 10 per cent today, and combined with inflation, the economy is in trouble, "depression" or not.

Plattner, who specializes in the economy, compares inflation to something else we view and suffer helplessly — the common cold.

"The cause, cure, and impact of inflation on an economic system and economic behavior are not well understood. Like the common cold, it is all too common, yet still largely an enigma. However, one thing has become clear to economic policy makers, the trade-off for inflation is unemployment. And the effects of unemployment are more well understood and feared, at least politically, than are the effects of inflation."

Prices climb. People slow down their buying. Consumer demand for goods and services is down, so people are put out of work. This way, inflation cures itself, or at least slows itself down. If people are not buying, prices will be lowered to entice customers. But, Plattner points out, such a process poses a moral problem: society cannot let some of its people starve, or at least suffer severe economic hardship, so that the economy will straighten itself out.

So, the welfare payments, and programs such as CETA (Comprehensive Employment Training Act) which provide people with money to live on become necessary. Since spending feeds inflation, and such programs provide spending money, they can be considered inflationary.

Even a tax reduction can be considered inflationary by this definition, since it puts more money into our pockets. A tax reduction can encourage spending which encourages higher prices. And the backlash is apt to be that these higher prices discourage spending, and thereby cause unemployment. Because "rising prices cannot be easily controlled without the accompanying threat of rising unemployment," Plattner explains, "policy makers have generally tended toward allowing a moderate degree of inflation to occur while attempting to minimize unemployment levels."

He notes that "A steady rate of inflation and low unemployment offers greater prospects for economic efficiency than periods of alternating high inflation and high unemployment. Because with low unemployment, purchasing power is more constant and more efficient use is made of available resources — both labor and capital."

So, inflation is a cause of recession, when people are scared out of buying by the rising prices. Keeping the inflation going are the after-effects of last year's oil price increases, which Plattner says, are still working their way through the economy and influencing price increases for other items and services.

Plattner said the basic reason home mortgage rates are so directly influenced by inflation is that people are spending more and saving less, so savings banks are taking in less money than they need for lending.

People are spending more to beat higher prices they expect in the future. "Thus," Plattner notes, "a rising price structure often leads to a higher rate of spending from current income than does a stable price structure. But, a higher rate of spending from current income also means a lower rate of savings, which are necessary to supply funds for mortgages to buy housing and other capital goods."

The economist says the ever-rising prices create problems for savers, who know that if they deposit money in a bank, when they withdraw it to make a purchase, prices will have gone up, and their dollars will therefore have lost some value. So, instead of saving, people spend, trying to get maximum use of their money, using it before it loses more value in purchase power.

"In an inflationary economy," Plattner explains, "the yield on savings must be higher than the yield in an economy with a stable price structure. This causes an increase in the cost of mortgage money and the cost of real property purchased with mortgage money."

To encourage savings, then, banks must increase the interest they pay on savings accounts. And, to finance this increase, they must then take in more interest income, by raising mortgage and other lending interest rates. And many people with money to "save" seek other ways to let their money earn money, with various investments instead of savings accounts.

"In an inflationary economy there is a dual upward pressure on the price of real estate. There is an upward pressure on prices because of consumption demand, arising from general high levels of income and the expectation of continued high income. There are also supply pressures from a lack of savings and hence mortgage money, and also a higher cost of mortgage funds because of the need to compensate savers for the loss of purchasing power due to inflation."

One pressure on mortgage money comes when, as now, business is competing with home buyers for savings bank money. Business needs it because consumers are demanding more products, and business must expand production to satisfy that demand. Since interest rates are generally higher than rates for home mortgages, banks would prefer to lend to business.

...and optimism on recession

The turning point in the recession may be here.

Professor Sidney C. Sufrin of the School of Business Administration at UMass told businessmen gathered for an economic outlook conference the signs are optimistic.

But not without complications.

Sufrin doesn't believe the back of the "depression" can be broken in six months. But he thinks unemployment can show signs of easing, profits signs of increasing and prices signs of levelling off within that time.

These changes are affected by several factors. First, he explained, is the question of fiscal and monetary policies. These are complementary, never mutually exclusive, in Sufrin's view. Both imply intervention in the economic system by the government, an implied necessity.

The heart of the problem likely to shape the immediate future is the interdependency of the government and state of American business. The government influences the well-being of business on one hand, business influences the well-being of the government on the other.

This ebb and flow, according to Sufrin, has caused some business commentators to erroneously assume large expenditures now planned by the government will cause large deficits in the public budget, $35 billion this year, twice the next year.

Tax rebates and other government actions will increase sales and output, however, thus increasing public revenues, said Sufrin.

Government income may be higher than expected and expenditures less because unemployment and other transfer and benefit payments will decline. This is called the multiplier effect, said Sufrin. The effect may vary in immediacy, depending on whether tax rebates and cuts are spent or put in banks, thus immobilized.

Making the picture more complex is an apparent action by the Federal Reserve to slow the easing of its money policy. Sufrin said the Fed seems to have decided the decline in interest rates and the increase in money supply has gone far enough.

But, that stop and go policy is uncertain, deficit financing and tax rebates cost money. The Treasury will have to go to the market to borrow funds. As a result, businessmen find themselves competing with the government for funds, pushing interest rates up.

This is called "crowding out." Sufrin said it may also cause inflation due to the time lag between borrowing and the creation of goods and services.

In light of this, Sufrin said some businessmen are in favor of a slow growth rate which will not put extraordinary pressure on the money market. But, he added, this approach doesn't face the question of the social and personal costs of unemployment and low levels of activities in the private sector.

Others support rapid action to end the recession. The "big push" supporters believe funds are available for production.

More money and higher interest rates stimulate prices but increases will be quickly offset by goods and services flowing into the income stream.

Nobody wants to buy the ivory tower conception of long-term declining unemployment (5.5 per cent in 1980) now popular in Washington, Sufrin told his listeners, at least not those whose job security and family welfare depends on earned income.

Sufrin called for appropriate monetary policies. High interest rates reflect the policy of the immediate past, he said. But, he added, business cannot expand without available money.

Turning to the situation in Massachusetts, Sufrin said the state and regional economy depends on the nation's economy. He said statistics indicate the western part of the state seems as effective as the eastern, industrialized section.

The state budget, however, presents an enormous problem in the management of the public economy, he said. The problem is replicated at the local level where there is greater dependency on property taxes for revenue. But the state will be the harbinger of better times, Sufrin said, since it is essentially an exporter of goods and services.

Sufrin also predicted some gloomy events. He said the nation may face a shortage of strategic goods and services, increased demands for higher wages and energy shortages due to high prices.

Sufrin concluded by asserting that the future may not look ideal but it appears to be much better in business than it was two months ago.

Two religious groups explored

B'nai Brith Hillel Foundation

By JUDY FRIEDLAND
Staff Reporter

Judaism is more than a religion, it's a life style with unique music, literature, art, cuisine and traditions. The B'nai Brith Hillel Foundation is trying to make students realize what it means to be Jewish.

"Most people think of all Hillel members as "religious", involved in only "religious activities," said Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, "when more 'non-religious' actually take part in the activities."

Approximately 4500 Jews reside in the 5-College community, according to Perlmutter, who said, "all of them are different."

He added, "This is one of the few areas where Jews of varying degrees of beliefs and interest work together. We plan different programs to serve the different kinds of people."

Hillel encourages students to initiate programs, according to Perlmutter. "We are willing to help any Jewish group on campus with no restrictions attached."

Hillel has helped to organize activities, which the students run on their own. Zamir, a weekly radio show of Israeli music and news was first telecast on WMUA last Sunday; a 5-College newspaper NU is being published, and a 5-College Jewish Arts Festival, highlighting Jewish music, art, literature and featuring nationally prominent personalities has been held. The students also worked to begin the Kosher meal plan this semester.

"It's true that we have religious services for those who want it, but even in that respect, we're experimenting, by running creative services," said Perlmutter.

Hillel is not a University-funded organization. It depends on student dues, and money donated from the Amherst and Northampton Jewish Community.

UCF - United Christian Foundation

By TED NEWCOMB
Staff Reporter

If you would like to explore new horizons of personal growth, then you just might be interested in the United Christian Foundation, which is located in 316-320 Hampshire House.

"UCF is a diverse group of people gathering under a very broad understanding of the Christian faith by following a way of love, persuing justice, doing works of justice, reflecting on faith, worshipping in a celebrative way, and by attempting to bridge many of the agencies and movements that try to do the same kind of things whether under religious or secular auspices." This was Pete Sabey's reaction to the question — What is UCF? Sabey is the full time pastor for the Foundation. His associates are Ruth Fessenden and Frank Dorman. These three people comprise what is known as a nonhierarchical "Team Ministry."

This organization, while being a non-profit religious center, tries to remain in touch with human needs and services. For this very reason, the United Christian Foundation "would like to believe it can work with many different religious groups. It serves a sort of bridging function in the college community. The membership ranges from a conservative, fundamentalist type of background to the very liberal (and perhaps highly secularized). Therefore, UCF feels it can touch upon many different religious interests and have something in common with each of them while having its own unique lifestyle." UCF is a mixture of different people from all walks of life. As was mentioned by Sabey, "UCF membership is a very diverse group, almost undefinable. Many of these people are searching for something because they do not know what their faith commitment is."

UCF encourages the individual to mold his or her own faith. They do not force any type of belief system upon you. Neither do they teach any form of standard curriculum. "UCF welcomes questions as well as commitment" and offers a person the chance to grow in faith, hope, and love for others and especially for God.

The services offered by UCF can be broken down into four general categories: 1) Political Theology — rallies, boycotts, 2) Celebration — Communion, 3) Religious Studies — Bible Study, Faith Explorations, and 4) Counseling — marital, premarital, personal, infirmary visitation program. The outreach of the various programs mentioned above adds to the well-rounded atmosphere existing at UCF.

"I think every individual student has a sense of having a life to spend and wanting to spend it in a way that is happy, that is somehow productive and useful to the world, that somehow counts at least in a small way. But along with that existence, there's a lot of anxiety about just surviving; being secure," Sabey said. He added, "A lot of escapist and even destructive behavior comes out of the tremendous tension of wanting a meaningful life and just being afraid that maybe there's no room and possibly not even a future."

Undergrads to advise fellow journalism majors

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

Advising for journalism majors will be available during spring registration as a result of the newly-formed Journalism Undergraduate Committee.

Advising on a large scale basis was not available in previous years because it was impossible for three full-time professors to advise 235 majors according to Professor Howard Ziff, chairman of the journalism program. Working with Ziff, the committee has drawn up a feasible plan for as many journalistic studies majors who want assistance in course selection to obtain it.

Ten upper-classpersons are having work sessions with Ziff to prepare for advising in two weeks. They will be able to advise students on the journalism and English requirements as well as assist students in selecting supplementary courses in the English department and other departments in the university that will enhance their journalism program.

Sign-up sheets for appointments to be made with the student advisors will be posed today through April 26 on the door of Ziff's office in E-10 Machmer.

Advising sessions will be held the week of April 28 from Monday to Friday at 10-12 and 2-4 p.m. in Machmer E-10. Appointments are arranged in 20 minute intervals.

The Journalism Undergraduate Committee was organized last semester as a result of a meeting in response to the English department's decision to establish English as a sole track to a journalism major.

Several journalistic studies majors said they felt undergraduates had not been effectively utilized in the course of reaching that decision. They organized to obtain greater control in their chosen course of study.

The Undergraduate Committee is continually growing. It began with four members, now has over 20 working members, and is starting a campaign to solicit the interest of more JS majors.

Since it was first initiated, the Committee has published two newsletters called the INSTIGATOR, held several meetings to gain support and inform students, met with Ziff, and set up various ad-hoc committees. These ad-hoc committees are; advising, curriculum, work-shop, and internship.

The JS Committee's first goal was to work towards establishing journalism as a full major. Because of the lack of funds in the university, it realized this could only be a long range goal. Instead it decided to work towards improving the JS department in its transition. The Committee's first step was to obtain advisors to counsel JS majors. It plans to formulate a new curriculum for JS-English majors with Professors Ziff and Larry Pinkham, and to supplement the curriculum with workshops and eventually internships.

Ziff has been working on several plans which he calls his "dream sheets". They are the formulation of a graduate JS major to supply the undertstaffed department with teacher assistants and a full undergraduate journalism major. Ziff has welcomed the input of the JS Undergraduate on these ideas and on other facets of the JS program.

Ziff said earlier, "If I can have 300 students supporting me when I present a plan for the JS major at the end of the semester, maybe by next year the workings on a plan for a full JS major can begin."

"In default of any communication with Armand Demers or Dorothy O'Connor — at 5-3600 — in the RSO Office by Thursday, May 8, 1975 by members, advisors, or officers of the following organizations, said organizations will be considered inactive as of July 1, 1975:"

Twelve-act circus slated for Sunday

By MARA KLEIN
Staff Reporter

Gentle Ben the Bear and Tony the Wonder Horse are two of the acts appearing in the Cage with the Emmet Kelly, Jr. All Star Circus on Sunday, April 27, according to Bill Hosking, chairman of the event.

Sponsored by the 2nd floor of Brown House, a recognized RSO group, and the Commuter Assembly, the circus will perform two shows, at 2 and 6 p.m.

Twelve acts are featured in the show, including a balancing act, international illusionists, educated chimps and a horse that hugs and kisses his owner-trainer.

Since the contract for sponsorship of the circus was signed late, publicity didn't go into full swing until this past week, said Hosking. Since then sales have "been on the upswing," he added.

Previously the town dominated the audience, but Hosking is trying to change that by concentrating more on attracting students. Balloons are being sold in the Campus Center and handbills have been distributed, he said.

A clown seminar, instructed by Kelly and an appearance by Kelly and Gentle Ben at the Mall, are two possible promotions, Hosking stated, adding that they are "still in the planning stages."

Tickets purchased in advance are $1.50 for children 14 yrs. and under and $2.50 for adults. They are available daily from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Campus Center Concourse and in the Student Activities Office. Door prices are $2 for children and $3 for adults.

UMass to host twelve profs for NEH seminar

By ANNE MELANSON
Staff Reporter

The National Endowment for the Humanities is funding the 3rd annual Summer Seminar for College Teacners to take place at UMass this summer.

The purpose of the seminars is to provide teachers from two-year colleges and from small private and state colleges with opportunities to work at institutions with well-supplied libraries suitable for mature studies. UMass is one of many large universities that is participating in the federal program.

According to Seminar Director Walker Gibson, the teachers participating are those "who are stuck working in the boondocks" and have little opportunity to further their studies for lack of access to sophisticated sources.

12 teachers have been chosen for this summer's seminars. They come from all over the country to study a variety of subjects: one woman from the Colorado School of Mines will study Yeats' prose; another man from Maryland's Catonsville Community College will pursue a study in the language of government bureaucracy.

Besides individual scholarly projects, each accepted "student" will participate in an English seminar with Gibson, concentrating on the intellectual or philosophical concerns that lie behind our classroom activity and that affect everything we do there."

The NEH Summer Seminar will take place from June 22 to August 9. Each participant receives a $2,000 grant for the seven-week session, and an additional $250 for living expenses. No academic credit is involved. Anyone wishing further information on the program should contact Gibson in Bartlett 252.

Student interning with Greenfield selectmen

A desire for "real life experience" has taken Craig Chadwick away from the "ideal in political science text books" and into the offices of the Greenfield selectmen.

Chadwick, a second semester senior at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, is one of about 50 students taking part in political internships during the spring semester. An internship is an accredited program offered by the University enabling a student to leave traditional in-class instruction and gain first-hand knowledge of the activities in political institutions, businesses, and other governmental agencies. There are 200 students in the internship program.

While he is interning in the selectmen's office, Chadwick is satisfying a childhood fancy of being a fireman. He lives in the Greenfield Fire Station, and is "on call" there as one of the eight "housemen" who assist the primary firefighters.

In a description of his work with the selectmen, Chadwick calls himself the "liaison" between the town's committees or boards and the main office in town hall.

"I'm now attending every meeting that there is," the 21-year-old Greenfield native said. According to Chadwick there are weeks when he has had up to 10 meetings, some of which have lasted into the late evening hours.

Chadwick spends most of his mornings researching for the upcoming town report. The Massachusetts Selectmen's Association offers a series of awards for excellence in content and layout of town reports and Greenfield hopes to place high in the running this year, according to Chadwick.

"I've been out taking pictures for the report and going blind reading microfilm," Chadwick said. He does most of his research in the Greenfield Recorder's microfilm room.

Chadwick has no formal supervision by the University during his internship. He is required, however, to write several papers on his experiences for his sponsor, Jerome Mileur, associate professor in the political science department. All interns must receive the sponsorship of a professor to obtain credit for their work.

Mileur, who is also sponsoring interns in Springfield, believes the "point of all intern programs is for students to complement their work in class with their work in the field."

"In Craig's case the internship grew largely out of his own efforts. He made most of the details and arrangements himself," Mileur said. Most internships are previously established and all arrangements are made by the administrators of the program rather than the student.

Meanwhile, Chadwick's firefighting duties often keep him busy whenever he returns to his dormitory room at the fire station. He is on call to supplement the regular men about 16 hours a day throughout the year. The job is not purely voluntary. He receives $475 a year.

"I've always like fire trucks and the whole deal," he said. "We're called to do something about four or five times a week," he said. Furnace or boiler problems are common calls for the eight housemen during the winter months, according to Chadwick.

"When I was a sophomore I thought of quitting school and joining the regular (fire) force," he said. Chadwick has made at least two rescues during his experience with the housemen. One incident occurred at 4:30 a.m. at -15 degrees during a two alarm blaze three years ago.

To supplement his firefighting abilities Chadwick is also enrolled in a paramedics course at Greenfield Community College.

Crediting the American middle class

Re: Ellen Gavin's "Who is the Orphan?" of the April 15 issue.

While we respect the feeling that prompted Ms. Gavin to write this piece, and we join in her disgust with the futility and monstrous folly of our involvement in Vietnam, we believe she's dumping on the wrong people. These American families are trying to help in some way, trying to atone for their guilt in helping destroy a country. These aren't people with Mercedes-Benzes and Peugots. They're not adopting Vietnamese children to reinforce their feelings of American superiority, they're adopting these children to love.

Perhaps Ms. Gavin doesn't agree with the Babylift — fine. Dump on the Operation. But don't dump on people who lack your brand of collegiate cynicism and are trying to do something loving and human. Ms. Gavin is in no position to judge how there children will be brought up, or how many parents will tell them the truth. Give the middle-class American family some credit for trying to make up for their guilt by complicity, by taking on the gigantic responsibility of raising a war-scarred child of a different culture. It's not going to be easy for either of them. And be glad some people still have consciences.

Nitpicking's gone too far

In response to the editorial on April 16 by Marcia Robinson, Joan Keith, Rosemary Elder and 18 others: Congratulations! Your complaint concerning the "Scientific Breast Guage" was obviously justified, you were able to understand the calibration on the guage thus proving your intelligence! Now if only you could be human enough to laugh at something which was also obviously intended as a joke. As the ad says "the most gauche thing since the Whoopee Cushion."

Of course I will be the first to admit that many inequities and injustices exist in our world so let's do something about important issues instead of nitpicking over trivial jests.

Fed up!

As long as an F earns a student credits towards graduation, it cannot add to his or her grade-point average [the average for all courses of the credits received for a course times the points assigned to the mark for the course]. Since the cumulative average is this value divided by the total credits earned by a student (excluding pass-fail credits), it (the cum. average] is supposed to indicate how well a student has learned what he learned. Unless this system for determining grade-point averages and cumulative averages is changed, an F indicates that "nothing" has been learned. With this implication in effect, it would be grossly unfair and illogical to consider F's in computing a student's cumulative average. How can something not accumulated be used in a cumulative average?

OPINION

Back to the 60's

By MARY DRISCOLL

It is often debated whether the sixties had any significant messages but more disgruntling is whether youth had underestimated its ability to turn its idealism into progressive social alternatives. It is hard to analyze what construction grew out of the sixties; youth had suddenly disappeared from the front pages of establishment media. This retreat was diagnosed as "the apathy syndrome" and it was assumed that all clamor took a back seat to economic survival — that is, "how can you expect ME to run a revolution and get into graduate school at the same time!"

Well, kids, I hate to break your hearts but, a funny thing happened to me on the way to campus last Thursday night — I was nearly run down by two-thousand UMies chanting "STRIKE", filing toward the Student Union in organized marches from Orchard Hill and Southwest. The moment struck me like an unexpected ghost. The electrified energy of mass annunciation was frightening because it brought with it a depressing forecast: futility.

But something very curious happened in the Ballroom that night. It was a provocative and new experience for the students to listen to speeches that identified the economic crisis here in Amherst with the plight of the working-class, poor women with children and the welfare recipients of this state. Students seemed to thoughtfully digest the meaning of the phrase "education for those who can afford it." The crowd responded to the explanation that a decrease in the state budget for higher education meant that UMass would soon no longer be a place for the people who built and maintain it: working-class and minorities.

The "Town-Meeting" didn't incite hysterical demands for a strike. What it did do is ask people to think, to sort out alternatives. It may be that we are learning an important distinction between strike and protest; the latter is the vocal recognition of a commonly oppressing force. Strike, in the past, has not proved to do much more. Yet it appears that a strike at UMass is inevitable. It will be the students' protest against the fact that their education may become a matter of financial clout. But because this cause is on a level that applies directly to the course of our lives, students at UMass are preparing to register their dissent in active and constructive strategies. If we strike, we cannot expect to spend the time getting sun-tans. There are educational workshops planned and many letters to be written to parents, alumni and legislators. As John Bracey said the other day, "contrary to popular opinion, students are real persons with a potentially powerful political lever."

From our perspective

Keeping it together

Last Thursday night, an estimated crowd of over-two thousand students gathered for a Town Meeting in the Student Union Ballroom. The meeting was organized as a carry over from the rally sponsored by the Coalition for a People's Budget the day before. The attendance at the meeting was far more than anticipated, and marked a beginning, however late, of organized protest of the budget cuts and administration disregard for student input.

Another result of the meeting was the Student Action Committee, a group of concerned students who have taken it upon themselves to organize the protest on and off campus. These people should be congratulated for the amount of time and energy they have put into the cause. However, this work will have been in vain unless wide-spread student support for the protest strategy is gathered.

Today at noon, there will be an assemblage at the ramp of Whitmore, and at 12:30 a march to the Campus Center. A 1:00 rally is scheduled, where student negotiators will present the list of demands to members of the Student Affairs Committee of the Board of Trustees. It is important that students attend and support the demonstration to show the committee where we stand.

Tomorrow evening there will be another Town Meeting, where a strike will be explained and discussed, and a referendum will be decided upon.

Last Thursday we showed that students here are starting to come together enough to take collective action. Let's keep things together and show that this is not just another case of Spring Fever.

This heel runs on no platform

During these crucial days of apprehension and noncommitment, it's important to know that we have such great leaders — such stalwarts of American promiscuity as Peter Lewicke. His lean and lanky appearance reminds one immediately of the great Abraham Lincoln and when he opens his mouth and begins to utter those intriguing statements about nothing, one can only realize that he's the candidate to lead us out of these troubled times.

His campaign manager, Henry Ragin, is known across campus as the "father of UMass realization" and Henry's two former escapades at trying to win the UMass presidency have only proven that the means justifies the end. At last year's ceremonies, it can be remembered that five enthusiastic UMies ran onto the stage and bared their asses with an enjoyable "RAGIN" written across.

But Henry isn't running this year and instead has chosen to throw his support behind the impressively laxadaisical figure of Peter Lewicke. One has only to wonder at the important campaign tactics the two have devised for this year's event, and when asked about his chances of winning, Peter said he was confident of being able to rally two to five per cent of the vote behind his candidacy. His campaign staff estimates a logical one-in-a-million chance of Peter's being selected tonight.

But great men have rarely before been stopped by a dampening of their winning prospects, and Peter will march into that ceremony tonight and try his hardest to make sure that student government never again returns in this form to this school. It's doubtless he will win because those who would be abolished are those who will have the chance to vote tonight, which is perhaps the whole basis of Lewicke's campaign and complaint that the "control addicts" have taken over student government and kept it out of students' hands while dispensing student money at random.

Peter's platform is truly the most representative of overall UMass philosophy and echoes the cries heard by bureaucrats around the world that the system is controlled by the wrong people and the money is going to the wrong places. Perhaps Peter's platform of abolition is the only eventual answer to UMass' budget problems. Whatever the case, it would be in the interests of the students of this university to choose Peter Lewicke as their S.G.A. President, and that's precisely why he won't be chosen.

As Henry put it: "It doesn't matter whether or not we win the election, but every time an individual speaks in favor of individuals rather than in favor of institutions, a victory is gained."

"The Revolution will not be televised."

Gil Scot-Heron

Over 50,000 people made it to Concord Friday night, braving the wind, rain and cold, to call for "economic democracy". The event was the largest economic demonstration since the Depression, despite attempts to thwart it by closing all access roads seven hours prior to the announced time.

Coverage of the rally by the media, both electronic and print, was ignored, downplayed or highly distorted, even though PBC followers doubled the amount of lawn chair traditionalists on the river's east side.

The message throughout the night from the PBC makeshift stage was political, revolutionary and inspirational; an 80 year old woman from the suffragette era was up at 3 a.m. to speak to us; orators quoted Tom Jefferson, Abigail Adams and Tom Paine; Phil Ochs dedicated a song to the Khmer Rouge; Pete Seeger and Arlo Guthrie played on the heartstrings of all; Holly Near created a climactic feeling of solidarity with her songs of human liberation.

A Boston Globe report said people left because the "party was over". Didn't that reporter realize that those there were working class people, many who must work weekends?

Ford, approaching the bridge from the side the British had, was as deceitful as the news media as he disparaged the spirit of the Revolution by trying to connect it with his obscene remarks. Glorifying the U.S. military throughout his brief speech, he said, "The U.S. has become a world power. From a newborn nation with a few ships, American sea power now ranges to the most distant shores." Of course, Jerry made no reference to the true nature of our past — one of slavery, imperialism and genocide.

After Ford, some 300 lean men and women, slodging through the mucky bottomed river in a patriotic effort to join the parade, risked skull fractures from the hulky stick wielding Nat. Park Police, wearing "revolver expert" badges.

Even "accredited" news media were turned back from the bridge. (I made it across by infiltrating into a Boy Scout troup before being thrown back by a pack of Secret Service agents.)

Several people tried to bring an "economic democracy" banner across but were driven back by riot trained mounted police wearing orange red rain gear. Immediately, people chanted, "The Red Coats are coming!"

Concord's Bicentennial: Bridging the dissatisfied

Photos by Mark Biletch, Dick Leonard and Fran Glavin

There was a moment during the Bicentennial which reflected what the whole thing was supposed to be about. It came at 4:30 a.m. while the crowd in front of the stage, tired cold and wet, stood ankle deep in mud. Rain fell through the spotlight reflecting off orange slickers and black umbrellas.

Pete Seeger was on the stage with Phil Ochs, Holly Near, Utah Phillips, Barry Commoner, George Wald, Danny Schecter and the organizers of the People's Bicentennial. People below, standing huddled passing bottles of Yukon Jack to keep warm were singing and clapping to the Woody Guthrie ballad, "This Land is My Land".

At that one moment, it all fell together briefly, the rain even stopped as we all headed for higher, dryer ground for some sleep before the theater of the next day began.

And Saturday was theater; a drunken form of guerilla theater where the players remembered the lines of the sixties but forgot the plot. The PBC started with a declaration of economic independence which was underlined by flower bearing Arlo Guthrie (who forgot one of the verses to his own father's song).

Hoards of boy scouts descended on the east bank where the PBC had gathered and ate their peanut butter and jelly sandwiches amidst the beer cans and rubbish from the night before. One troop sat munching wide eyed about fifteen feet from a couple making love in a sleeping bag.

As the parade began and anticipation for the Presidents arrival grew, the audience was triggered by a small dog who ran across the marsh, swam to the peninsula, dodged the police and ran over the North Bridge to prove that it could be done.

The arrival of the President brought boos and hisses from the PBC crowd, more police to enforce the barricade, obscene chanting, more people wading across to where they were chased by the police who kept falling down in pursuit, losing their boots in the mud and beating on kids then throwing them back into the crowd.

FORD: The United States has become a world power.

PBC CROWD: Boo, bullshit, go home dope.

FORD: Tyranny by any other name is tyranny.

PBC: Yea, now you're talking, Cheer, Hooray.

Soon it was all over, the crowd, muddy and hungover, trudged back to their cars miles away.

The majority of the people seemed to want a concert, another Woodstock, but unlike five years ago they were drunk rather than stoned, happy rather than made, and at a rally for the poor working class, they were comparitively well off.

—Bill Parent

Even after hours of cold and damp participation, the main body of people stayed at the rally area to protest the presence and the speech of Gerald Ford. There was some confrontation with the police by thousands of people trying to reach the North Bridge during Ford's speech, however there was little violence and few arrests even though the protesters were extremely agitated.

According to Randy Barner of the PBC, the rally was an overwhelming success. "The most heartening aspect of the event was that tens of thousands of people, after sitting through hours of adverse weather still showed their feelings by vocally and physically protesting our economic situation through Gerald Ford," he said. "They sent a message that can't be ignored even though the local media down played that aspect completely."

"We started out with a dream of thousands of people facing the morning after a night of music and oratory," he said, "and it came off even better than we expected. People do realize why they were called there. They were the beginning of a revolutionary movement that's taking place nationally today."

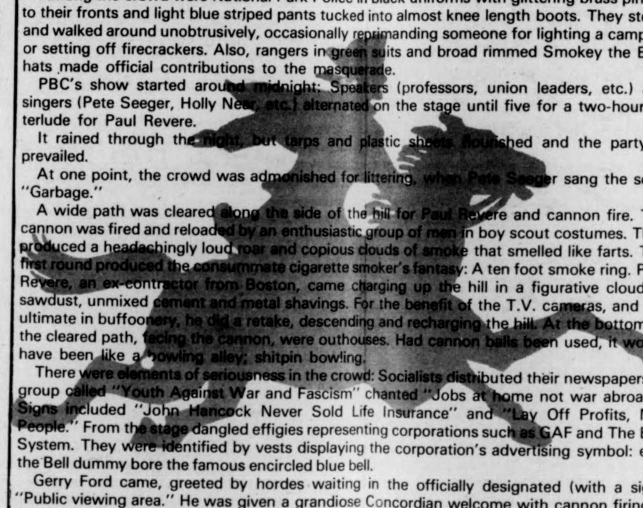
"One thing that blew my mind" he said, "was that there was no fear or hostility from the straight people at the rally even during the police confrontation. They weren't grabbing their children and leaving, they were watching and they understood what was happening."

As far as PBC's future plans are concerned Barber said; "This is only one step in a continuing effort to bring people around." We will be contacting those people and groups that participated in the rally and we are going to continue our presence at smaller historic events in the future. We will hold a regional conference in late May or early June to make sure that good solid groups will be working on local issues."

The next main PBC event will take place over Thanksgiving when a Continental Congress will be assembled in Washington D.C. to consolidate the efforts of progressive groups and individuals nation wide.

Refering back to media coverage of the Concord event Barber said; "Being farther away, the national news played a more neutral role in evaluation of the event. However, the local media, in distorting their coverage are only ignoring a reality, the reality that people are angry, frustrated and willing to devote themselves to basic changes in spite of all the opposition and power facing them."

—Joe Cotter



The town of Concord has been preparing for the Bicentennial for 200 years. Stores were dressed in American flags and red, white and blue half moons resembling bisected archery targets. One store window displayed a liberty bell carpet (Don't tread on me???). In front of the Johnny Tremain Gift Shop, a hawker in a minuteman costume was shouting "Buy a Bicentennial button package." Another minuteman, drunk, was being interviewed by a tv crew. Good Burghers, dressed like Jack Nicklaus and Betty Ford, were on leave from their motels. They strolled the streets giving their little kids history lessons.

Down the street from the town center, over "the rude bridge that arched the flood," and past the Minuteman statue, was the camp and stage of the People's Bicentennial Committee. The stage was at the bottom of a hill, close to the Concord River. Radiating from the stage was a carpet of people, sleeping bags, cases of beer, half gallon wine bottles, knapsacks, pipes and joints and sheets of plastic. On the periphery of the crowd were groups of rented portable fiberglass outhouses.

Among the crowd were National Park Police in black uniforms with glittering brass pinned to their fronts and light blue striped pants tucked into almost knee length boots. They stood and walked around unobtrusively, occasionally reprimanding someone for lighting a campfire or setting off firecrackers. Also, rangers in green suits and broad rimmed Smokey the Bear hats made official contributions to the masquerade.

PBC's show started around midnight: Speakers (professors, union leaders, etc.) and singers (Pete Seeger, Holly Near, etc.) alternated on the stage until five for a two-hour interlude for Paul Revere.

It rained through the night, but tarps and plastic sheets flourished and the partying prevailed.

At one point, the crowd was admonished for littering, when Pete Seeger sang the song "Garbage."

A wide path was cleared along the side of the hill for Paul Revere and cannon fire. The cannon was fired and reloaded by an enthusiastic group of men in boy scout costumes. They produced a headachingly loud roar and copious clouds of smoke that smelled like farts. The first round produced the consummate cigarette smoker's fantasy: A ten foot smoke ring. Paul Revere, an ex-contractor from Boston, came charging up the hill in a figurative cloud of sawdust, unmixed cement and metal shavings. For the benefit of the T.V. cameras, and the ultimate in buffoonery, he did a retake, descending and recharging the hill. At the bottom of the cleared path, facing the cannon, were outhouses. Had cannon balls been used, it would have been like a bowling alley; shitpin bowling.

There were elements of seriousness in the crowd: Socialists distributed their newspapers, a group called "Youth Against War and Fascism" chanted "Jobs at home not war abroad." Signs included "John Hancock Never Sold Life Insurance" and "Lay Off Profits, Not People." From the stage dangled effigies representing corporations such as GAF and The Bell System. They were identified by vests displaying the corporation's advertising symbol: e.g. the Bell dummy bore the famous encircled blue bell.

Gerry Ford came, greeted by hordes waiting in the officially designated (with a sign) "Public viewing area." He was given a grandiose Concordian welcome with cannon firing a 21 gun salute. When Ford spoke, it sounded like he was still pissed about Vietnam. For a local slant he mentioned Emerson, inspiring the indignant yell from the crowd of "Leave him out of this."

Across the river from Ford, the PBC crowd shouted and waved hundreds of yellow "Don't tread on me" flags replete with the archetypal charmed snake. An individual managed to get to polices' front line, but was netted by cops spastically slipping and sliding as he was chased across a marsh in a Keystone Cops scene.

After Ford left, a big parade followed. High school bands and minutemen style marching units playing fifes marched over the bridge, peripheral visions darting to the gamut of gawking good burghers.

The Globe, Herald American and the New York Times estimated the attendance to be about 20,000. The Springfield Republican, in a story written by the Los Angeles Times service, said 30,000. The Worcester Telegram said 10,000. The Globe qualified their report of 12,000 by attributing it to cops stationed at entranceways.

As if they were speaking with authority, the Herald American made a neat little dichotomy of "radicals" (PBC) and "The real bicentennial" (Jerry Ford, minutemen and good burghers.) In the Globe, columnist Jeremiah Murphy disdained it as youthful frivolity and dismissed it as merely "a hypocracy in Concord."

—Jim Paulin

UMass "patriots" who attended Friday night's PBC rally at Concord Bridge gave mixed reactions to the event.

An estimated 350 students left campus Friday to join the throng on the banks of the Concord River, traveling by thumb, car caravan, or bus. Passengers on a free UMass bus, sponsored by the Commuter Assembly and the Veteran's Coalition for Community Affairs (VCCA), were asked for their opinions during the return trip on Saturday.

Debbie Cookson, a senior: "I think PBC was successful in that they were a unified, organized group of people committed to an ideology of action and change. My reasons for attending the rally were primarily political ... people who went hoping for a second Woodstock may have been disappointed."

Bruce Madden, a junior: "The main problem was that people were over-partying and some people didn't even know who the PBC were. You can't bring change to America with grass and booze, especially when you hear the shithouse green helicopters whooshing by overhead and see the S.S. guards grimacing from their cold metallic minds."

Joseph Frackleton, a junior: "The problem was that the PBC was trying to manipulate all of us there.

While many were there mainly for the music and get together, the PBC wanted to make it clear to the masses that we were all there to show our concern for a corrupt nation. I personally did not attend the rally with the purpose of throwing fists in the air and harassing the president. I went mainly for the music and good time."

Ralph Gott, a freshman: "The treatment by the media will determine its success ... if government leaders take note of the protest and the conditions that instigated it, it should be effective. It was also a tremendous spectacle that I would have regretted missing."

Gini Mangon, a freshman: "The rally was a true test of people power. The vast numbers alone (45,000) demonstrates that people are motivated to come together, though for different reasons. I went to the rally for its historical value, curiosity, and some entertainment. I didn't know that the purpose was strictly political and economic though I was aware of this as an underlying issue."

The 30 odd students on the bus, while differing widely in their feelings about PBC, were unanimous in their exhaustion. Upon reaching UMass, their chief priorities were plainly showers and sleep.

—Rick Hanauer

We arrived late Friday afternoon as rumor had it Concord would be closed off at 5 and we wanted to get there early. The crowd was steadily growing, young preppies with Woodstock on their minds, burnt out hippies and semi-hippies, people with beer coolers and knapsacks. And of course the cops, with one eye on the crowd, and the other actively searching for any woman resembling Patty Hearst. Rumor had it Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young were coming; the crowd grew. They all came with their EMS backpacks, down sleeping bags, Canons, Nikons and Instamatics, and most of all much brew and little pot to protest the corporate ownership of the country.

The atmosphere on Friday evening was light; one of almost relief, "Hey, we're back together again, didn't I see you at Watkin's Glen?" It was almost too bad that it had to be a protest.

One young man, slightly disheveled, more than slightly inebriated, began to lead the crowd in a rowsing version of "Happy Birthday" to America. People were into it.

Nevertheless, it was a protest, a great try even if it wasn't quite a success. We are the victims of fragmentation; there are no longer any clear cut issues to unite us. For every person who cheered at the speech criticizing the job shortage, there was another who booed. "Who wants a job?" remarked someone standing near me. "I'm happier on unemployment!" And perhaps it was a bit much when the brother of Caesar Chavez decrying Gallo Wines to a group of people who had already downed the equivalent of half a vineyard.

Whenever someone called out a name from the stage, there was a corresponding yell of "Allen Faye!", and cheers of "No Rain!" were as intermittent as the spring showers. It was almost haunting, like someone trying desperately to achieve an orgasm, we were trying to achieve a feeling, and the more we tried, the more difficult it became.

The next day we went to Concord Center to survey the damage. The President had gone home, the young people had not. We stood on a corner in the rain eating (HEY! only 25 cents each clearance sale) ham and cheese sandwiches, watching the police arrest a drunken black man. The townies hurried by, looking at the young people like the French looked at the Nazis who had just taken over their village. There was singing and drinking, and a dummy labeled "Exxon" lay dead in the street. As we walked back to the car I spotted a boy, dirty and downed out, asleep in the doorway of a hardware store, the contents of his pack strewn all around him. Something I had heard the day before echoed in my head, "Happy Birthday America, happy birthday to you!"

—B. J. Roche

It was labeled a party by the established press, a failure as an economic protest, a failure as a concert. It was so easy to reduce the gathering of forty-thousand people at Concord for the People's Bicentennial Committee Town Meeting to a nothing-else-to-do-and-it's-Friday-night fling. Although the crowd was not the working class as expected, although there were twenty drug abuse cases shipped out, and although the majority of people there were drinking, that is not what happened at all.

In truth, what occurred was a symptom of an oppressive disease that has attacked our generation for at least the past four years. The apathy, the waiting to see what was going down, the prevailing being there for the sake of being there attitude are merely outgrowths of something much more important, much more devastating than simple failure.

Our generation is totally without leaders, a fact made extraordinarily obvious by the crowd's attempts to make Arlo Guthrie into his father's image (needless to say an impossible feat). There is no one for us to look up to and say "yeah, that's where we should be headed", there is no one powerful or persuasive enough to make our decisions for us. The myth of the Great Glowing Savior died with George McGovern and no one is brave enough to stick their neck out for fear of learning the 'truth' about them. Che's image has been successfully destroyed by corporation P.R. and McGovern made too many mistakes to be believed. Basically, there is no one trustworthy (no thanx to the media, I assure you).

Until a human power source developes, we, as a generation, will remain fragmented and listless, turning toward outside stimulus (TV and other drugs) to divert our energies. We fill our lives with lame excuses and mourn the passing of the sixties with religious fever (Ah, the experience!).

All the words were right on the evening of April nineteenth, the emotion was there, the expectations were there, but the believability, the intensity was not. We sit, watch, wait with detachment and are careful not to trust. Long live America, you have taught us well.

Why strike?

commentary

By M. A. JONES

The proposed cutbacks arise partly due to the economic crunch but for another reason too. Moreover, even given austerity, there is a reason why public education along with welfare programs are called upon to sacrifice first.

The people who run our society feel that public education has gotten out of hand. The institutions of the United States allow only certain job opportunities. for stability, the populace, must be educated to have precisely the skills necessary to fill those jobs, no more and no less. Were people 'over-educated' work expectations would be too high causing a disenchantment threatening society's reproduction. Were people 'undereducated', they couldn't do the jobs society has alloted them. Within this framework it's clear that the elite schools are supposed to turn out society's leaders, while the state and public colleges and highschools are supposed to generate the work force. UMass is not supposed to fully educate us; it is supposed to socialize us to fill slots already waiting outside.

But a problem has arisen in this tracking process. As shoddy as the teaching, course content, and educational facilities here are, they are already better than we supposedly 'need'. There is an imbalance between the amount of education we now receive much less would really like and the amount society wishes us to have. The present state plan is to cutback, to make working class public institutions into highschools with ashtrays and beer, thus avoiding the problems of so-called 'over-education'. The problem we face is thus not just austerity but also the very nature of the lives we are supposed to lead, and thus the schooling allotted to our educational development.

Second, even with respect to austerity, the reason that economic problems lead to cuts here at UMass and is state welfare programs rather than in corporate profits, is because those who determine policy benefit that way. Our society is not yet composed of just one big happy family of people, each doing what they are capable of, and all justly enjoying the returns of that collective effort. Instead there are two basic movements. On the one hand are those who have little or no control over their day-to-day lives, and who must sell their labor and dignity. And on the other side there are those who own or run the country's major industrial and political institutions: the "ruling class". This ruling class acts in the halls of congress, General Motors, and even academia to pursue its own interests. They benefit from the oppression we all feel. When someone must lose they ensure that it's the poor and already disenfranchised. The ruling class, to reproduce the system in which they are dominant invariably creates policies constraining and taking from all of society's other peoples.

So how can we make our situation any better? To answer is not easy. Society's deck is quite steeply stacked. Those who wish to maintain things as they are, run the courts and cops, make the laws, and own and control the economy. Still they are not all-powerful. In the short run people can organize together and raise political costs for force positive changes. As just the most recent large scale example, the anti-war movement of the sixties and early seventies raised the social cost of the war here at home and in the army itself causing the withdrawal of troops from Cambodia, the cessation of bombing in the north and eventually the withdrawal of all active U.S. military units. Political activity is thus not futile at all. The anti-war movement despite its immense weaknesses and its arrogance helped to save literally hundreds of thousands of human lives. If we can make the cost to rulers of cutbacks greater than the benefits to them, they will change their policy plans here too.

In the long run those who here in the United States are denied by the system the opportunity to lead the most dignified and productive fulfilled lives they can, will organize together, develop new ways of thinking, acting, and organizing life, and then struggle to first win societal power and to then reconstruct all our institutions and values so that society is organized to serve the human needs of the whole population rather than just the false greedy needs of one small class.

But what the hell does all this have to do with a strike here? Well it depends on how deeply we ask questions and face our feelings about what's going on around us. Firstly, the above arguments tell us that the state will reverse its policy stands only if we force it to by raising social costs they can't tolerate. One way to do this is by organizing ourselves and striking, thus providing a disruption here and a very powerful model to our parents and to people throughout the state about how they too might confront their worsening situations, all the more so if we have teach-ins to advance our own knowledge, and go out into the community and establish contact with other off-campus groups and people who might side with us and also like our support in turn. Further the argument tells us that working together now to win improvements in our educational life is part of a broader struggle that also entails winning changes in the basic work roles our society offers its citizenry. We are not isolated but are in solidarity with all those people who would like to create a situation in which they have control over their own lives and always face a set of social institutions that foster their complete freedom and development. Vote yes to strike for what it means now and in the future. Work on teach-ins and other organizing projects to make the whole struggle an ongoing success.

The Man: Peter Lewicke
The Position: S.G.A. President (Your Fuhrer)
The Place: UMass
The Time: Now.
The Task: Vote.

For too long have the student politicians on this campus done rather good impersonations of Dicky Nixon, in the quest for political power. Student Power has always been co-opted by these Junior Whitmore types, who prefer backroom political dealing rather than accurately reflecting the populace. Personal ambition has always been the highest common denominator among these ego addicts. The will of the students has had to be interpreted by the few. Even the election of the S.G.A. President tonight won't be in your hands, but in the hands of the Student Senate and Area Government heads, in a closed election. They don't trust you with a popular vote.

But now, the time has come for an alternative candidate. In the best traditions of Henry Ragin (who is the campaign manager), Peter Lewicke has deigned to give us a choice. Running on the Anarchist Ticket, Lewicke pledges if elected to abolish the Student Government Association, and turn the Senate Chambers into an Opium Den (an old Ragin ploy).

"Students have taken themselves seriously for too long" goes the eternal Raginism. Its time people stopped thinking of themselves in messianic terms and started having a good time."

I was fortunate enough to speak with the Candidate this past week. Surrounded by his staff and campaign election machinery, he appeared dapper though seemingly in a state of suspended rigormortis. Constantly leering and snickering through his pallor stricken eyes, he agreed to answer our questions in the best traditions of American election journalism.

Z.N.: "Why are you running?"

Lewicke: "That's an excellent question." and the candidate quickly broke into an hysterical cackle.

Z.N.: "No really?"

Lewicke: "It's because the Control Addicts, to borrow from William S. Burrows, are running. They want to control everything and have to be stopped."

Z.N.: "What are your campaign pledges?"

Lewicke: "1. Get rid of the S.G.A.

2. Improve the education at this school. As it stands now its worthless. It takes away from what we already know. It gives people shit. The Education here is even more vile than the Catholic Church."

Z.N.: "What do you think of the non popular election of the S.G.A. President and what effect does this have on your chances?"

Lewicke: "I feel raped cheated and screwed by this method of election those pigs over there dreamed up. I'd say my chances are between two and five percent, but my staff is more pessimistic. They think they're about nil."

Z.N.: "Are you preparing any tricks or gimmicks on election night?" (TONIGHT)

Lewicke: "No gimmicks. Just spontaneous insanity. Its up to Pierpont to show up themselves. In my speech, I'm going to promise to hit the road as a hobo, whether I'm elected or not. If elected those checks'll come in handy."

Z.N.: "Yes Parting shots?"

Lewicke: "Yes. To be rightside up in an upside down world, you have to be upside down with respect to the world."

Thieves like us (TOC doesn't)

TOC welcomes a boycott!

In answer to the Collegian's article, "Boycott the TOC," I can only say, "I wish you would." As a waitress at the TOC, I would like to take the chance to defend the waitresses whom you seem to take such joy in molesting. You obviously don't enjoy our service and to be perfectly blunt, we don't enjoy serving you, although we always do because of a few people on your staff who act normal and make our time worthwhile.

The incidents which you so falsely described also need to be defended. The pitcher deposit incident was as funny and far from the truth as your April Fool's issue. The group demanded a pitcher after 12:00 when no pitchers are to be served. Due to the few civilized members in the group, the bartender was nice enough to give one out, somewhat hesitantly, as the group was already loud, obnoxious, and had already given me grief about the quality of the beer they were drinking. Earlier in the evening, I had cheerfully taken back a pitcher and replaced it with a full one since the group had decided that the beer was flat [after drinking over half the pitcher].

When the last pitcher was delivered, after 12:00, a member of the group asked that I take the other pitcher back and deduct the dollar deposit from the price of the pitcher they were now receiving, which I did. At the end of the night, when the one pitcher was returned, we gave a one dollar deposit back. Several minutes later, a member of the group returned with another pitcher which he had plainly stolen from another table, thinking that he was pulling a real "fast one" on us. Unfortunately, "thief," you were seen taking it.

As a journalist, E. Patrick McQuaid, I suggest that you begin sticking to the facts when you write articles such as "Boycott the TOC." The literary world has no openings for those who distort facts nor does it take kindly to thieves!

Locked minds

Let me reply to Ms. Ericson's letter to the editor of April 15th, regarding the assignment of commuter lockers.

First of all, commuter students were notified by campus media that lockers were available for the '75 semester; second, lockers were not assigned until the beginning of the semester; third, since we have a limited number of lockers [200], we felt that it would be helpful if people doubled-up so as to make the locker use available to more people. This was done on a voluntary basis.

Ms. Ericson came storming into the commuter lounge last January, belligerent and mildly irrational, demanding a locker. We have one paid staff person and we have not assigned lockers to our friends [the proof is contained in the locker assignment roster]. To alleviate the shortage, the assembly has ordered 144 new lockers for the lounge area.

We never asked Ms. Ericson to wait until next semester [or anytime] to complain through the Collegian of the locker policy. Why did she wait so long?

I would say that Ms. Ericson's problems stems not from our locker policy, but from her irrational attitude and fantasizing imagination.

John O'Keefe, president
Commuter Assembly

WMUA commentators lack quality

As an avid WMUA listener, it is distressing to me that an FCC accredited staff hosts an array of such mediocre commentators. I have always been greatly impressed with the quality material and its preparation which constitutes the bulk of WMUA broadcasting. However, I am forced to question the lack of quality presentation of this material.

It is distracting to the listeners when the offering of interesting and well-organized material is repeatedly impaired by inept speakers. This letter is meant to be constructive, and in that light, it seems to me that the station would benefit by increasing the rigidity of their standards. Seeing that persons are forbidden by law to operate broadcasting equipment without first meeting the extremely strict regulations set by the FCC, doesn't it follow that equal attention be paid to the final rhetorical product?

It is a credit to the station when gifted speakers such as Rina Miller and Ken Werther enhance the airways with their flair for verbal professionalism. How much more enjoyable and entertaining it would be if all members of the communicating staff approached this same level of superiority.

WMUA has been successful in so many areas of informative and creative programming, that it seems a shame not to pursue that finishing touch which launches an average radio station into the realm of subtle perfection.

Press pressure

I am a journalism major here at the university, and read the paper daily cover to cover. From time to time, I find examples of very good journalism, and from time to time examples of the very worst in journalism.

I am not a firm believer in the concept of objectivity. I know that I have opinions and that these enter into my news work. (I am a newsperson at WMUA.) However, I still strongly object to participatory journalism. I do not feel that a reporter should be a major part of the news he's covering, save the part he takes by being a reporter.

At the Collegian, I have seen a few cases of this, and these cases are when I feel you are at your worse. First is the case of Bill Densmore. The article he wrote for Monday's Collegian sucked journalistically, but more than that, it shouldn't have even been written by him. He is a participant in the school of ed fiasco by means of his suit. He has ceased to be a "step back" from the story.

The second case of this appeared in today's [Wednesday, 4-16] Collegian. Ellen Gavin is highly involved in politics. While she does not actually cover [to my knowledge] stories about things she's directly involved in, the area of her involvement borders on the things she does report on.

A third case might be Donna Fusco, who seems to write an excellent news story, but, as I recall, was elected to a position in the town government. In my twisted judgement, this removes her from the "step back" position of the journalist.

If this [participatory journalism] is the path the Collegian has consciously chosen, then I raise my voice in criticism. If it is the course of events that has created the situation, then I recommend you to re-evaluate your position and staff on the matter.

Harry L. Lee

En guard, PNS!

We the undersigned protest the letter concerning Village Park Apartments in the April 15th Collegian. We feel that the reporter of the "progressive" News Service completely misrepresented the situation at Village Park. We ask that reporter to come to Village Park and get a more complete view of the conditions here.

The manager and the maintenance men enthusiastically give a great deal of their time and energy, [over and above what is required by their jobs] to the people, and especially the children, here. If the tenants devoted anywhere near that amount of energy to Village Park, it would be a truely exceptional place to live in.

As it stands now we challenge the reporter to find an apartment complex with a better atmosphere in which to bring up children.

Administration ★ reacts

A formal statement from the Chancellor on the list of demands is expected Wednesday.

Gage in his meeting with the negotiating team criticized the "take it or leave it" attitude of the list: "Different students support different demands, but you make them accept the whole package."

Gage asked the group to point out exactly where changed should be made in the University budget.

Ellen Gavin, a member of the negotiating team, said: "Our priorities are two-fold: one, we don't want any cutbacks, and two, when the funds appropriated by the legislature reach the University, we want to see what the money is used for."

But if cuts were to be made, Gavin personally felt they should be made on the side of the University administration. "All we're asking" she said, "is that the administration take a share of the cut."

Gage explained a 6 percent rollback in salaries would not raise enough money to cover the Governor's proposed cutbacks. Furthermore, a cut in professional salaries would involve the breaking of contracts, which could have severe legal implications for the University.

Miguel Rivera of the negotiating team asked: "Is that why the administration doesn't want a student union, because it would then have to make and keep contracts with students also?" Rivera seriously questioned the administration's "distrust in the ability of students to act through a union."

Gage replied: "Basically I understand and support your idea, but the laws of the land require unions to perform in certain ways. Who will give us the guarantee that a student union can really speak for all students?"

Rivera admitted he didn't expect all students to go along, but stressed that the student body as a whole had its specific needs, which should be taken to the administration by one collective group.

Gavin noted the passing of the student union enabling policy by the Board of Trustees would be an "important first step. "All we want" she said, "is an opportunity to try. We can't see how a union will work until we set it up."

Gavin was concerned about the administration's refusal to let students look into the alternative budget proposals, which have been made up to incorporate cuts of 2, 6, and 10 percent.

In conclusion Gage said: "I have to defend the University's stand on issues. I have my own personal opinions, but what I would like to see often differs with reality."

Rivera emphasized: "That exactly is our problem too."

★Thieu resigns

"The Americans promised us — we trusted them," he said. Thieu singled out Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. "I never thought a man like Mr. Kissinger would deliver our people to such a disastrous fate," he said.

In Paris, the Viet Cong greeted Thieu's resignation with a warning there will be peace only if the Americans promptly withdraw all their military personnel and all members of Thieu's "clique" are removed from power.

Thieu's resignation — 54 days short of 10 years as president — came at 8:40 p.m. At that moment, Viet Cong and North Vietnamese forces held 75 per cent of the country and 21 of its 44 provinces, and had 150,000 men with tanks, rockets and artillery poised on three sides of Saigon itself — some within 20 miles of the capital.

In Washington, the general view was that the Thieu resignation was too late to do any good.

Thieu said in his televised resignation speech that because of a lack of U.S. help, South Vietnam was not strong enough to withstand the North Vietnamese—Viet Cong offensive that began in early March and has swept up three-fourths of the country.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said the United States was notified in advance of Thieu's resignation and would be sympathetic to any request Thieu made to take refuge in the United States.

There was no immediate comment on Thieu's charges that the United States was responsible for the military debacle.

Thieu said that, as provided in the constitution, he would be replaced by 71-year-old Vice President Tran Van Huong. Huong, nearly blind and crippled, called for the South Vietnamese people to unite "because we will die if we do otherwise."

There was speculation that other leaders might emerge soon in an effort to bring about negotiations for an end to 15 years of bloody warfare. The Viet Cong delegation in Paris called for a total U.S. withdrawal from South Vietnam, the ouster of the "Thieu clique" and the establishment of a government of national concord in Saigon. The French government issued an urgent call for talks to begin between the South Vietnamese and the Viet Cong.

Thieu said he believed the Huong government will "take its briefcase to the negotiating table," but he did not give details of how such a move might be carried out.

Ed focus on topics

Focus on topics, School of Ed programs and sport today, will be devoted mostly to the investigation of four crucial contemporary topics in education: 1) 766 and its Impact in Massachusetts, 2) Constitutional Rights of Students, 3) Competency-based Certification: its implications for Massachusetts and 4) Sexism in Education.

Throughout the rest of the three days the School of Education Clusters will each highlight the developments in current education that are being fostered in their different programs.

To celebrate the end of hibernation we are offering a "Mini Marathon on Sports". We can shed our foggy winter minds and muscles in such interesting events as: "What the hell is a Gym class?"; Pound for pound you're as tough as he is"; "Chapter 766: where are the physical education teachers?"; "Running for Fun and Enjoyment"; "Aggression in Athletics"; and "How to use Sport to teach Math" — to mention a few.

★Faculty supports demands

statement was released.

"The Socialist Faculty Caucus strongly supports student demands to the Legislature and University Trustees for no budget cuts and no tuition hikes.

The bosses are trying to deal with their crisis by massive cuts in needed social services. We oppose this attempt to make working people and students pay for the breakdown in the bosses' system.

It's their crisis. Make them pay. Increase corporate taxes and other taxes on the wealthy.

We are for student control over their learning and living conditions. We are for an equal, critical, democratic and self-developmental education system to serve all the people of the Commonwealth.

To achieve a socialist educational system for Massachusetts, and to deal with the bosses' recurring economic crisis, requires public ownership of all the economy under workers and community control."

Vaudeville proceeds to renovate Academy

History repeats itself, one often hears, and hat is just what will happen this week when /audeville comes to Northampton.

As part of the massive fund-raising effort by the Trustees of the Academy of Music to renovate the theatre's stage and reopen the hall to live performances, Smith College will present a vaudeville show Wednesday at 8:00 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall. The program will consist of highlights from the extremely successful Centennial event, "Popular Music and Dance Through 100 Years," held last fall.

The show is in keeping with the Academy's rich history of theatrical and musical presentations. Show tunes and rhapsodies by such all-time greats as Rodgers and Hart, Cole Porter, and Ollman and Yellen will be heard. Sing-alongs will invite audience participation. Among the College talent are a celebrated "Glowworm" burlesque, a tantalizing tango team, and a group of jazz musicians calling themselves "Sophia's Moustache and Goatee."

All proceeds from the event will go to the Academy's renovation fund. The show is one of several local fund-raising efforts through which the trustees hope to raise $15,000. To help pay for the repairs the Northampton Bicentennial Commission, which is endorsing the project, will ask the state for a matching grant of $15,000.

The Academy of Music has been termed a "museum piece of American theatre." Built in 1890, it is the first city-owned theatre in the United States and the sixth-oldest still in use in the nation. Considered an engineering and artistic feat, recent appraisals are that the acoustics are "near perfect" and the building's interior, "unique." Two semi-circular leaded glass windows which separate the lobby and the foyer are said to be by Tiffany. "Token boxes" on either side of the stage are like those at the Ford Theatre in Washington, D.C. In addition, substantial stage and backstage space provide room for elaborate stage constructions and machinery.

In its first twenty-five years the Academy featured such stars as Sarah Bernhardt, Ethel Barrymore, George M. Cohan, and Dorothy and Lillian Gish. English repertory companies brought Shakespeare to its stage and Ireland's Dublin Players appeared here. Current New York successes were known to interrupt their runs to perform one-night stands at the Northampton theatre. The "new motion pictures" were first shown at the Academy in 1898.

By the 1920's events ranged from vaudeville shows to movies to community affairs. From 1927 until 1931 the Smith College Department of Music produced premier performances of several Baroque operas on the Academy stage. Regular use of the stage continued another forty years, although motion pictures became the Academy's primary entertainment form by the 1930's. Schools and civic groups also used the theatre for various activities before the stage was declared unsafe in 1972.

If sufficient funds are raised for stage renovation, local theatre and civic groups could use the hall for production.

Tickets for the production must be obtained in person and are available at the following locations: Smith College, Center for the Performing Arts (noon to 5:00 p.m. weekdays); Academy of Music box office (6:30-9:30 p.m. daily); and at the Northampton Bicentennial Office, Memorial Hall (9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.). Checks should be made payable to the Academy of Music Renovation Fund.

Continuing Ed aids vets

Help in obtaining benefits or answers to service-oriented questions is available to veterans through the Division of Continuing Education at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

Student workers from the Veteran's Affairs Office are available with information on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 5-7 p.m. in Room 100 Hills North. No appointment is necessary.

The service is primarily for Continuing Education students, but prospective students who cannot get to the Veteran's Affairs Office during the day are invited to drop in.

For further information or an evening appointment at a time other than the designated drop-in sessions, contact the Veteran's Affairs Office between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. at Whitmore Administration Building, 545-1346.

MassPIRG to release doctor directory

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) will release its "Consumers Directory of Doctors with Select Health Care Guides," today at Westfield State College, Westfield, Ma., Room 230 of the Student Union, from 12:30 — 2:00.

The directory lists fees, office hours, medical education, hospital affiliation and other pertinent facts about the practices of 150 primary care physicians in selected communities throughout the Bay State including all of Hampshire County, Chicopee, and seven communities in the Greater Boston area.

Blown up diagrams and maps excerpted from the directory will be displayed at the press conference and copies of it will be also available. In addition the significance of the directory for consumers and professionals will be analyzed, and MassPIRG's future plans for related projects will be discussed.

Dubois to lecture on 'The New China'

This evening Dr. Shirley Graham DuBois will offer the second lecture in this year's W.E.B. DuBois Lecture Series sponsored by the Department of Afro-American Studies. The lecture will be held at Hasbrouck 20 at 8 p.m., on the topic "The New China". Preceding the lecture will be a short color film of a visit to China made by W.E.B. DuBois and his wife in 1959. The film documents a tour begun in the spring of that year after the celebration of DuBois' 91st birthday in Peking. The Chinese made the film and it is a part of the W.E.B. DuBois collection donated to the University by Shirley DuBois.

Shirley DuBois has made five trips to China, during which she was English editor of the Afro-Asian Writers Journal in Peking in 1968. Her most recent visit was in the Fall of 1974, when she was invited by the Chinese government to participate in the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the Republic. A long time scholar on China, DuBois is currently completing a book on the role of women in Chinese society. The lecture is open to the entire University community.

Earth week films

The Coalition for Environmental Quality is celebrating Earth Week this year by presenting a series of environmentally-oriented films, a slide show, and a lecture. The group will also be sponsoring a table in the campus center concourse on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. This table will present articles on environmentally-related topics as well as petitions and information about the Earth Week activities.

Films will be shown continuously tomorrow and Wednesday in rooms 163-64 of the Campus Center from 11 a.m. to about 4 p.m. These films will include: "The Grand Canyon," "Oil! Spoil! Patterns in Pollution," "The Flooding River," "Tragedy of the Commons," "A Question of Values," and "Garbage."

The evening schedule of events is as follows:

Tonight: Rich McIntyre, a UMass graduate now working for the Dept. of Forests and Parks will present a slide show entitled "God, Man and Nature". This show will explore the relationship between Man, Nature and God in the Judeo-Christian heritage. 7:30 p.m., C.C. 163-64

Wednesday night: FILMS — 1. "A Sense of Wonder" — a two part film based on the writings of Rachel Carson.

2. "Animal War, Animal Peace" — a film dealing with methods animals use to handle aggression, with the focus that perhaps people can learn from them. 4:30 p.m., C.C. 163-64

Thursday: LECTURE — Prof. Jay Stryker speaking on, "Everything You Always Wanted to Know About Radiation" — 8 p.m. Thompson 102

All events are free and open to the public.

Women's health

The third session of the Women's Health Series, sponsored by the Division of Health Education of the University Health Services in cooperation with Everywoman's Center, is concerned with two very important aspects of women's health care - the pelvic and breast exams. This meeting will be held today, from 12 noon to 1 p.m., in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

What exactly is involved in a pelvic exam? How do we do breast self-examination? Ann Grose, a nurse practitioner and a member of the Health Education Staff, and Penny Falconer, Contraception Clinic nurse practitioner, will explain and answer questions about these health practices. Audio-visual materials, including the "Gynny" and "Betse" teaching models, will be utilized.

BHE scholarships

Renewal cards for 1975-76 BHE Scholarships will be available beginning Thursday. All students who had a BHE Scholarship during 1974-75 must sign a renewal card prior to May 1. The University will not replace scholarships for students who are eligible for a BHE award but fail to comply with the renewal requirements.

Renewal cards will be available at the Campus Assistance Center in the Campus Center on Thursday, and Friday, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. each day. After Friday, April 25, the cards will be available in the Financial Aid Office, 243 Whitmore, until Thursday, May 1. All cards not signed by May 1 will be returned to the BHE.

Small gathering of UMass tennis fans lounge on the hill beside the Boyden courts as netman Bill Karol prepares to return a lob.

Netmen surprised; Chiefs prevail 5-4

By PETER NALAK

A strong Springfield College tennis team surprised UMass Friday as the netmen lost another squeaker, 5-4.

Singles matches put UMass ahead 4-2, but Springfield swept all three doubles for their victory.

The third doubles duo of Abramoff and Kalan, whose last match victory clinched a 5-4 win over M.I.T. the day before, were unable to stage a repeat performance.

"Any 5-4 match you lose is tough to take," said Coach Kosakowski.

The netmen have dropped three previous matches this season by the same score.

With his own racquets out of service, first singles player Bill Karol picked up a spare from Marc Ouellet. It must have been the wrong racquet for the day as Karol lost 5-7, 0-6.

Chris Post, playing number two singles, squeaked by 7-5, 7-5 in a match marked by the screams of both players.

At third singles, Barnaby Kalan had his best comeback win of the year. Dropping the first set 1-6, Kalan fought back to a 6-4, 7-6 fourth point win for UMass.

Fourth singles went to Springfield when Kevin Garrahan was downed 4-6, 2-6.

Marc Ouellet, playing five, coasted to a 6-3, 6-0 victory without the need of any verbal explosions.

At sixth singles, Art Cloutier chalked up his first win this season. Starting at singles for only the second time, Cloutier came from behind twice to win two 7-5 sets.

The netmen's 4-2 lead crumbled as their doubles were beaten one after another.

First doubles, Karol and Garrahan, were off quickly, losing 4-6, 3-6.

Post and Ouellet had the noisiest match of the day as racquets, balls and curses were flying for most of their two sets. UMass racquets spent the most time in the air though, as second doubles fell 4-6, 3-6.

Third doubles went to three sets with the final set breaking the 4-4 tie between teams. Abramoff and Kalan ended up on the losing end, 4-6, 6-4, 4-6 and the match went to Springfield.

This week marks the netmen's final preparations for the Yankee Conference championships April 26.

The tennis team travels to Holy Cross tomorrow for their last match before the conference tournament.

Tennis coach Kosakowski learned Friday that Boston College varsity tennis players are striking against their coach.

As a result of the strike, the home match against B.C. scheduled for Monday, April 21, was cancelled.

Trackers capture BC Relays; defend college team title

By MIKE BERGER

The UMass Track Team displaying overall team depth captured the college team title at the Boston College Relays. UMass earned the title for the 2nd consecutive year with 55 points compared to runnerup Dartmouth-53, and Northeastern 40.

Coach Ken O'Brien was quite pleased with the meet noting that most of the meet was run under rainy, windy, and adverse conditions. Added to that, many of the UMass participants were competing under pain such as Pete Ryan, Mike Geraghty, and Bob Adamson. "It's great to see this team go out and perform as they did knowing, that individually they are hurting or that their fellow teammates were also in pain." O'Brien was quite pleased with the High Jump crew of Hughes, Kendall, and Harris which achieved 2nd place despite [illegible] loss of the still injured Joe Marte[illegible] Performing excellently in place of the injured Todd Holt and Jim Shea were Jim Golonka, Bobby Neale, and Kevin Hall. All of them turned in their best performances of the year in the javelin.

Additional personal bests were achieved by Eric Gudmond's 14 ft. (establishes school record) Pole Vault and Curt Stegerwald's 53.9 clocking in the 440 Intermediate Hurdles.

Also impressive showings were turned in by the mile relay and distance medley crews which ran their personal bests of 3:19.4 and 10.04. in very competitive and close races.

John McGrail's 5th place finish in the 3 mile was quite respectable considering the competition of AAU champ Art Dulong and New England reknown Mike O'Shea and Stetson Arnold both from Providence.

Notable accomplishments were turned in by Pete Ryan and Dan Grigus in the Decathlon. In the grueling 3 day affair, they competed in the 100, 440, 110 Intermediate Hurdles, 1500 meters, high jump, long jump pole vault, shot put, discus, and javelin. Their placings were based on the awarding of so many points opposed to someone who would receive 2000 pts for running 9:8. Ryan did just beat out Richard Baker of Bates by 185 pts.-6.221-5.036.

UMass summary of BC Relays

Here in capsule are the placings of the UMass participants of the 20 college attended track meet.

Decathlon — lst place — Pete Ryan; 5th place Dan Grigus.

6 mile — 1st place Randy Thomas; fifth place Bob Neil.

Long Jump — 1st place Ken Adamson. Bob Adamson; Toney Pendleton.

Triple Jump — 2nd place Bob Adamson. Peter Ryan; Mike Geraghty.

High jump — 2nd place Mark Hughes. Rusty Kendall; Ron Harris.

3 Mile Run — 5th place John McGrail.

480 Intermediate Shuttle Hurdles — 2nd place Pete Famulari. Curt Sterwald; Al Suprenant; Jeff Browne.

2 Mile Relay — 4th place Pete Bloom. Jim Hunt; Steve Ridge; Mike Hanson.

Distance Medley — 3rd place Harry Kelley. Bill Gillen; Chris Farmer, Steve Crimmin.

440 Intermediate Hurdles — 2nd place Curt Stegerwald

1 Mile Relay — 4th place Steve Crimmin. John Richards; Curt Stegerwald, Mark Healy.

Javelin — 3rd place Jim Golonka. Bobby Neil; Kevin Hall.

Pole Vault — 2nd place Eric Gudmond. Jim Gramolini; Ted Power.

Boston resident wins Marathon

BOSTON [UPI] — Will Rodgers, of Boston, who began road running after his motorcycle was stolen, Monday won the 79th annual Boston Marathon in a record time of two hours, nine minutes and 55 seconds, the second fastest marathon ever run.

Rodgers' record time cut 35 seconds off the 1970 mark of England's Ron Hill, who finished fifth in 2:13:28 Monday in his first appearance here since his 2:10:30 performance five years ago.

Steve Hoag, a 28-year-old Minneapolis, Minn., schoolteacher, finished second, 1:59 behind Rogers, a Boston College graduate student.

Tom Fleming of the New York Athletic Club, runnerup the past two years, was third in 2:12:05. Tom Howard of Vancouver, B.C., was fourth in 2:13:23.

Rogers' time has only been bettered by Tim Clayton of Australia, who clocked 2:08.33.6 over a flat Belgium course in 1969. Official world records, however, are not kept for marathon running because the terrain varies from course to course.

The 27-year-old Rodgers outdistanced a field of 2,362 other starters under sunny skies with a 25 mph tailwind in his record romp of the 26-miles, 385-yards from Hopkinton, Mass., to the heart of downtown Boston.

Liane Winter, a 32-year-old West German accountant, set a woman's record of 2:42:33. Her time was nine minutes faster than any marathon she has run, and 4:38 ahead of Michiko Gorman's 1974 pace.

Rodgers, who works with retarded children, was a middle distance runner while an undergraduate at Wesleyan University, where he roomed with the 1968 Boston Marathon Winner Amby Burfoot. After running a sub-nine minute two mile race in 1970, Rodgers quit running in favor of a new motorcycle.

On a half-pack of cigarettes a day, Rodgers fell out of shape and was "beaten by a 60-year-old man" in a YMCA race. His motorcycle was stolen and he joined the greater Boston Track Club to start three years of intensive comeback training.

American Bernard Allan led at the first checkpoint, but by the second Rodgers, Jerome Drayton of Canada and Mexico's Mario Cuevas had moved into a three-way battle for the lead. Rodgers took command for good 10.4 miles onto the course.

Rodgers opened a 200 yard lead at the 15 mile point and held it over "Heartbreak Hill," in suburban Newton where he had faltered in his previous two outings.

"My legs were really tight as heck. They tightened on me over those hills and I thought I wasn't going to make it," said Rodgers, who dropped from fourth to 14th on the series of hills in 1974. In his first Boston Marathon in 1973, Rodgers suffered leg cramps on the same hills, and dropped out after 21 miles.

"I thought I was totally wiped out — an instant replay of last year. I just wanted to finish it, and was hoping I could hold on. I didn't remember when they got loose again," he said of his weary legs.

Lee battered about; Yanks assault, 12-1

BOSTON [AP] — Roy White kept up his solid hitting since returning to the lineup last week and Pat Dobson found his winning form for the first time this season Monday as the New York Yankees battered old nemesis Bill Lee en route to a 12-1 rout of the Boston Red Sox.

White went 4-for-4 with a home run, a double, and two singles, scored four runs and drove in two. The perfect day capped a torrid streak for the switch-hitting veterans since his return from a hand injury which sidelined him for the first week of the season. He now has 10 hits in 19 times at bat for a .5266 average.

White's hot hitting triggered a New York 16-hit assault, including a pair of big early innings against Lee, who entered the game with a 9-2 lifetime record against New York. Yankee Coach Elston Howard doesn't think that's any coincidence.

"When he's in the lineup, our whole club just seems to move," the former catching said. "He gets on base, he steals, he just makes it a whole different offense."

Equally enouraging to the Yankees was the six-hit, route-going performance of Dobson, a 19-game winner last year, who had been knocked out in his first two 1975 starts.

The veteran right-hander gave up only an infield single in the first seven innings before weakening.

"He had an exceptional motion today," Manager Bill Virdon said. "When he's got that herky-jerky motion going right, it gets the hitters off balance and he's very tough to hit."

White's leadoff double got the Yankees started on a four-run first inning. He had a run-scoring single in the midst of a six-run fourth, walked in the sixth and eventually scored on Bobby Bonds' sacrifice fly, then slugged his first homer of the season to close the Yankees scoring in the eighth.

Rose begs off

CINCINNATI [UPI] — Cincinnati Reds' outfielder Pete Rose, fed up with Los Angeles Dodgers fans throwing things at him, has asked manager Sparky Anderson not to play him in Los Angeles.

Anderson, however, refused to go along with Rose's request.

"The next time we're in Los Angeles, play someone else instead of me," Rose asked Anderson after last week's four-game series in L.A.

GS's Wilkes NBA's best

NEW YORK [UPI] — Keith Wilkes of the Golden State Warriors, the minister's son with the silky smooth style of a cat burglar, Monday was named Rookie of the Year in the National Basketball Association and thus emerged from the giant shadow of Bill Walton which had enveloped him since their collegiate days at UCLA.

The 6-foot 6 ½ forward, who played a prominent role in helping the Warriors to their first Pacific Division title since 1967, outpointed John Drew of Atlanta and Scott Wedman of Kansas City-Omaha in the 23rd balloting of writers and broadcasters in the 18 franchise cities. With each member city receiving one full vote, Wilkes finished with 7.621 points while Drew received 5.111 and Wedman 3.768.

Leonard Gray of Seattle, a husky forward who helped the Supersonics make the playoffs for the first time, had 1.167 points and center Mike Sojourner of Atlanta had 0.333 points.

Crewwomen fight winds, top BU, Connecticut College

By TERESA HANAFIN

The sun broke through the overcast clouds on the Charles River early Sunday, perhaps predicting better things to come for Women's Crew. Sure enough, the team, still in the shadow of last week's loss to Radcliffe, broke away from a tough B.U. squad at the halfway mark to win by half a length. Connecticut College finished third, several lengths behind.

Strong gusts created a crosswind on the river which not only cancelled out the JV race, but also made a smooth start for the varsity impossible. It delayed the race an hour.

The race course was changed at the last minute to facilitate rowing in light of the wind.

It did little good, however, as the persistent crosswind caused false starts, one a near collision between UMass and BU.

Because of difficulty in holding the boat steady, UMass was down half a length at the start of the race.

But strong, persistent rowing saw the women catch up to and surpass BU.

"Under such trying conditions, inexperience can hurt you," commented Coach Bob Spousta. "BU had more experience. But we hung in there, rowed well, and won."

Spousta was very happy with the result of the race. What really impressed him was all the supporters who came out to cheer for the club. "I was very pleased that so many people were there," he enthused. "A lot of parents, friends, and other UMass rowers showed up. It was great." Next week brings another tough opponent, as UMass will race three boats against Dartmouth — Varsity, JV and Beginning.

AT THE CATCH — In keeping with tradition coxswain Nancy Thomkins was tossed into the chilly Charles...Joanne Andreas has rowed in races and practiced for the past two weeks with a pulled hamstring and will get a well-deserved rest...In an impromptu election, Ann Aronson was chosen secretary-treasurer for the team. Her first duty, by the way, was to collect $2.00 from each rower as gas money for the team's trips to Boston...

Doubleheader split caps JV weekend

By CHAS O'CONNOR

The junior varsity baseball team gained a split of two games played yesterday against UConn in Storrs, completing a weekend in which they won three of four games.

Tom Ferris hurled the first game for the Minutemen yesterday, bowing in a 4-0 Huskie victory. UMass gained a split courtesy of a shutout performance by Gordon Smith, his first decision of the year.

Smith's effort was dynamite, according to head coach Jeff McKay. "He threw about one hundred pitches, and most all of them were below the belt", said McKay. Smith issued no walks in the 1-0 game.

UMass scored its run in the first as Dennis Bannon singled, moved to second on a single by Al Lopriore and scored on a single to right by Mike McLaughlin.

McLaughlin, seeing most of his action as designated hitter, has been making himself known at the plate. "He's really been swinging the bat well," said McKay.

Saturday morning's game with New Britain (Ct.) High School was adjourned after three and one half innings because of rain. UMass held a 9-1 lead at the time.

The Minutemen took two games from Springfield College on Friday afternoon by 4-2, 8-6 scores.

Tom Nigro pitched the win in the first game, running his personal record to 2-0. Chris Kirby also ran his record to 2-0 in the second game, with the winning RBI going to Charlie Johnson.

Al Lopriore and Kevin Finnucane homered in Friday's doubleheader.

The JV's record now stands at 7-1. According to McKay, though, there is a lot more to playing baseball games than winning them. "We are coming together as a team now, which I feel is important. There is a lot more to this team than a 7-1 record."

MINI MITTS: .... two JV ballplayers are currently nursing ailments. They are Art Weinslaw (pulled hamstring) and John Kearney (injured knee) .... Tom Nigro and Chris Kirby are slated to pitch today's home doubleheader against Dartmouth .... Coach McKay hopes to add another game to the schedule, possibly a make-up of last Wednesday's 1-1 tie against AIC .... Speaking of McKay, he will give a talk at nine this morning for the School of Education Marathon. The talk is entitled "Democratic Athletics."

NBA to meet over Erving

NEW YORK [UPI] — The National Basketball Association announced Monday that a Board of Governors meeting will be held in Chicago Friday to hear a complaint from the Milwaukee Bucks over a Julius Erving situation.

On the Erving matter, which dates back several years, Milwaukee is seeking some type of compensation from the Atlanta Hawks for its original dealing with the super marksman of the New York Nets.

Atlanta at one point signed Erving, but Milwaukee claimed it had the NBA rights to Dr. J. and the owners sided withthe Bucks in 1972.

The Hawks allegedly were involved in some kind of complicated transaction that finally allowed the Nets to get Erving from the Virginia Squires.

Fast break is key if Celtics to win

HOUSTON (UPI) — The fast break, Boston Celtic forward Paul Silas says, is the key to his team's rebounding in the fourth game of a best-of-seven NBA playoff series against the Houston Rockets Tuesday night.

Boston won the first two games in a dead run, but lost game three Saturday when slowed down and forced to set up its offense from a pattern.

"We have to kick the ball out and get the fast break started," Silas said. "But when the Rockets are shooting as well as they have, it's very difficult."

Houston, en route to a 50 per cent shooting day Saturday, hit many crucial shots from the 20-to-30-foot range, and because of that, Silas rates Boston a good chance to win game four before a sellout crowd at Hofheinz Pavillion.

"We like to play a perimeter shooting team, but when they are hitting, it disrupts our game because we can't put a lot of offensive pressure on. We have to take the ball down and set up," he said.

The 6-7 Silas, the NBA's leading rebounding forward, and 6-9 center Dave Cowens are the primary catalysts in igniting the Boston running game, but neither had a good game Saturday.

The pair scored 14 points between them. Scoring, however, was not what bothered Silas.

"We have to rebound and play better defense," he said.

The Rockets, inspired in front of the home folks and unbeaten at Hofheinz in three playoff games, hope to get the same 20-plus scoring from guards Calvin Murphy and Mike Newlin.

Silas admitted the crowd was a big factor.

"We didn't control the game," he said. "Houston controlled the tempo of the game. Of course, they shot extremely well. We knew that Mike Newlin would come out shooting. He did."

The Celtics also want to lower the number of fouls which got them into deep trouble in the final period Saturday.

Cowens got three quick fouls in less than two minutes and had to leave the game as did forwards Don Nelson and Don Chaney. Their coach, Tom Heinsohn, questioned the referees' decision to call 19 fouls against Boston in the first half and only six against Houston.

The fifth game of the series will be played in Boston Thursday night. A sixth game, necessary if Houston wins either Tuesday or Thursday, would be back in Houston.

Crew suffers rude weekend

By BOB NORTON

Paddling upstream on the Charles, under the B.U. bridge, and back to the Harvard boathouse, you look up and see where some crew enthusiasts had inscribed "rude and smooth" over a crimson H. The Crimson were rude hosts this weekend as they swept up every race and successfully defended the Stein Cup.

Harvard raced, seemingly undaunted by the high winds and white capped waters, and finished the torrid 2000 meter course in 6:53, Brown in 7:01, and UMass a distant 7:18.

"I was pleased with the quantity of effort," began UMass Coach Bill Mahoney. "We rowed a little high (a high number of strokes per minute) for the conditions but we responded fairly well to the bad water and pressure of the race."

In realizing that Harvard is the class of its division, Mahoney added that "We haven't progressed as far by this time as I would have liked — we haven't even approached our capabilities. We're a bit rushed and uncontrolled at the catch (where the oar enters the water). Our strokes need to be lengthened."

In the J.V. and freshman heavyweight eight events the results were pretty much the same. "The J.V. moved well," said Mahoney, "but caught a crab (an oar caught in the water) in the second 500' that spelled their doom. They finished in 7:08.5 behind Harvard, 6:42.2, and Brown, 7:01.3. "The freshmen had a good race," commented Mahoney. "They kept pressing all the way." The frosh fell short of their Harvard counterparts by two lengths in 7:05.3, but bested Brown by fifteen seconds and three and a half lengths.

Bike-a-thon

Commencing the 1975 Greek Week, Iota Gamma Upsilon is sponsoring a Bike-A-Thon with the proceeds going to Leukemia. The entire University is urged to participate in this exciting and worthwhile cause.

The date is Sunday, April 27 starting at 12 noon in Chequers parking lot, with the course running approximately 25 miles.

There will be refreshments at checkpoints, and a prize for the winner.

Sponsor sheets will be available at the Greek Affairs Office in Whitmore starting Tuesday the 25th. For more information call 256-6844 or 545-0082 and ask for Laurie, Diane or Carolyn.

Defensive play airtight

O'Brien - 2 goals, 7 assists

Gorillas do it to Eagles, 24-4

Staff Photo by Dennis Conlon

Boston College goalie watches helplessly as lacrosse ball propelled by UMass attackman Terry Keefe (32) sails into the BC net. The Gorillas walloped the Eagles by a 24-4 score.

By BEN CASWELL

Displaying an awesome offensive attack that in the words of assistant Boston College coach Steve Maloy made UMass look, "like the best team I've ever seen play lacrosse," Garber's Gorillas completely dominated the Eagles of Chestnut Hill yesterday on route to a 24-4 victory.

UMass bolted out to an 8-0 lead before Gorilla goaltender Bobby Durland was beaten. It seemed like Durland was acting out of sympathy for the Eagles as he made a save of a Boston College shot, then proceeded to drop the ball into his own net.

The game became more and more ludicrous as the UMass stickers built up a 14-1 halftime lead behind the scoring of Vinnie Lobello and Frank Garahan, who each had three goals in the first half. Lobello scored UMass' first two goals of the game.

One-handed scores (controlling the stick with one hand) were the in thing in the first half as UMass got three of them. Jeff Spooner got one on an unassisted play where he moved out from behind the cage, faked to the outside, then slipped inside a Boston College defender and scooped a backhand into the far side of the goalmouth. Ace Martin got the other two one-handed gems, one of them unassisted while holding off a close checking Eagle. The other came on a pretty drop pass from Billy O'Brien as Martin cut across the middle of the crease, took the pass, and then rifled a backhand shot past a, by this time, nearly insane Boston College goaltender.

Attackman Billy O'Brien continued his fine passing play yesterday as he accumulated seven assists, in addition to two goals of his own. O'Brien now leads the UMass squad in assists with 24, which combined with his eight goals puts him second in Gorilla scoring with 32 points. Jeff Spooner leads the Gorillas in scoring with 13 goals and 22 assists for 35 points. Spooner had two goals and three assists yesterday to keep his scoring average at five points per game.

Appropriate to it being Patriot's day yesterday the second half scoring began with a reinactment of the "shot heard round the world" as attackman Kevin Patterson had his own little bicentennial celebration. Patterson unloaded an underhand-wrist shot on the Boston College goal that almost ripped through the strings of the net.

The play that Patterson fired on was a set-up, man-advantage play for the Gorillas. The ball went in a circular passing motion around behind the cage before it came out to Patterson, who was open to wind up and fire. And fire he did as he notched the Gorillas' 15th goal.

Later in the game the giant Gorilla, Patterson uncorked another rocket shot which caromed off the cross bar of the B.C. cage and went all the way back to midfield (90 feet) in the air. The ball stayed intact but I thought I noticed a slight dent in the crossbar.

SCOOP SHOTS — UMass' record is now 5-2... Frank Garahan took over the goal scoring leadership for the Gorillas with his four scores. He now has 21 goals. Peter Connolly scored his 100th career point against B.C.... UMass' defense was again very tight and close-checking allowing the Eagles attack not a hell of alot of room to work with... Co-captain, defenseman Billy Blaustein— "everyone really played well today, I think it was a great team effort. Last year we were more attack oriented but this year the whole team is contributing." Gorilla coach Dick Garber was pleased with his teams' performance and said, "we played well and I'm surprised B.C. wasn't better. When we're playing well, we're tough though."... The Gorillas next game is versus Williams College in Williamstown this Saturday.

Batmen split doubleheader; win 22-1, lose 4-2 to UNH

By BOB HIGGINS

"Good pitching can make even a lousy team look great."

— UMass assistant baseball coach Phil Rollins

And that just about sums up Sunday's doubleheader between the UMass and University of New Hampshire baseball teams at Durham.

(The Minutemen, now 6-8 on the season, will have a chance to even their record when they face Dartmouth in a 1:00 doubleheader today at Earl Lorden Field.)

Rollins may not have been implying that UNH is a lousy baseball team. The Wildcats indicated that, as UMass made a joke of their pitching staff, Craig Allegrezza pitched a one-hitter (not a knock on UNH's offensive might), and the Minutemen laughed their way to a ridiculous 22-1 romp in game one.

In the second game, however, the Wildcats resembled the 1927 Yankees instead of the Humpty Dumpty Day School, as they squeezed out a 4-2 win. The difference, of course, was the UNH pitching.

The Minutemen had a field day circling the bases in game one, as they banged out seventeen hits, received eleven walks, and were helped out by eight UNH errors.

But UNH's Rich Gale turned that around in game two, scattering six Minuteman hits striking out eleven, and working his way out of some tough jams. "We had a couple of opportunities but couldn't score," said Rollins after the game. "Against a pitcher of Gale's caliber, you can't afford to do that." The 6'7" Gale, regarded as one of the top hurlers in New England, is expected to sign a professional contract after this season.

All of which overshadowed Allegrezza's third straight complete game victory. The junior right hander, in running his record to 3-1, gave up the sole UNH hit in the sixth to pitcher Tom White. The UNH run, which was unearned, came in the first when, with a man on, second baseman Mike Koperniak and rightfielder Mark Fontaine mixed up signals on a popup down the right field line, and UNH's Chris Daugherty raced around to score. Allegrezza, in dropping his ERA to a phenomenal 0.71, struck out nine and walked four, and has established himself as one of New England's top pitchers.

It's difficult to pinpoint individual hitting stars when a team scores 22 runs. For starters, you could try shortstop Jim Cullen. The little guy, a standout defensively all season, is starting to assert himself offensively. In game on Sunday he came up with five RBI's, including a sixth inning grand slam and four runs scored.

Collegian
sports

Or you could try first baseman John Seed, who drove in four runs and started the nonsense with a three-run homer in the second. Or big Jim Black, who went two for four and drove in four. Or designated hitter John Healy, who had three hits and two RBI's.

Game two was an extremely frustrating one for the Minutemen. Jeff Reardon, who started for UMass, had some control trouble at the start, but worked his way out of it with minimal damage.

UNH scored first in the second when, with two and a man on, Reardon suddenly lost it and walked three straight batters.

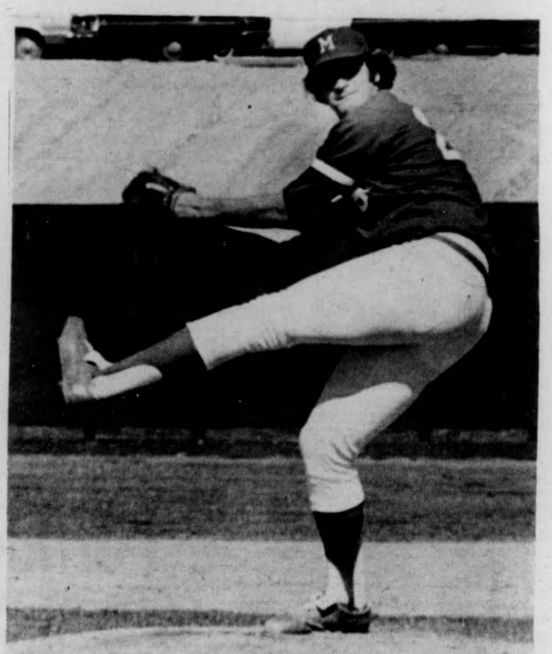
The Wildcats picked up another in the third on a walk, a single, and a sacrifice fly by first baseman Walt Benny.

UMass came up with their first run in the fourth when John Seed singled, and cleanup hitter Jerry Mondalto belted a Gale fastball off the left field fence to score Seed. The rally died, however, as Gale struck out Black, got Healy to ground out, and struck out Mark Fontaine.

UNH came up with the eventual game-winner in the sixth as Benny, who had reached on a fielder's choice, raced around to score on a triple by Tim Burker. The fourth run came in the seventh off reliever Rich Kelly when Nick Pappajohn reached on a Mondalto error, Don Micucci followed with a fielder's choice, followed by a wild pitch and a walk. With men on first and third, the runner on first broke for second and when Kelly moved to throw him out, he was called for a balk and the run was waved in.

The Minutemen's final run came in the eighth, and they almost came up with a few more. With one out Seed singled, Mondalto popped out, Black walked, and Healy singled in Seed. Coach Dick Bergquist sent up Allegrezza to pinch hit for Fontaine, who had struck out three times off Gale. But with the pressure on, Gale seemed to reach back for a little extra and blew a third strike past Allegrezza.

SCRATCH HITS ... Pete Backstrom, who entered the day hitting .417, went hitless in game two and had his hitting streak ended at 13 ... The Minutemen will be at home for a while now, with a doubleheader against Dartmouth today, a single game with Holy Cross tomorrow, and a Maine doubleheader Saturday ... The UNH games were scheduled for Saturday, but wet fields forced the team to stay overnight in beautiful Portsmouth, N.H.



UMass star hurler Craig Allegrezza has begun to prove himself as one of the best pitchers in New England. The Milford native currently has a 3-1 record and an incredible ERA of 0.71, after one-hitting UNH on Sunday, 22-1. The Minutemen will take on Dartmouth in a home doubleheader today at 1:00 on Earl Lorden Field.

Collegian reporter granted access to Ed records

By CHRIS DILLARD
MDC Staff

A Northampton Superior Court judge ordered UMass yesterday to release School of Education records to a Collegian reporter.

When contacted by telephone, President Robert C. Wood said "anything the court determines, the university will be in full compliance with." When asked if UMass would appeal the decision, Wood said he could not make a statement until he spoke with his legal counsel. statement until he spoke with his legal counsel.

Reporter William P. Densmore, Jr. has sought the records since March 3 under the state's "open documents" law which grants the public a right of access to public documents. This suit becomes one of several tests of that law since it was passed in 1973.

Densmore said he had been told by UMass Treasurer Kenneth W. Johnson that he could not examine the records because they had been subpoenaed by a federal grand jury. The grand jury is part of the U.S. attorney's investigation of the School of Education's alleged financial mismanagement.

Judge Raymond R. Cross ruled that if subpoenaed records have an "intrinsic value" to the seeker "that is unconnected with the grand jury's purposes," the seeker has the right of access to the records "so long as there is no interference with the work of the grand jury."

Cross also said that "were the documents impounded and not simply under subpoena, perhaps a different result would be required."

Wood added "I have been for some weeks trying to get access to the records myself." Wood has been seeking the records for the outside auditors, Cooper and Lybrand who were hired to investigate the School of Education's possible misuse of funds. Wood said he wanted to "let the sunlight in" so people could see and decide for themselves.

U.S. Attorney James N. Gabriel, a third party intervenor in the March 12 suit, had no comment yesterday.

In a six-page judgement, Cross said that since the records are still physically at UMass, UMass is still the "custodian", not the grand jury in Boston. UMass Attorney Sidney Myers had asked for dismissal of the suit on the grounds that the records were no longer in the custody of UMass.

Cross also rejected a UMass charge that he did not have jurisidiction over the records.

Cross noted in his findings that Densmore filed a request to view the records two days before the first of two subpoenas for them was issued.

The records sought by Densmore cover about $2.4 million in federal grant contracts with the School of Education. The FBI has said about $100,000 may have been mismanaged.

Densmore said "I am glad that Judge Cross understands a newspaper's reasons and justifications ... and appears to realize that it is not the intention of this reporter to conduct a trial by press."

Chairman refuses to sign statement

Trustee endorses budget demands

By CINDY ROGERS
MDC Staff

The chairman of the UMass trustee's Student Affairs Committee yesterday endorsed student "demands" against budget cuts and tuition hikes, but refused to sign a statement, because he said the full board must make such a decision at their meeting May 7.

Chairman Alan Shaler refused to endorse six other demands, including requests for recognization for a student union. He endorsed another demand calling for a complete statistical report on affirmative action policies and promised to "pursue" student claims that the Campus Center management has withheld public information.

As a result of the no-endorsements by Shaler and trustee Robert Abrams, also present at the meeting in the Campus Center, Student Action Committee (SAC) members said they would report to a town meeting tonight, the non-compliance with the demands.

Other administrative officials at the meeting, however, congratulated students on their interest in student affairs.

Shaler said he didn't think it necessary to get into discussion of the budget cuts and tuition demands. "I think everyone in the room is in support of that," he said.

Abrams, disagreeing, said, "Cuts are inevitable in this financial crunch. We must be realistic about this, we are not the wealthiest state. We all would like to have free education but we must face the realities."

Miguel Rivera of the negotiating team said he was not asking the trustees to make a decision on the budget cuts. "We are asking you to back our demands," he said.

Shaler refused to endorse the demand asking for no cutbakcs in special programs, and no increases in fees saying, "We cannot make any kind of specific endorsement at this time; maybe the full board can. Most of the items have nothing to do with this committee!"

He would not endorse the demand giving students full and equal participation in decisions concerning dorm living, board, campus parking and University day car.

He said, "It encompasses a great deal. It encompasses more than the specifics that I'm prepared to discuss."

Vice-Chancellor Robert W. Gage said the problem of day care centers lies in identifying the resources for a coordinator. "There is no plan to cut the program back, none whatsoever."

Shaler said he would not support recognization for a student union because of "legal constraints." Earlier in the meeting, he would not discuss the student union enabling policy for the same reasons. He said he would have the Trustees lawyer, William Searson review the policy.

In light of Shaler's support of the affirmative action plan, Roy Keith of UMass President Wood's Office said guidelines for affirmative action have already gone through the president and the trustees. UMass administrators have scheduled a press conference tomorrow in Boston to unveil a complete HEW approved affirmative plan for all three campuses.

The negotiating team asked for support in gaining access to public information and records regarding the Campus Center and other areas of campus.

Larry Magid, director of the Student Center of Educational Research (SCER) said "A number of students have been denied access to a great deal of information." He also said that "it is our policy not to give it out" is the rationale usually given.

Ellen Gavin, member of the team, said the Campus Center Board of Governors, an advisory board is consistently denied information from the Center's management.

Keith said, "How can an advisory board give advice without access to information."

Shaler said he would seek an explanation for this. "I can't

SGA presidential election ends in standoff

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

Student Government Association (SGA) presidential elections ended last night in a standoff between Craig Ghodotti and Tim O'Brien, as the assembly voted to recess after two hours of balloting.

The first ballot showed 21.4 votes for Ghodotti and 20.4 votes for O'Brien, while John O'Keefe, Cindy McGrath, Peter Lewicke, Molly Gray, and Bob Coven tallied 19.8, 16.4, 6.9, 1.2, and 1.2 respectively.

The vote to recess makes the first ballot valid. If the committee had voted to adjourn,,the entire election would have been void, and would have had to be rescheduled after a period of at least four weeks.

In the second ballot, between the top two vote getters, O'Keefe gained the second position with 26.4 "write-in" votes against 32.6 votes for O'Brien and 25.7 for Ghodotti.

The election went into the fourth ballot with no candidate receiving the majority of votes necessary for election.

Before the votes were counted, Senate member Steve Miller read a section from the SGA Constitution stating, "In the event that no candidate receives a majority of the 96 votes, the two candidates receiving the largest number of votes shall be the final two candidates. There shall be another ballot in which only those two candidates are eligible to run."

O'Keefe said he will challange this article in a court suit.

"This whole thing is a farce," he added. "Unless you're a political hack you don't have a chance in this closed group. These elections should be open to the people."

O'Keefe said he will also challenge the 9 votes out of 96 which the Commuter Assembly receives, even though they represent over half of the students.

"I will challenge them (SGA) in every way posiible," he continued. "They didn't even know the rules until tonight. After the first ballot, they said 'write-in' votes would count."

In the final ballot of the night no majority was obtained, as Ghodiotti received 36.1 votes to O'Brien's 31.1 , with the other voters abstaining.

The SGA will reconvene Thursday at 5 p.m. to further cast ballots.

Mandatory dorm policy decision

Rule will not affect students now off-campus

By LARRY KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

Students already living off-campus will not be affected by the new mandatory policy and as a result, only 100 to 200 more students will be living in the dorms, according to Director of Housing Bruce Cochrane.

An exemption board will be established and will "consider each case on its own merits," said Cochrane.

All students not in the exempted categories must go through a "special exemption process to get off campus," he said. All students going through this process "have to demonstrate some reason why they can't live on campus," he added.

Veterans, seniors, married students, students living in fraternities or sororities, and commuters living with their parents will not have to move into dorms next fall.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has set next January as a deadline for determining whether the dorms will be mandatory in fall 1976 said Cochrane. Vice Chancellor Robert Gage said he hopes to see juniors exempted from mandatory dorm living by January.

In the special exemption process, students must apply through their area director, but the actual decision will be made by a exemption board in the Office of Residential Life. If the exemptions board doesn't grant an exemption, students may go to an "appeals board."

However, the repeal of the over-twenty-one exemption must be passed by the Board of Trustees before it can go into effect.

Prospects encouraging for cable TV wiring at UMass

By BRIAN COYNE
Staff Reporter

The prospects for wiring the UMass campus for cable television within the coming year are "encouraging," according to August Lavelli, general manager of Pioneer Valley Cablevision (PVC)

Lavelli said yesterday there has only been one meeting about cable television on campus between PVC and UMass administrators and that there were many "unanswered questions", adding that "things have gone further this year than ever before."

Gerald Grady, director of community relations, said UMass administrators "are willing to listen to a proposal that will not cost the university any additional funds." Grady also said that officials were concerned that installation charges and monthly rates for cable services would be equal for customers in all areas of the campus.

Lavelli said he has tried to bring cable television on campus every year in the five years he has been with the company, but has been unsuccessful since the talks between PVC and UMass officials have always "broken down" in the preliminary stages.

Lavelli credited the involvement of the Amherst Cable Advisory Committee II, which is reviewing PVC's application for a license renewal in July, and the increased cooperation of Grady's office with the improved chances of cable television moving to campus.

Grady said PVC has offered to bring cable to the UMass campus in the past, but their offers have never been substantial enough for the administration to consider.

PVC would have to conduct a "thorough survey" of the UMass campus before making a concrete proposal, Lavelli said. "We will not be able to do this thing in a day or two; we would have to be able to anticipate income," he said.

PVC would prefer selling their services to dormitories on a bulk rate rather than on an individual contract basis, said Lavelli. He said the telephone company was finding it unprofitable to offer individual service to students, due to insufficient use of the phones and non-payment of bills.

The electrical conduit system would have to be examined before PVC could submit a proposal, said Lavelli. "If we had to rewire a building, that would be a horrible financial proposition," he said.

Grady's office sent PVC a map of the campus wiring system last week when Grady wrote to Lavelli offering assistance in submitting a proposal for cable services.

Beer, bands, boogie

Spring celebration sprung

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

Over 1,000 gallons of beer, six boogie bands, and yesterday's warm, sunny weather brought crowds of students to the Alumni Stadium in celebration of "Spring Day."

In addition to almost 100 kegs of beer, 3,000 hot dogs and 100 pounds of peanuts were consumed by the constantly changing crowd of about 2,500.

The event was sponsored by Beta Chi Fraternity and the Commuter Assembly. Beta Chi Treasurer Al Metzner called the day "a definite success," adding that 25 cents for 12 ounces of beer was "a real bargain."

"We could have sold more of everything if we'd had enough people to work," Metzner said. With eight kegs running constantly and 40 people working, it was reported that there was a large crowd around the beer table at all times.

Music for the afternoon was provided by six local bands, including an appearance by Sweet Pie. The Commuter Assembly paid $700 for the bands.

Beta Chi hopes that the proceeds from Spring Day will provide enough money to repay the Commuter Assembly.

"We just want to break even," said Metzner. He noted an improvement over last year's event when only 45 kegs of beer were sold. "this year is a great success by comparison," he said.

Selectmen oppose all 22 PCP warrant articles

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

The Amherst Board of Selectmen last night either opposed or dismissed all 22 Town Meeting warrant articles petitioned by Progressive Candidate pool Member Floyd Baily.

The board supported or referred to other committees the other 55 warrant articles with the exception of two articles petitioned by Alfred Boyajian and Carrie Gersham, another PCP member.

The Amherst Rent and Eviction Control, article 62, presented by Baily was opposed by the selectmen on the grounds that the administrative costs would be too cumbersome. Robert Garvey, member of the board of selectmen, said though he felt there would be a necessity for rent control, if UMass repealed its mandatory dormitory policy law, he "was not ready to digest article 62."

At the suggestion of Nancy Eddy, chairperson of the board of selectmen, the board agreed to refer to the landlord and tenant committee for their opinion and more information on the article.

Seven of the articles petitioned by Baily which concerns law enforcement was opposed by selectmen because they felt these decisions fell under the police's jurisdiction and they should not interfere. Some of these articles concerned the prohibition of "dum dum" bullets, revision of citation criteria, structuring police discretion policy and non-enforcement of victimless crimes such as co-habitation and use of marijuana for personal use.

Other Baily articles opposed by selectmen were; building bike paths and hitchhiking lanes, establishing a UMass-Amherst Committee, and revising town government procedures.

Boyajian's article which selectmen refused to support asks the Town Meeting members to vote for the town to elect town planning board.

Gersham's article requesting the establishment of an energy committee was rejected by selectmen because they said it would be a duplication of another established committee.

Articles on finances, traffic violation, consumerism, public transportation, sewage, and conservation were supported by the selectmen.

Selectmen delayed voting their position on building the JFK Library in Amherst and passage of the Zoning by-laws until they review

English Department faces possible professor cuts

Diane Ungar
Staff Reporter

As many as twelve professors from the UMass English Department face possible dismissal within the next year as the result of what appears to be an inadequate system of tenure selection.

A memo from English Professor Randall Current was distributed last week within the department. It cited grievances of "the untenured professor" and appealed for support "to save good people this year and in years to come."

According to Jeremiah Allen, dean of the School of Humanities and Fine Arts, there are four criteria on which tenure decisions are based: qulity of teaching, scholarship and creative work, service, and institutional need.

Allen said that no one criteria weighs more heavily than the others in the decision to grant tenure. Current, however, claimed "administrative indifference to the established excellence of teaching and scholarship in tenure decisions."

He also expressed dismay over "student ignorance" of the process of selection of their teachers.

Allen said most of the other departments at UMass have at least one student on their personnel commitees. The English Department Personnel Committee, presently headed by Joseph Frank, has none, the Collegian learned.

Faculty at UMass is appointed for a maximum of seven "untenured" years, according to Allen. The tenure decision is made in the sixth year, and tenure begins with the seven elected departmental members of the personnel committee. The committees recommendations go to the dean, who is advised by a selected faculty from the humanities and fine arts. The decision then moves on to the provost, chancellor and president until it reaches the Board of Trustees.

The Board of Trustess has final approval of all grants of tenure.

The present English Department has 107 full-time faculty. Allen described a fifteen-to-one ratio of students to faculty as "ideal" in that department. The department's ratio of students to faculty is currently less than twelve-to-one.

"All indications are that the faculty is presently too large," Allen said.

Allen noted a major problem involved in the selection process. "Teaching is very difficult to assess," he admitted. He referred to the inadequacy of the student evaluation form in documenting the teacher's work and abilities.

He called the forms "simple-minded" and pointed to the low rate of response on them. Allen said that well under 50 per cent in each English calss is all that responds on the questionnaire.

Of those returned, he noted the "phenomena of almost no negative assessments."

"If every professor gets "A's", that causes us to overlook teaching. In that way, scholarship has more impact on our decision, since it discriminates more than the others," Allen said.

Referring to the criteria of teaching, Frank expressed similar doubts.

"The thing I'm skeptical about is what do you do with the professor who gets high evaluations, but only 40 per cent of his class responded?" he said in a telephone interview yesterday.

Current suggested the English department mobilize support and act together against the administrative and budgetary pressures that are forcing "irrational tenure decisions upon us."

"If we are a single force unwilling to go on as normal some person will have to respond," Current said in the memo.

SAC lists Town Meeting proposals

By PROGRESSIVE NEWS SERVICE

The Student Action Committee (SAC) last night drew up proposals that will be submitted to the University Town Meeting tonight.

About 50 members of SAC voted on the proposals concerning opposition to proposed cuts in the University's budget for the next fiscal year.

However, SAC members said the proposals are not binding and that students at the Town Meeting will be encouraged to submit other proposals.

The following are the SAC proposals:

—Resolved that a 60 percent affirmative vote will be required for implementation of each referendum question.

—That there be a student strike during which we demonstrate our opposition to budget cutbacks and our support for the last town meeting's nine demands. During this time we will also engage in teach-ins in our living areas as well as in the Student Union and Campus Center, to educate ourselves and prepare for further unified actions; such as a demonstration at the State House on Wednesday, April 30 and preparation for a possible fee boycott.

—That there be a student strike during which we engage in educational workshops, and organize State House lobbying as well as fee boycotts, and that at the end of that strike period another town meeting be held to assess progress on our demands and decide further action.

—That the duration of a strike be determined at the town meeting.

—That there be a moratorium of classes held in order that students may confront Governor Dukakis when he comes to UMass on May 5th.

In other action, SAC members held meetings last night in over 30 dormitories and in the Greek areas in an effort to get more student input for the Town Meeting and tactics for the implementation of the demands.

About 2,200 students last week voted on a series of demands calling for no budget cuts and more student power.

In addition, the SAC say the are organizing workshops, teach-ins and other activities.

Students term BTSAC meeting successful

By JOE MAHONEY
Staff Reporter

The student negotiating team said yesterday that the outcome of the meeting with the Board of Trustees Student Affairs Committee (BTSAC) was "an initial victory for the students" and "a promising beginning".

Alan Shaler, chairperson of BTSAC declined to comment specifically on the nine demands presented by the negotiating team, in a telephone interview last night.

However, Shaler did say the demands were "interesting". He added that the negotiating team was "well prepared and well documented".

The student negotiators emphasized that "the trustees were confronted with the breakdown of the governance system."

"The trustees had been content to listen to the administration," said Kathy Tumba, communications coordinator for the negotiators. "When they had to deal with a lot of students saying the administration wasn't telling them what was really happening, they were much more responsive."

Shaler said that he "hopes to have further open dialogue" with the negotiators.

Shaler said that he has not yet contacted the University administration on the proceedings of the meeting.

400 demonstrators march against cuts

By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

An estimated 400 students gathered in front of Whitmore Administration Building yesterday to march to the Campus Center to demonstrate against the proposed budget cut and fee increases for UMass. Demonstrators were called to support the negotiating team, a student group organized last Friday, to a meeting of the Student Affairs Committee, a subcommittee of the UMass Board of Trustees.

Students marched to the Campus Center, yelling and chanting "Fight Budget cuts," and urged passing students to join the march.

Outside the Campus Center, student speakers again presented their demands of the Administration, and informed the students on the present situation of the strike, and actions planned for later this week. There were about 650 students assembled at Metawampe Lawn yesterday.

The activity was in preparation for a University Town Meeting tonight in the Student Union Ballroom.

Aircraft shortage hinders evacuation flights

Airlift moves 2,000 persons a day

SAIGON (UPI) — Americans and Vietnamese fled South Vietnam by the hundreds yesterday in the heaviest day of evacuation flights. But U.S. officials said a shortage of aircraft was hampering the around-the-clock airlift.

The airlift was moving out nearly 2,000 persons a day, and President Ford said in Washington the "barest minimum" of 1,500 Americans would be left in the country be last night.

But by nightfall, the staging area - a gymnasium and bowling alley at Saigon's Tan Son Nhut air base - was jammed with close to 1,000 Americans and Viitnamese. "We've got far more flights manifested than we have aircraft," said one U.S. official.

"These are people who have completed all necessary documentation and are just awaiting transport."

One source working with the evacuation program said there was a backlog of, about 50 full flights. However, officials would not confirm this.

Officials involved in the program estimated it would take until the end of the week or perhaps longer to clear all the evacuees unless more aircraft were made available.

More than 2,500 refugees landed at Clark Air Base in the Philippines by dusk Tuesday, and another 500 were expected on later flights, officials there said. More than 1,000 early evacuees already had left for the United States, and the Air Force estimated another 5,200 were housed at Clark.

Other Americans were leaving Saigon aboard regular commercial flights.

In Washington, the Senate Judiciary Committee Tuesday approved a request by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger to evacuate to the United States up to 130,000 Viitnamese and Cambodian refugees whose lives would be endangered by a Communist takeover. Under the proposal, they would be admitted quickly without red tape and procedural delay.

The evacuation of "Nonessential" U.S. Personnel was ordered by Ford in the face of a five-week Communist offensive that threatened Saigon itself. Yesterday, an estimated 150,000 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops were within striking range of the capital.

The "barest minimum" of 1,500 sought by Ford compared with the American population of about 8,000 in the country just a few weeks ago.

Ford indicated in a televised interview Monday that U.S. Marines might be needed to help evacuate Americans. But Sen. Clifford Case, R-N.J., said yesterday after a briefing by the President that he felt the pullout could be accomplished without major military intervention.

Communists attack major Viet air base

SAIGON (UPI) - Communist forces yesterday launched artillery and ground attacks against South Vietnam's major air base. In the capital itself 14 miles away, the nation's new president shopped for a prime minister to try to negotiate an end to the fighting.

In the wake of the resignation of President Nguyen Van Thieu, the shooting slackened somewhat. But Communist troops struck again at Bien, Hoa air base to the northeast, and Americans and Vietnamese fled the country by the hundreds in the heaviest day yet of the emergency evacuation.

Political sources said the new chief executive, Tran Van Huong, and U.S. Ambassador Graham Martin had tentatively agreed Tuesday to name Defense Minister Tran Man Don, a 58-year-old soldier-turned politician, to the post of prime minister as the man most likely to be able to work out a cease-fire.

Thieu's cabinet members formally turned in their resignations to Huong.

In Paris, a spokesman for the Viet Cong said there would be no negotiation with the Huong government even though Thieu has gone. Chief Viet Cong delegate Pham Van Ba said an entirely new administration would have to be set up and all U.S. military personnel pulled out of Vietnam before there could be peace.

With an estimated 150,000 Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops poised within striking distance of Saigon, an around-the-clock airlift was ferrying Americans out of the country in an attempt to reduce the total here to the "barest minimum" of 1,500 ordered by President Ford to handle U.S. interests.

U. S. officials said, however, the airlift was being hampered by a shortage of aircraft, and that the evacuation might take until the end of the week to complete.

Australia announced Monday it was closing its embassy in Saigon. A govenment source in Ottawa said Tuesday Canada likely would follow suit, and a foreign ministry official said in Kuala Lumpur that Malaysia was ready to evacuate its diplomats if the danger increased.

More fighting was reported on opposite sides of Saigon Tuesday, although it was light compared with the volume earlier in the five-week-old Communist offensive that has overrun three-fourths of South Vietnam and 21 of its 44 provinces.

Viet Cong and North Vietnamese gunners shelled the Bien Hoa air base with Russian-made 130mm artillery for the eighth day and tried to break through the base's defenses with ground troops. Government defenders managed to drive them back.

Vietnamese air force sources said a government C130 Hercules cargo plane converted to a bomber hit a small ammunition dump while trying to bomb Communist ground forces, setting off an explosion that rattled windows in downtown Saigon. The sources said the blast was touched off by a single 750-pound bomb.

Indochina developments

Panel rejects aid

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The House Armed Services Committee, one of its members contending the "chess game is over" in Indochina. yesterday rejected 21 to 17 President Ford's request for $722 million in military aid to South Viitnam.

The measure, which would have authorized $422 million in addition to the $300 million approved last year but never appropriated, was shoved aside on a motion by Rep. G.V. Montgomery, D-Miss.

A supporter of the military aid plan, Rep. Samuel Stratton, D-N.Y., argued that "unless there is some signal of support for South Vietnam, they are going to collapse, and the lives of Americans there are going to be in jeopardy."

The action came as debate on a contingency evacuation and humanitarian aid plan continued in the Senate, where Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield expressed concern about the high ratio of South Vietnamese to Americans being taken out of the country.

Pilots identified

TOKYO (AP) - North Vietnam yesterday announced the deaths of three American pilots who were listed as missing in action in Vietnam.

They were Maj. Jesse Taylor Jr., Maj. Crosley James Fitton and Ronald Dwight Perry. Their home towns were not given.

The announcedment was made by Hanoi's official Vietnam News Agency - VNA - in a broadcast monitored in Tokyo.

Laos fighting up

VIENTIANE (UPI) - The Laotian defense minister said yesterday heavy artillery fire drove government troops from an important junction on Highway 13 linking the twin capitals of Vientiane and Lauang Prabang. He said the main north-south road is now in Communist hands.

Laos is the third Indochinese country, with Cambodia and South Vietnam, to experience sudden Communist attacks this year. Fighting has been going on in the Highway 13 area for the past week.

Sishouk Na Champassak, a loyalist member of the coalition government headed by Prime Minister Prince Souvanna Phouma, said Laotian forces abandoned the junction at Sala Phou Koun, and 90 miles north of the administrative capital of Vientiane on Monday afternoon.

Army removes Honduran president

Ouster linked to US company bribe

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (UPI) — In an attempt to regain the "good name of Honduras," the armed forced yesterday ousted Gen. Oswaldo Lopez Arellano as chief of state following his refusal to talk about a $1.25 million banana bribe allegedly paid by the U.S. United Brands company.

Army Col. Juan Alberto Melgar Castro was installed as Lopez' successor in the bloodless coup, according to a proclamation read over the nation's radio stations.

The top-level switch in leadership could also signal a more conservative political approach by the military government, political sources said.

Melgar Castro had previously come under strong leftist criticism while commander of the north coast military zone — for refusing to permit demonstrations by groups demanding land reform and other measures favored by Lopez, they said.

Lopez' whereabouts were unknown. There were unconfirmed reports that he might have left the country for Nicaragua.

The proclamation said the coup was aimed at "restoring the good name of Honduras" in the wake of charges by United Brands it paid a $1.25 million bribe to Honduran government officials and agreed to pay another for the same amount to get banana export taxes reduced.

The military regime, which has controlled this Central American nation since a 1972 military coup led by Lopez, said it fully supported a special eight-man Honduran investigation of the bribery charges.

Brown students ignore budget referendum

PROVIDENCE (AP) — Faced with rejection of their budgetary demands, Brown University students turned out in light numbers yesterday to vote on a new course of action.

A referendum, the third within two weeks on the budget issue, asked if students were satisifed with the decision of a committee of the Brown Corp. to endorse an administration-backed austerity budget.

Students were then asked of they wanted to continue some form of protest against the budget which will reduce financial aid, student services and faculty positions.

Students at the Ivy League school boycotted classes for four days last week in opposition to the austerity measures.

Brown President Donald F. Hornig claimed the moves were needed to maintain the school's financial stability.

The corporation's Advisory and Executive Committee voted Saturday to recommend the budget's approval to the full corporation.

Chancellor Charles C. Tillinghast Jr. said Hornig's proposed budget "begins the absolutely necessary process of restoring financial stability to Brown University."

The influential A and E Committee also suggested task forces to study areas of student concern and to report back to the corporation with recommendations.

Student leaders saw the proposed task forces as a concession to their demand for regular input into the budget-making process but termed the offer "inadequate."

Class attendance was reported back to normal Tuesday after being down about 95 per cent during last week's strike.

In the two previous referenda, the students voted overwhelmingly to support the demands of the Student Coalition and to boycott classes.

Death penalty ok'd

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Senate gave final approval without debate yesterday to a message restoring the death penalty for nine categories of murder. The action may lead to a confrontation with Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

Before the measure can be enacted and sent to the governor, however, it must return to the House, where it has already been approved, for acceptance of a Senate amendment.

If the amendment is agreed to and the bill enacted, Dukakis is expected to follow up on his promise to veto it.

Farm bill passed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House yesterday passed and sent to President Ford a bill increasing this year's key farm and dairy price supports.

President Ford has told Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz he will veto the measure because of its cost.

The vote was 248 to 166.

Meskill approved

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate yesterday confirmed former Connecticut Gov. Thomas J. Meskill as a judge on the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The vote on the controversial nomination by former President Richard M. Nixon was 54-36.

Republicans were among Meskill's opponents, but conservative Democrats helped put his confirmation over. The Senate Judiciary Committee had voted 8-6 in favor of the nominee's approval last March 12.

Nader and nuclear fusion advocate debate

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Consumer advocate Ralph Nader and a leading congressional spokesman for a nuclear fusion program debated on Tuesday whether the country should turn to atomic power to solve its energy problems.

"Do we want to put the nation's future on an energy source that has to be perfect forever?" asked Nader in arguing against development of nuclear power plants.

Rep. Mike McCormack, D-Wash., the chairman of the House Energy subcommittee, said atomic power provides the "cleanest, safest environmental energy."

He accused Nader and others opposed to building such plants of confusing and misleading the American people with "fantasies and irrational scare stories," and added: "We simply cannot afford the luxury of basing energy policies on fantasies."

The debate was held before some 250 engineers from 16 societies attending an Engineering Legislative Forum.

Before the Nader-McCormack debate, the group was addressed by Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., and Rep. Gary Myers, R-Pa., and Dr. Robert C. Seamans, administrator of the new Energy Research and Development Administration.

Nader said that the push to build nuclear power plants goes on despite serious problems that remain unresolved.

The risks, he said, include sabotage, terrorism, theft, security of transporting radioactive material and the problem of waste disposal.

He said the controvery divides not just private citizens and government but also scientists.

"This is not a technology to be imposed from the top," Nader said. "There are alternatives ... safe, clean, alternatives to nuclear power."

He listed these as conservation, degasification of coal, geothermal power and new methods of extracting petroleum products.

McCormack said the nation is "truly in mortal danger" in the energy shortage.

"We cannot expect to provide more jobs for the American people unless we produce more energy," he said, adding that if nuclear power were not available "the future of the nation would indeed be black."

He said the hazard from radioactive plants was the same as being struck by a meteor.

imagine why you shouldn't have access." He said he could not endorse it because he didn't know enough about the issue and would like to report it to the full Board.

Rivera said at the conclusion of the meeting that "Our protest will be escalated on a higher level. This is not to scare anybody, we just want everybody to know where we are."

Keith congratulated the students on their interest in UMass' future. He also conveyed Wood's pleasure at seeing students getting involved.

Gage said the meeting began some good discussion and opened up issues.

There were about 25 people at yesterday's meeting. Others present included: Peter D'Errico, professor of Legal Studies, Jim Starr, LSO para-professional, Steve Fletcher, faculty senate representative, Barbara Stack of the grad senate, Doris Mahoney of the Liaison department in Whitmore, SGA President Rick Savini, Matt Burns of the student senate, Mike Fedarow, Mark Hopkins, Vanessa Nii, Karen Mangen and Ellen Carracciolo of the SAC.

Selectmen oppose PCP articles reports on each prospective article to be issued at the end of the week.

Garvey said it was only fair to the planning board, who has worked hard, to make a decision before their public meeting Thursday.

Diana Romer, member of the board of selectmen, wanted to immediately oppose article eight which asked the town to oppose building the JFK Library. At Eddy's decision, the board decided to view a report on the library's impact on the town before taking a stand.

Before reviewing the warrant articles, Romer suggested the selectmen set up some form of criteria for petitions to the town warrant. She said, for the town meeting to continue to run effectively and for the most important articles to receive due attention, a new criteria for future meetings should be formulated.

"One third of the warrant articles are petition articles which are primarily one of redress in which the citizen feels the executives are not functioning properly," Romer said. She added that the selectmen did not know how much work had been done and if the petitioner understood what was applicable to town meeting issues.

Both Romer and Garvey agreed if the selectmen were to take a stand on an issue and make a fair judgement, the article should be first presented to them and other appropriate committees.

Fog Index shows NY, Boston papers have equal readability

By DAN LaBONTE
Staff Reporter

If you can read on the college senior level, you should have no trouble digesting the hard news pages of The New York Times.

If you read on the college sophomore level, the hard news pages of The New York Daily News or The Boston Globe should present no difficulty.

According to study done with the aid of the Fog Index (F.I.), a technique developed by Robert Gunning to measure the readability of writing, The New York Times scores 15.97, which is just below the college senior reading level.

Both The New York Daily News and The Boston Globe score within the second year college level, with a 14.54 and 14.44 Fog Index respectively.

The Fog Index, described in Gunning's book The Technique of Clear Writing, is a device which makes the readability of writing commensurable.

The technique is based on averages and requires only basic mathematics. the number of words in an article is counted and divided by the number of sentences, thereby calculating the average number of words per sentence. Gunning defines a word as a grouping of letters surrounded by white space.

The number of "difficult" words, words of three or more syllables, is then counted and divided by the total number of words; the resulting quotient indicates the percentage of difficult words. Capitalized words, proper names, combinations of short words (e.g. houseboat), and verb forms made into three syllables by adding -ed or -es are not counted as difficult words.

The average sentence length and the percentage of difficult words are then added and the total is multiplied by a factor of .4. The product is measured in ascending order on a scale which ranges from 6 (sixth grade reading level) to 17 (college graduate level).

Of the two leading wire services, Associated Press (AP) and the United Press International (UPI), whose copy often compose much of the hard news pages of many major newspapers, AP averages an Index equivalent to the college freshman reading level (13.39), whereas UPI generally maintains the readability level of a high school senior (12.40).

Gunning draws a "danger line" between the reading level of high school seniors (12) and college freshmen (13). Once the "dange line" is crossed, and author writing on the upper college level runs the risk of having his article disregarded or misunderstood due to the reader's lack of comprehension. In fact no mass circulation magazine has a F.I. above 12.

The Collegian, the student newspaper on the University of Massachusetts — Amherst campus is an example of a newspaper whose writing correlates to its reading audience. The Collegian, the largest college daily in New England (circulation 19,000), has a F.I. of 13.93, just slightly below the average college sophomore's reading level.

If you have read and understood this article, your reading level is at least equivalent to that of a college freshman. This article has a F.I. of 13.29.

Graduate Student Senate seeks officer nominations

By AL COLARUSSO
Staff Reporter

The Graduate Senate (GSS) announced last night that they are seeking nominations for their elected officers.

"Any graduate student can run for office," said GSS President James Lindsey, "the person does not necessarily have to be a graduate student senator."

All nominations should be submitted to the Graduate Senate office in room 919 Campus Center, Lindsey added.

Three names were submitted for nomination at the GSS meeting last night. They are: Barbara Stack for president, John Clauson for treasurer, and Michal Hozik for secretary. There were no nominations for vice-president.

In other GSS business, the Legal Services Offices (LSO) was granted an allocation of $2,500 to retain the firm of Rabinowitz, Boudin and Standard so they may continue negotiations with the University administration and for other legal activities.

The LSO is currently negotiating an agreement with the administration that would allow them to represent students in cases of criminal litigation, according to an LSO representative.

In a report to the senate, Lindsey said the bill requesting that a graduate student be admitted to the University Board of Trustees has passed through the Education Committee of the State House of Representatives and is now on the House Floor.

"The bill probably will not pass unless there is a massive letter writing effort by graduate students," Lindsey said.

Representative James Collins (D-Amherst), who sponsored the bill along with Lindsey, was unavailable for comment last night.

The GSS also voted to fund $200 to the Coalition for a People's Budget to help pay costs accumulated during its efforts to oppose budget cuts.

GSS Vice President Barbara Stack said many fliers and pamphlets have been Xeroxed to help inform the student population and the $200 will go toward printing costs.

Prof finds foam pollution stems from natural sources

At about this time of year, many Massachusetts streams look sudsy. Bubbles float down on the current and where there is an eddy or slowing of the current, the bubbles accumulate into mats of foam. Pollution from detergents or other sources? No, says chemistry Professor Tom Zajicek of UMass. His laboratory has investigated foams from many streams and lakes and finds that they have their origin in natural sources, not detergents.

He explains:"There seem to be two principal sources of foam forming substances — tree saps and leaves and needles from trees. Tree saps contain a class of compounds called saponins which are capable of stabilizing foams. During the sap flow periods the trees leak sap from injured places; when it rains, this sap is rinsed off and eventually ends up in streams. The other source arises from substances produced from the bacterial decomposition of leaves and pine needles. It has been shown that leaves and needles, when soaked in water, release substances which are surfactants. Surfactant is a contraction of surface active agents, which are substances which lower the surface tension of water. Synthetic detergents and soaps are surfactants, which, is why they produce suds."

When these saponins and other surfactants wash into streams or lakes, they form very thin films (a few molecules thick) on the surface. The films form bubbles as a result of agaitation of the water, appearing usually in quiet pools just after a rapid or falls. They are most noticeable in spring but do appear at other times of the year in lesser amounts after prolonged or heavy rain.

""We have collected foams from a variety of streams and freeze-dried the resulting liquid to concentrate the foam-forming substances," Zajicek says. Laboratory studies of this concentrate indicate that the substances are a complex mixture of a number of compounds with one potentially significant feature.

This feature is their apparent ability to concentrate certain metals from water.

"It is typical for the liquid which comprises the foam bubbles to have concentrations of metals from 10 to 1000 times higher than that in the water in which they form," according to the UMass chemist.

Bike club has successful weekend

The UMass Bicycle Club made a successful three day outing over the historic April 19th weekend to the Standish Museums Youth Hostel in East Bridgewater, Mass.

The trip was organized by club President Cheryl Greenberg and eleven people participated. Three different groups were formed. One group of four made the 120 mile ride from UMass. Another group of three drove to South Woodstock, Conn. and rode the remaining sixty miles. A third group of four took a thirty mile trip from Milton, Mass.

The Standish Museums Youth Hostel is located in the 250 year old First Parish Unitarian Church. The church operates fifteen museums in the area. The Hostel itself is a 1929 vintage Canadian Pacific Railway sleeper car acquired in 1974 and located adjacent to the church. Facilities included an indoor heated swimming pool and rental canoes as well as a bicycle shop on the church property.

On Sunday part of the group cycled to the Miles Standish State Forest. The remaining group stayed in the East Bridgewater area, touring museums and canoeing on the Satuket River.

People who are interested in club activities should consult the bulletin board in the Student Union, opposite the ride board. Future activities include Bicycle Week (April 28—May 4), numerous weekend day trips of varying difficulty, and an overnight trip to Nantucket Island is still in the planning stages. The club holds meetings on alternate Thursdays in the Campus Center.

Amherst prepares for May 5th Town Meeting

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

Amherst officials and residents have been preparing for the Annual Town Meeting which will be held Monday, May 5 at 7:30 p.m. in the Amherst Regional Junior High Auditorium.

Citizens and various town committees have submitted articles for the Warrant. The selectmen have arranged the order of articles on the Warrant. The Warrant has been posted in the seven precincts.

The Warrant is the name given to the agenda of the Town Meeting issued by the Selectmen. The articles will be voted on by Town Meeting members.

This year's Warrant contains 77 articles. The key issues are: the approval of the new zoning by-law developed by the planning board and amendments proposed by various residents; financial distribution of town revenue; traffic rules, law enforcement; sewage; programs for the elderly; energy; conservation; housing; rent control; and ecology.

Town Meeting Members will also be voting on the establishment of several committees. Consumer Advisory Commission, Bicycling Committee, a committee to advise the town and UMass on issues which affect both jurisdictions, an energy committee, and a rent and eviction control board are the committees whose implementation is being considered.

Issues directly concerning UMass are:

—a decision on the authorization of a triangular parcel of land to be conveyed to UMass as a site for the pilot treatment plant.

—a request that the State Legislature refuse to collect monies for the purpose of increasing enrollment at UMass in Amherst.

—that the UMass trustees refrain from increasing the enrollment at UMass.

Other articles, petitioned by Floyd Baily, member of the PCP, request Town Meeting members to vote on student input in the route-making and frequency-of-service planning of any further public transportation, a bicycle committee with student membership, repealing the law that prohibits more than four unrelated people to live in a single household, and not enforcing certain victimless crimes such as co-habitation and the possession of marijuana for personal use.

Amherst adopted the representative town meeting in 1938 in place of the traditional New England Town Meeting where all registered town voters ratify articles on the warrant. With the representative Town Meeting, it is the elected Town Meeting members, representing residents in their prospective precincts, who vote on the articles on the warrant. Registered voters of Amherst, who are not town meeting members, are entitled to address the meeting and debate the issues but not to vote.

Town Meeting members are elected for three year terms, with one-third of the membership being elected each year. The town is divided into seven precincts, each of which is allotted a number of town meeting members on the basis of its population of registered voters. These allotments are determined prior to every election.

The legislative branch of town government is vested in the town meeting. This body makes the rules, passes the laws, and appropriates the money for the town.

All sessions of town meetings are presided over by a moderator who is elected at the annual town election for a one-year term. William C. Fields, UMass dean of students, will be moderator at this year's town meeting for his fifth consecutive year. The Moderator overseers the meeting and appoints some of the special ad hoc committees that are established by the town meeting.

Angel Flight, ROTC auxiliary, seeks growth

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

Angel Flight is a six member, one year-old RSO group which would like to expand.

Lesha Prehl, Commander of the organization, told the Collegian that Angel Flight is an auxilliary group of Arnold Air Society, the Air Force ROTC Fraternity.

Angel Flight first existed at UMass in 1952 but it was phased out when the Air Force almost left campus in 1969-1970 due to the disputes over credit for ROTC courses, Pregl said.

She said Angel Flight was revitalized in May 1974, after a four year absence, by Arnold Air Society, which also supports the group momentarily.

Prehl said the purpose of Angel Flight is to promote Air Force ROTC, to promote the United States Air Force itself, and to be an aid of any kind to the community.

In the past, she said this has included anything from painting the home of an elderly person to marshalling the Amherst Fair parade held last Spring, as well as ushering for UMass Fine Arts Council events.

Prehl said the group is trying to become established on campus again. She said membership is open to any undergraduate or graduate at UMass, male or female, and members do not have to be participants in an ROTC program.

Those interested in becoming members should contact Lesha Prehl at 546-4847. Prospective members must successfully complete a pledge program in which they will learn the history of Angel Flight, its goals, its relationship to Arnold Air Society, and learn about the Air Force and its operation.

Prehl said members should have an interest in community service and in promoting the Air Force and ROTC. She said Angel Flight "educates women about the Air Force — what it stands for and how they can help it as citizens."

Belchertown - UYA opportunities

Since September, 1971, Belchertown State School has been cooperating with the UMass in the University Year for ACTION Program. This program is designed to enable college students to obtain an educational experience while helping people who are faced with various social or poverty related problems.

After being recruited, interviewed, and selected by University Year for ACTION, and Belchertown Staff, ACTION Students are assigned to those departments and-or units within the State School that have submitted acceptable project proposals. The students work full-time for one calender year, while receiving 30 academic credits and a $2400. living stip nd. Each June a new "phase" of the program begins, and a new group of students start their year of work. Because Belchertown is so understaffed, ACTION Students carry out the same job duties, and hold the same responsibilities as regular staff members.

Recruitment for University Year for ACTION Phase VII is presently in progress. There will be twelve University Year for ACTION Phase VII positions available at Belchertown State School. During Phase VII ACTION Students at Belchertown State School will be working wit. ..dividuals of all ages and functional ability.

Additional information about the positions available may be obtained from Lee Douchkoff at 323-6311 ext. 295, Belchertown State School.

Rev. Rice to talk on sexism

The Rev. Elizabeth Rice, staff person for the Massachusetts Council of Churches Task Force on Women, will speak several times on campus on Thursday. Sponsored by the United Christian Foundation.

At noon, in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, she will address the topic, "Oppression and Liberation: Woman's Response to Sexism and Racism in the Judeo-Christian Tradition." A discussion period will follow, and the public is invited.

In the afternoon, she will meet with a group in the Hampshire House offices of the United Christian Foundation to discuss the possibility of putting on a series of public forums in the fall on "Women and Religion."

At 7:00 in the evening, at Alpha Chi Omega on Nutting Avenue, she will conduct a Greek area workshop on "Women and Taboo: a Look at the Role of Midwives, Witches and Healers." This workshop is also open to the University and community.

Rice is particularly interested in talking with women who might be interested in theological education and ordination. Her visit to UMass is being sponsored and coordinated by the United Christian Foundation (UCF), an ecumenical campus ministry located at 319 Hampshire House.

Unity tonight!

The prospects of new fees, higher tuition and cuts in vital student programs is a mere four months away from becoming reality. But more important, summer vacation is only four weeks away.

Time is running short, and with every passing day the chances for students getting together to do something about the worsening financial situation grow smaller.

Something must be done before the semester ends, if students don't want to pay about twice as much for their "free" public education in September as they do now.

Despite the sarcastic remarks about student apathy that have recently surfaced on this campus, the first University Town Meeting last Thursday demonstrated clearly that many students still do care. It also showed how much numbers count in forwarding the student cause: This was not just a get-to-gether of some small radical group. No, here was a cross section of the entire student community of this University proclaiming its rights. Those thunderous "aye's" and "no's" echoing from the ceiling of the Student Union Ballroom left no doubt as to the sentiment of students to the "meat-cleaver" tactics of Mike Dukakis.

Much work has been accomplished since that impressive show of strength and unity last week; the nine student demands are now in the hands of the State House leadership and the heads of the University's Board of Trustees.

But to have effect these demands must be met, not merely read.

Tonight's second University Town Meeting will be deciding how to pressure Legislature and Administration to implement the demands for no cuts, no fees and the establishment of a student union.

It is essential that the citizens of Massachusetts be made aware of the problems of the UMass students either through a rally at the State House or a symbolic two day boycott of classes or both.

So march down to the Student Union Ballroom tonight and listen to the arguments for and against a strike and vote on the referendum.

All unsigned editorials represent the opinion of the majority of the Board of Editors.

Campus Comments

Question: Would you participate in a two day strike if the nine student demands are not met? Why or why not?

Rosemary Weston, Sophomore. "Yes, I would. I hope that everyone else would, too. It wouldn't work unless the entire student body participated. It seems kind of fruitless because a lot of the people here are career oriented."

Joan Reagon, Senior. "Most certainly. Students have a basic right to their own education. If their right is not recognized, students should strike."

Ashley Winston, "Yes, I would, because I think students do have rights and I think students should organize. A strike would be a culmination of all the energies of the student body."

Nancy biglin, Senior, "I guess I would. I believe that a college education should be available to all people regardless of economic class."

Allan Lane, an exchange student from Oregon, "Probably not. The demands don't seem feasible. With inflation, I don't think it would work without added revenue."

Strike: What can it do?

By M.A. JONES

On Thursday and Friday there will be a referendum vote to strike. What does it mean, why vote yes? A strike at this time is a limited action designed not to immediately win our demands but to build momentum and organization that can keep struggling and eventually win.

A strike is a way to express our anger over the way we're treated generally, and specifically over the plans to cut back our educations and thus, our lives. It is a way to say that we feel that the cutbacks should be aimed at the rich and not the poor, aimed at the corporations and not the workers, aimed at the people who rule and not the people who are ruled. It is a way to get ourselves together and to learn more about the economic situation and about our own abilities to organize together and to fight by way of further striking, or by way of marches on the State House, or by way of tuition boycotts and withholding campaigns. A strike says that we have a right to the best education imaginable, that we have a right to control our own minds. It says that we don't want welfare recipients to pay for the economic errors of the rich. We want to cut back those who have been cutting us back, we want to cut back Dukakis, Whitmore and everyone else who has too much power and too much wealth.

But we know that winning demands as honest and right as ours is no easy one shot affair. You don't get a free lunch in this society. You don't get justice just for the asking. It takes time and effort, it takes organization, demonstrating and raising consciousness and social costs for those who will otherwise cut us back. Having demonstrations and meetings like those of the past ten days, and now having a limited strike to last a couple of days during which we hold teach-ins, prepare further actions on campus, and prepare for actions at the State House, is but a first series of steps in a larger on-going battle. It's the first drops of water wearing down the administrative stone, but there must be torrents still to come if the rock is to be totally worn away.

Striking here at UMass means students in the five areas attending teach-ins in their dorms, about this university and the education it gives us, about the economy, and about broader social-political issues too. It means meeting together to plan further actions, to do more canvassing here on campus, to spread information and analysis about what's going on. It means thinking hard about how we want to spend our time when we're in school and also about what kinds of work we want to be prepared to do when we get out. It means starting to think about what kind of jobs we'll actually get if we just sit back and let this society's managers decide our lives for us.

Strike for two days to raise social costs. Strike to have teach-ins and learn more about our lives and situations. Strike to prepare for further actions. Strike for education. Strike for Power, Strike Now!

M.A. Jones is a Collegian guest commentator and a member of the student action committee.

Analysis:
Not the right time

UMass administrators are afraid that a student strike may backfire, and cause legislative leaders to look with disfavor on next year's $118 million budget request. And they fear that framing student desires as "demands" will only anger Boston.

But while they would support a massive student rally at the State House, they cannot say so publically. Again, they fear that vocal support of student lobbying would annoy the very legislators students seek to impress.

The administration also thinks that if students ally with Governor Dukakis in cutting administrative budgets, student programs will ultimately suffer.

An example of the kind of legislative reaction administrator's fear was expressed by Rep. Michael Daly (D-Brighton) in a Collegian article yesterday.

"Some legislators have a hang-up about demands — they get nervous about demands, especially when the Legislature appropriates a couple of thousand a year for each student," he told a reporter.

The administrators point out that it is Dukakis, not the legislature, who is the real villain. The Legislature, President Wood said in an interview last Thursday, has not spoken.

"The Legislature hasn't spoken. The Legislature will be the jury on this thing ... the important thing is to center on what the Government proposes," Wood said, adding in the same interview, "Such a cut would be distorted in a state where per capita income is fifth in the nation and the level of support for public higher education is forty-ninth."

In other words, administrators are united with students and Trustees in opposing budget cuts.

On the union issue, it's another story. Most administrators cling to an assumption that a union, in the traditional sense, is not an "appropriate unit" for a University. They made the same argument when faculty came close to unionizing in 1972.

They feel that students are not a homogenous unit as would be an employee union in a factory, who share common working conditions, hours and wages. Like Chancellor Bromery, they think no union, in a traditional sense could represent all students.

Bromery told a Collegian reporter he could not support a collective bargaining agent: "For even if 51 per cent of the student population voted to support a union, who would guarantee that all students would accept the decision of the majority?"

The administrators say they don't know what students mean by a union, but are anxious to talk about it.

The unfinished symphony

OK, I admit it. I'm getting sentimental. I find myself looking back upon my college career with a sense of wonderment and wanderlust.

I wonder what my college career has educated me for, yet I long to wander outside of this University to find what my education never taught me.

Last semester seniors are the craziest members of this community. This is the time that most of them wander around in a frenzy trying to tie off all those loose ends that lie between "one more semester" and that $15,000 piece of paper that tells them that they are educated. (By the way, if anyone is interested, my diploma is for sale. It would make a terrific work of art, suitable for framing, and would look perfectly wonderful over your favorite piano.)

And there is a sense of strike in the spring air.

It is ironic that I might not technically finish my last stretch homeward to that big sheepskin in the stadium. Yet I find it very apropos in relation to my entire experience at UMie.

Thinking upon the idea of the strike and the idea of not "really" finishing college doesn't upset me. It seems to be more of an unfinished symphony in my mind.

The two term papers and three exams that now separate me from my diploma have little to do with my total education as a whole. I am ready to graduate. Shit, I've been ready for years.

But I think it more important to work on strike matters at this point. I think it more important to let the University understand that it is the quality of the education, not necessarily the quantity nor the duration of it that makes a person educated.

I think it important to make it clear to certain persons who think they make the rules, that it is, in reality, we, the students, who are in control of our own educations. The theory is that simple, yet it is the legwork that's going to make things difficult.

That is why we should forget about "finishing" the rest of the semester and start working on the future of this institute of education. That is, if it wished to continue to be known as an education facility.

As I see it, the strike will be an education in itself. It will teach people to deal with the isms of the "real" world that breed prejudice and oppression.

And if people will work together to make the powers that be affirm their basic rights then maybe my unfinished symphony will have a happy ending after all.

Personal activism

Heading down the lower corridor of the Student Union last night, feeling wasted by the roller coaster pace of my life over the last week, my eyes were fixed on the door of the People's Market. The bright letters of the sign on the door are now faded — faded since the night two years ago when I made that sign. The People's Market was real! Gail, Ellen, and I had put together a cooperative food store, run by and for students. It had non-ripoff prices, and a friendly atmosphere. And before we had begun the endeavor, we had absolutely no idea how to do it.

One year before that in 1971, I was a freshman in Umieland: I was bored, frustrated, and I think the proper term was "alienated." I had come on the tail end of the politically active sixties, when university students had a lot to say about things. But UMass was not a hotbed of political activism, or a hotbed of anything for that matter.

UMass seemed to be a little better than a glorified high school — dorm parties reminded me of "victory" parties after the ole football game, classes seemed irrelevant, the Collegian looked like my old high school rag. Blah. I had felt something deep within me in high school when universities were alive. Kent State, free universities, rallies, where was it all?

Well the last gasp of student activism (a whimper at best) occurred that spring of my freshman year with a strike over the mining of Haiphong Harbor, and a takeover of the ROTC building.

When the blaring calls for support came over the loudspeaker in Coolidge dorm, Gail and I decided with little enthusiasm to check it out. What we found was a fairly disorganized, pretty interesting group of people, all intoxicated on the feeling of togetherness and people power that kind of an experience creates. My head turned around in that next six months. I discovered new ways to look at the world, other people and myself. "Changes" is the term, and "growth," is the process.

To make a long story short, becoming involved in something human, something real, and something exciting, changed my life. The turn-on that Gail, Ellen and I had felt that spring, the feeling that you get when the world and your life and your morality start making clear sense to you, carried over into that fall semester. We began to plan something that would be productive, meaningful, and political (dare I say the word?). The People's Market was the end product of that semester's enthusiasm.

I left UMass that following semester, taking off a year to "see the world" as they say. I tried quite a variety of things since People's Market days: the Colorado Rockies, legal work, starting a women's center, working as a waitress in a pizza parlor, having a good time, falling in love.

Today the People's Market is still alive. Vietnam IS almost over (who says that students didn't have anything to do with it?) . Ellen and Gail are carryin' on, living life in the here and now and diggin' it. Gail's in South Dakota doing excellent work, and Ellen and I are UMies again.

UMass doesn't seem too different, students still get shit, scandals are still prevalent, dining commons still stinks. Gage is still here, so's Bromery. But the one difference is that the students are mumbling ... mumbling ... There's student activism brewing at UMass again. Things are different this time around; the issues are close to home, the rhetoric is minimal, and it seems to be really democratic. The "average" student (if there is such a thing) is demanding power, demanding a voice in the decisions which affect his and her life. The appeal to action is not one based solely on emotionalism, people are asked to think, to decide, and to make a choice. Please come to the Town Meeting tonight. I've said it before, and I'll say it again; we can wait no longer to live!

Representation or self interest?

A Masquerade ball is for Halloween, not for a college campus. The present movement in opposition to the budget cuts is nothing but a masquerade.

Many people, who oppose the cuts, are self-proclaimed supporters of a true "representative government," of "human rights," and of "working people trying to make decent lives." It is obvious that these people want a government that represents only them. They want special rights granted only to them. They want decent lives for themselves and do not care about the majority of the working people in this state.

The taxpayers of this state, the majority of whom have nothing to do with UMass, also want a representative government. They also have human rights. They are trying to make a decent living with little help from anyone at this university. The solution to the present fiscal crisis lies in a tax increase, a spending cut, or a combination of the two. Governor Dukakis has chosen to attempt a spending cut with a tax increase only as a last resort. Working people are clearly already overtaxed. A further drain on their incomes will deal a fatal blow to the state's economy and to the already outrageous level of unemployment. It is unfair and discriminatory to make only one or two areas suffer from the cuts. All areas must share in these cutbacks. UMass is no exception.

There is a large amount of opposition to organized interest groups |oil lobby, highway lobby, the military| on this campus. The force that the University Town Meeting Steering Committee, Coalition for a People's Budget, and any other fancy named group is trying to organize is similar to these previous interest groups in one important aspect. They are fighting for their own interests. They are fighting for themselves. Go into Springfield, Lowell, Sturbridge, or any other city or town and ask people to recall the last time any UMass Woman's Center or Third World program benefit their lives. Ask working taxpayers if any UMass student activity helped feed their children, pay their electric bills, or pay their doctor bills. And Samuel Bowles, the great opponent of capitalists, how many working people would enjoy taking home your paycheck every week? Peter Donahue, you appear so worried about people who "can't afford to go to school here" because of the budget cuts and tuition increases. Were you an opponent of a proposed graduated tuition scale a few years back? Surely those people who could not afford to pay tuition would not have had to pay any tuition at all. but the rich |or well-to-do| would have been subsidizing the poor. This is something that apparently not even "socially awakened" students can accept. It is surely quite different from the further squeezing of already overburdened taxpayers.

If you must oppose the budget cuts, then please leave the masks at home. It is your "human right" to oppose the cuts, but a social crime to disguise the reason for your opposition. The groups opposing the cuts are similar to many interest groups all over this country. They are trying to benefit themselves at the expense of working people. Richard Nixon are you listening?

The farce of the fees

It was nice reading in the Collegian that the SATF would be held to the current $55.50-year level. However, being a member of a club that was cut out by the fee's stabilization, I knew that the games of politics were again being played.

What a glorious banner our friends now have to wave. "Committee holds fee at $55.50." Most students, due to misinformation, will read that and feel happy that one thing on their bills, at least will not go up. However, it will occur to them later that they still received el shafto.

The freezing of the fund forces the removal of funds from student-benefiting organizations. I know of two student groups that were not funded for the coming year — thanks to this glorious freeze. Each was told that they were too much of a luxury, and would have to be cut so the basics could remain. The pre-med club, for example, was told that they were too academic. But — godamnit, this is a school*!! The amateur radio association was told that they were a luxury and also needed no funding. Christ, if this attitude prevails, the school will have no outlets for student's outside activities. All we'll have is things that "help" everybody, such as WMUA, the bus service, and the* Collegian.

Of course, a school needs these basics, but if our flesh keeps getting pecked, as is being done, we'll have left a big, bony skeleton of a university with no opportunity for student activities.

I'm sure that the students of UMass, if just told what they were paying for, would not mind a normal rise in the SATF to compensate for rising prices. They'd rather have a pre-med club, a good Spectrum magazine, a good ham radio club, etc., than pay a dollar less and go to a school that offers nothing but courses, a bus to ride, a radio station, and a newspaper.

What the students do mind is the proposed extra fees that they're slapping on everything. Permitting the current, needed fees to go up along with prices, or perhaps even lagging slightly behind prices is proper and expected. Cutting out student organizations left and right, telling them that they're not worthy of funding is not the answer, and surface appeasements such as this are quite uncalled for.

Comments on coverage

I am glad that the Collegian has been giving significant coverage to the student activities against cutbacks. But there have been doubts and hesitations expressed by some Collegian staffers. I believe that the coverage should be continued and expanded.

It is news that the UMass students are thinking about, planning, and doing things together in massive numbers about the crisis confronting our University. It is news because it is new. Think about that. Dukakis, Wood, Bromery, and their pals have been making "statements" for months. That's old stuff. I wouldn't say that they should be excluded entirely from the pages of the Collegian. Students definitely have a right to know how the Governor and Administration are attempting to obfuscate the issues, how they are attempting to divide us against each other, and how they are attempting to cram these cutbacks down our throats.

Collegian, stick with it. Report on the plans and the events to oppose the cutbacks. Tell us what's going to happen and what has happened. Report on the discussions. Tell us who is demanding what, and what the proposed strategies and tactics are all about. Explain it all to us so we can understand what's going on.

The Collegian is a student newspaper because its readership are students. Let's not let minor personality conflicts get in the way. The students are making the news. The students are eager to find out what's happening. The Collegian should continue and expand its coverage.

Glucksternʼs vacant post termed a ʻchallengeʼ

By DEBBIE GALLAGHER
Staff Reporter

The "Committee of Six", collectively seeking the position of Acting Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, view the office as a challenge of conflicts — undergraduate teaching versus research, according to a spokesman for the group.

Robert L. Gluckstern resigned from the position last month to become Chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park.

"The Provost is research oriented," said Martin Miller. There is "no great push to improve teaching skill," he said, yet "there is a push to improve research at the University." UMass is a "one shot deal," most of us won't be going to grad school, Miller said. "We (the Committee) would rather have great teaching than great research," he said.

An important goal of the Committee is to make the Provost's Office more "proactive," by soliciting demands from the community "rather than let them flow in," and seeking student "input into the decision making process." There is a need, according to the Committee, to make the office "more accessible to the campus community" and to "involve human resources" by using students and staff expertise in solving problems.

The committee is handicapped, committee member Jack Leader said, because of their inability to gain access to information within the Provost's office. A responsibility of the Provost is to present budget requests to the legislature and lobby for the University, Leader said, and it is difficult to judge the Provost's effectiveness due to lack of information available.

Responding to Chancellor Randolph Bromery's criticisms of a committee of students filling a position traditionally held by one man, Miller said decisions affecting students and faculty should have their participation and "shouldn't be made by one individual." In effect, four associate provosts assist the Provost in making decisions, Miller said, consequently, there isn't one decision-maker. The decisions might "take longer but the greater resources and individual strengths available" would outweigh the more "cumbersome" structure, he said. University government, Miller added, is done mostly by committee.

Robert Keiser, a student head of residence, said the Committee of Six evolved three weeks ago after an interview with Gluckstern and information from "Students' Role in University Decision-Making" seminar the Committee is taking.

There is "a lot in education people need support in and the Provost is not responsible to needs," he said.

The committee views its attempt a "serious effort," and feel they are "raising questions" of the office's effectiveness by applying for the job. "We do care about the University and how education in University affects change in the State," Miller said.

Bromery and Gluckstern were unavailable for comment.

MISSIONS IMPOSSIBLE is the title a college prexy put on his farewell speech in which he described the seven years-plus of his tenure.

Charles J. Hitch, retiring president of the University of California system, shared his reminiscences during Charter Day ceremonies at UCLA.

Appointed by Gov. Ronald Reagan, Hitch succeeded Dr. Clark Kerr, whom the conservative Reagan had ousted at the height of the student activist movement.

BOUNCING CHECKS are keeping the bursar hopping at Indiana U, where "dishonored" checks have increased to 103,000. At this time last year, the count of rubber paper passed by students totalled 40,000.

The bursar is fighting back by suspending check-cashing privileges for habitual violators. The Indiana Daily Student says so.

HOW TO GET A JOB is the title of a new course at Miami-Dade Community College in Florida, according to the Catalyst newspaper.

A three-credit course, PSY 102 is divided into three modules: "Self-Exploration", "Exploring the World of Work" and "Preparation for Employment."

The final exam is two interviews with prospective employers.

Nuclear hearing

Notice is hereby given that the Commission on Nuclear Safety, appointed by the Governor in August 1974, and acting in accordance with Executive Order 110, will hold a public hearing on the matter of nuclear safety and nuclear power generation in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The public hearing will be held today at 1:30 p.m. in Rooms 162 and 165, Campus Center.

The purpose of the hearing will be to receive public comment and opinion on the issues of nuclear safety. Testimony may be given orally and-or in writing prior to the conclusion of the public hearing. Additional testimony is invited by writing to: Massachusetts Commission on Nuclear Safety, Department of Public Health, Room 360, 600 Washington Street, Boston, Massachusetts 02111.

Nigro play to open Thursday

Beast With Two Backs, a new play by Don Nigro, opens Thursday in Hampden Dining Commons at UMass' Southwest Residential College.

Directed by Professory Gary Stewart, the play is a five character work of love and art set in Greenwich Village during the 1920's.

Scheduled for a three-day run (April 24-26), Beast With Two Backs is the fourth University Theater production of the current semester. Admission is $2.00 for students, $3.00 for non-students. The curtain for all performances is 8:00 p.m. and reservations may be made by calling the University Theater Box Office at 545-3511 any day between the hours of 12:00 and 5:00 p.m.

Housing requirements

On Friday, April 18, the Amherst campus administration finalized its plans to recommend for Board of Trustee approval a revision in the housing requirement for the 1975-76 academic year. Next year's policy will require all students to reside on-campus except those who are:

Seniors, Married, Commuting from the home of their parents within commuting distance of Amherst, Residents of fraternity-sorority houses and Veterans of the Armed Services.

"In addition, all students living off-campus now who are currently exempted from the present regulation will not be required to live on campus next fall. Please note the removal from this year's regulation of the provision which allows students 21 years of age or older to reside off-campus."

notes & quotes

Itzhak Perlman here

Violinist Itzhak Perlman will appear in concert with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra at the UMass today at 8 p.m.

He will perform with the orchestra in Bowker Auditorium in the final presentation of the UMass Arts Council Celebrity Series for the 1974-75 season.

Perlman, 29, was born in Tel Aviv, the son of Polish parents who emigrated to Israel in the mid-1930's. His first studies were at the Tel Aviv Academy of Music. By the age of 10 he was a talented radio performer.

In 1958 the late Ed Sullivan came to Israel to put together a package of native talent for his television show. Perlman came to New York as part of the troupe. He stayed in the United States and studied at the Julliard School. His talent was recognized through scholarships by Julliard and the American-Israel Cultural Foundation. Isaac Stern took interest in Perlman and drew him to the attention of impressario Sol Hurok.

In 1964 Perlman won the Leventritt Memorial Award International Competition at Carnegie Hall.

This led to appearances with the New York Philharmonic and other major American orchestras. He performed in every major American city in recital and visited Australia, the Far East and South America. During the past season he appeared with the Philadelphia and Baltimore Orchestras in New York and has made two chamber music appearances with Isaac Stern at Carnegie Hall.

Howard Klein of the New York Times has called him a "truly sensational violinist."

The Springfield Orchestra will be under the direction of Robert Gutter. The program includes the American Festival Overture by Schuman; Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in E Minor, Opus 64, by Mendelssohn, and Symphonie Fantastique by Berlioz.

Tickets for this concert are now on sale at the UMass Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall (545-0202) and are priced at $4 and $3 for the general public, half price for students.

Women's Center seeks course proposals

The Southwest Women's Center is currently accepting course proposals for the Fall 1975 semester (the semester extends over a 13 week period.)

Applicants should send a resume and course proposal c-o Jacqueline Leheny, Asst. Area Director, Southwest Residential College, Washington Lobby, UMass. Questions may be answered on the phone by calling Joanne Levensen at either 545-0626 or 549-0698, or by calling the Student Affairs Office in SW, 545-0702.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY April 23 — Born today, you are one of those persons so highly sensitive to environmental changes that you may well begin to think of yourself as one who can't be happy outside the status quo. It is true that it is more difficult for you than most to adapt to differences -- but you cannot prevent new ideas from having their impact upon the real world and the sooner you learn to adjust to those differences the better. You are intelligent enough to know you must ultimately accept change -- and wise enough, given enough time, to do so.

You are particularly quick to react adversely to changes in personal relationships. You seem to expect all love to be as first-love; all friendship to be lasting, loyal, and durable; all enemies to be forever formidable. It therefore genuinely disorients you when a friend shows disapproval, when a loved one turns even temporarily cold, or when an enemy lends a helping hand. In short, you are inclined to insist that people remain in the pigeonholes to which you assigned them initially -- and that they behave accordingly.

Like many born under the sign of Taurus, you need to work from a plan in order to prove successful. Once you do have a plan, however, there is little that can keep you from completing your course of action, for you are not one to shift goals, move deadlines, rearrange steps and phases, etc. You are a hard worker and a steady one.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, April 24

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — If you must interfere with another's actions, do so tactfully. If you check another bluntly, you may do nothing but arouse his ire.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You can rebut another's claim to your gains. Simply produce the necessary facts and figures and you can cancel his claim by a superior authority.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — If you are wise you will not exclude any from your company today. Help for your present difficulties may come from strange sources.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Uphold another's right to act in his own behalf. This is a favor which will be repaid when you need it most. Support your own interests in afternoon and evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You can increase the intensity of another's interest in your welfare today by demonstrating an increase in need. Be sure you are justified, however.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — An inflated ego will do you tremendous harm today if you let it. Try to demonstrate a degree of humility; ask for another's advice.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Indelicate remarks may cause you to lose out on an opportunity for gain in the morning. Best keep your views to yourself today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — A situation more than a little grating on the nerves may arise on the employment scene early in the day. Take action against it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — There is little difference between a swashbuckler and a braggart. Make sure you are neither when it comes to your turn to hold forth.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — If you would be no more than a pawn in the present situation, let another lead you where he will. Otherwise, be your own guide.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — It is the narrow-minded and uncultivated who will be your downfall today. You can escape setback if you will avoid such company scrupulously.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — If your dreams are impractical, eccentric, they gain you little even if transformed into reality. Know which side your bread is buttered on.

Lacrossewomen zapped

The women's lacrosse team did not fare too well yesterday afternoon, but the team gets back into action with a game at Smith next week.

By RON ARENA

The women's lacrosse club, after three consecutive victories, finally tasted defeat yesterday as they were thrashed by a tough Williams College team, 9-5 on the field beside NOPE.

UMass, after falling behind early, tied the score on a fine rush by Sally Boy. Boy rushed in alone from about forty yards out and fired a shot past the bewildered William's netminder. But that was the closest UMass ever came.

Williams, utilizing a fine passing and well-disciplined offense, added three unanswered goals in the first half to take a commanding 4-1 lead.

The Minutewomen, in their last two wins, had also trailed at the half, so a come-back seemed quite possible. The home squad with an opening score in the second half would be right back in the game. But the visitors capitalized on the same intention, adding the killer early in the second half. Although the UMass offense began to click, the four-goal lead proved insurmountable. Evie Sneeden, player-coach Lori Nazar, Laurie Bruce, and Boy again, added UMass scores in the half, as the women A-team played the whole game.

Nazar, commenting on the club's play, noted a lack of defense as a prime factor in the defeat. "The players were kind of confused as to when to come off the free player. They should be coming off quicker," explained the player-coach.

As for the offense, she added "We had some sloppy passes, and people were not cutting when they should have been."

Monday, the club responded to a 4-2 halftime deficit with three goals in the final twenty-five minutes to nip Springfield College, 5-4.

Judy Kennedy became the heroine of the day as her goal in the final minute of play proved to be the winning margin, after Debbie Balitso's second goal of the game had knotted the contest at 4-4.

Pat Conklin, and Evie Sneeden rounded out the UMass scoring, as once again Nazar played the nucleus of her A-team, with a couple of B players seeing action. Since rules prohibit substituting except during the half, spotting a non-A player is not possible. If the B team starts and finds that their opponents are superior, they must finish the half, so at times it becomes tough to give many players action.

SURE SHOTS... UMass invades Smith College next Wednesday at 4:00. Nazar feels they will be the toughest opponent on the schedule.

Tracksters gain nine

By BILL DOYLE

Led by Sue Kibling's two third place finishes, the UMass women's track club, officially called the Sugarlpaf Mountain Athletic Club, compiled nine points in the Cherokee Invitational track meet Saturday at Springfield College.

The meet, which was won by Springfield College, attracted many eastern teams from as far as Delaware, said Coach Tom Derderian.

Kibling placed third in the high jump with a 4'10" jump and she also finished third in the 220 with a 28.2 time.

Julie LaFreniere ran "an encouraging race" in the half mile according to Derderian, finishing fifth with a time of 2:29.6, her personal best. Kathy Dooley also ran her best time in the half mile (2:54.4), placing eighth.

Marian Kulick proved to be quite versatile as she ran in three events, her best effort being a fourth place in the 440 intermediate hurdles with a 75 second time.

Other Minutewomen who competed Saturday were Debbie Banks (who ran the 220 in 31.0), Sue Lunter (who ran the 100 in 13.2), Laurien Gergouli, Judy Lovly, and Ro[illegible]nna Faraballa (who threw the javelin 60 feet). The next meet is May [illegible] Springfield against Springfield College and Fitch H.S. of Connecticut.

Yanks bop Bosox, 5-0

BOSTON (UPI) — Bobby Bonds drove in two runs, one with a home run, and Doc Medich tossed a three-hitter Tuesday to pace the New York Yankees to a 5-0 win over the Boston Red Sox.

Bonds, who had three hits in his four at-bats, singled home the first Yankee run in the sixth inning and hit his third homer of the season into the left field screen in the eighth inning.

Medich, now 3-1, retired 15 consecutive batters between the second and sixth innings and only once allowed two runners on base in the same inning.

New York's first two runs were set up by stolen bases. In the sixth, Roy White walked, stole second and came home on Bonds' two-out single to left. In the eighth, Sandy Alomar singled, stole second, moved up on a groundout and scored on Elliott Maddox's suicide squeeze.

The Yankees added two ninth innings run when Chris Chambliss' second double of the game scored Thurman Munson, who had reached on a fielder's choice. Chambliss then came home on a triple by Alomar.

The women's softball team, which lost a 15-7 game yesterday afternoon, will travel to Springfield next Saturday.

Westfield Staters club batswomen

By LAURIE WHITING

"We have talent on our team, but we just didn't play together." So said coach Jackie Elliot after the UMass women's softball team took a beating at the hands of Westfield State yesterday, 15-7.

It was an unspectacular game for both teams, as Westfield accumulated their runs on errors and mediocre hitting. Westfield's lead off batter, Sue Hickey proved to be consistent, singling and doubling runners across the plate. Kathy Meader, the Westfield pitcher, being very inconsistent, didn't give UMass women much to hit.

Mickey Locke, the UMass pitcher, couldn't get it together and was replaced by freshman Luann Fletcher.

The first innings were the start of Westfield's scoring domination, as Ann Tully tripled with bases loaded. UMass came back with a lone run (until the 6th inning) with Terry Pudlo scoring.

The 5th inning was big trouble for UMass, as Westfield scored 5 big ones due mostly to Hickey's solid hitting. In a two run play in that same inning, UMass catcher Pat "Busy" Bradley had to be taken out of the game with an injury when she was taken out by a runner at the plate.

UMass' batting began to pick up after the 5th inning as LuAnn Fletcher singled, Nancy Anderson got on and was sent around by Terry Kennedy, Karen Dolphin and Terry Pudlo.

Though the UMass women began to rally, they couldn't score the necessary runs in the time remaining to beat Westfield.

The women's record is 0-2. Though they haven't shown what they can really do on the field, Coach Elliot thinks that they can make a comeback and psych up for their next game — a toughie with Springfield College, Thursday, in Springfield at 2:00.

JV batsmen sweep Dartmouth

By CHAS O'CONNOR

The junior varsity baseball team ran their record to 9-1 yesterday afternoon with a pair of victories over Dartmouth College, 6-1, 7-3.

"We were awesome," said Coach Jeff McKay after the game. Most awesome of all the Minutemen was second baseman Kevin Finnucane, who went four for four in both games. Finnucane played shortstop in the absence of Al Lopriore, who saw action with the varsity yesterday.

Tom Nigro weathered early control problems to win the first game, his third decision without a loss. Catcher Charlie Ciccons collected two hits and three runs batted in.

Chris Kirby also notched his third win in turning back the Big Green in the second game.

MINI MITTS ... Lopriore played centerfield for the varsity instead of his customary shortstop position ... The AIC game which ended in a 1-1 deadlock last Wednesday has been rescheduled for a week from today ... Next game for the JVs us Tuesday afternoon against Holyoke Community College in Holyoke, a 3:30 start ... Three members of last year's JV squad now doing well with the varsity. They are shortstop Jim Cullen, leftfielder Steve Wright and converted outfielder Paul Abramowicz ... quote from varsity coach Bergquist on Lopriore: "We think he's got a lot of potential and a lot of talent." ... The junior varsity has swept two doubleheaders and split the third.

Celtics hush Houston

HOUSTON (UPI) — Paul Westphal came off the bench to score eight points late in the first quarter and spark Boston, behind the rebounding of Dave Cowens and Don Chaney's 31 points, to a 122-116 victory over Houston which sends the Celtics home with a 3-1 NBA playoff series lead.

Boston trailed by nine points before Westphal, a third year guard from Southern Cal, replaced John Havlicek with eight minutes gone. Boston narrowed its deficit to three at the quarter and then blitzed the Rockets 20-4 in a six minute span of the second quarter.

Five Boston players scored four points during the surge, but the biggest difference was on the boards. Cowens got seven rebounds in the second period and totalled 24 rebounds to go with his 31 points.

Havlicek, coming back after his breather in the first half, played most of the second half and wound up with 22 points.

Houston, with Rudy Tomjanovich's pair of three point plays, ran off nine straight points for a 25-18 lead early in the game. Tomjanovich scored 25 points to go with Calvin Murphy's 35 and Mike Newlin's 31.

Cowens, held to only eight points in Houston's only win of the series last Saturday, dominated the lane in limiting Houston centers Kevin Kunnert and Steve Hawes to a total of 16 points.

Houston scrambled in the last few minutes to make the final score closer than the game actually was.

UMass' Welzel ran in Marathon

By LAURIE WHITING

To look at her, you'd never suspect that Jane Welzel, standing 5 feet 5 at 125 pounds had completed the long and taxing Boston Marathon, held Monday at 12:00 noon. The UMass sophomore woman from Hopkinton finished the marathon in 3 hours and 40 minutes, starting out in a field of over 2000.

Jane first became interested in the marathon, living in Hopkinton, the official starting point of the race. She promised herself that she would run it some day, just for her own satisfaction. "I wanted to do it for myself, not for anyone or any other reason," explains Jane.

There were 52 women officially entered in the marathon this year. Jane was one of the many others who ran it unofficially.

"It was great running in the marathon," says Jane. "The people were unreal. They kept giving us encouragement, water, fruit, and all kinds of food. People in the race were great, too. They'd keep giving you support throughout the whole race. The fact that I was a woman was a reason for people to cheer, too. I got all kinds of encouragement like 'go lady,' or 'go girl,' 'here comes another one,' and some of the older men would say something like 'go honey, you can do it.' In a way I felt funny because all the men around me were working just as hard as I was."

Jane started to prepare herself for the marathon over intersession. She ran 5 to 6 miles a day at home. In late February, she ran approximately 20 miles a week. She worked up to 6 to 10 miles a day, finally, and on weekends she usually trained 12 to 18 miles. Starting last Sunday, Jane ate mostly protein for meals, so that her body would absorb the carbohydrates it craved (that she started eating Thursday) and would need for the race.

"I felt pretty good running," Jane says. "I could have trained better, but I felt O.K. I started getting discouraged between 15 and 20 miles, wondering why I was running. But then all the Wellesley and Boston College student lined up on the road and got me psyched again — so I finished O.K. I felt a bit nauseous at the end, but after I ate, it went away."

Jane is a Leisure Studies and Services major, but may change to a BDIC program in exercise science. She'd like to work with physical fitness and maybe do some coaching.

"I'm really glad I ran the marathon," Jane says. "I feel it's an accomplishment, and I know I'm capable of more. I can do better. If I run again, I'll train better for better performance."

Jane was on the women's crew team, swim team and water polo team this past fall. This spring she competes in water polo only. "You have to be dedicated to one thing to make it fair to yourself and the team," Jane explains.

Why does Jane love athletics and exercise? She furnished the answer: "The worst feeling in the world is to be out of shape. I hate it."

Entertaining Yale University this afternoon behind Boyden at 3 will be UMass' UV lacrosse team, sporting a 1-0 record. The junior Minutemen, with many stars of the future, will no doubt be scouted by the Boston Bolts.

Gorilla growlings

The official University of Massachusetts Patriot's Day celebration took place Monday at the UMass lacrosse game when three unidentified lacrosse fans tapped a keg at the top of the hill while taking in UMass' Patriot's Day massacre of the Eagles of Boston College.

The game was sort of a replay of the UMass-Boston College football confrontation except in reverse. Boston College was never any threat in the game, and the UMass revenge was sweet in terms of pouring it on as the Eagles did to the Minutemen at Alumni Stadium last fall.

The celebration was the usual kind at UMass lacrosse games, as this fast and furious spring sport continues to grow in popularity on campus. Everyone goes to a lacrosse game to have a good time. And it is extremely difficult not to have a good time if you are rooting for UMass, the way the Gorillas have been playing.

The lacrosse field behind Boyden Gymnasium is a natural spot for the finest audience viewing. The edge of the field is only a few feet away, and the crowd is almot in the game literally. People have talked about lacrosse being played in the stadium but the atmosphere of the present playing field almost makes that thought not worthwhile at all.

To go with the enthusiastic fans that are beginning to flock to UMass lacrosse games is a version of Garber's Gorillas that could be the best ever that the school has seen.

The UMass stickers are now averaging over 17 goals a game as their scoring attack has been, at least, awesome. Crease attackman, (the player that stations himself close to the front of the opposing team's cage), Frank Garahan is leading the team in goals with 21.

The top three overall scorers are attackmen Jeff Spooner, Billy O'Brien, and Kevin Patterson, Spooner has 13 goals and 22 assists for 35 points. O'Brien leads the team in assists with 24 to go along with his 8 goals for 32 points. Patterson has 19 goals and 7 assists for 26 points.

After losing their first two games of the season, the UMass lacrosse team has won five straight. There are probably only three other teams in the whole country that would have played the second ranked team in the nation, Cornell, in their first game of the year. UMass did and played the Big Red well at that, before going down to defeat, 16-10.

Hofstra was UMass' second game of the year, and according to head Gorilla coach Dick Garber, UMass played well enough to win. But a combination of a slippery field and some missed nets hurt UMass as they lost this one 14-10.

In the next five Gorilla games, all but one were extremely one-sided as the Gorillas romped through Dartmouth, Connecticut, Harvard and Boston College. Against Cortland, the UMass stickers were able to eke out an 11-10 victory in an exciting game played at Cornell. The Gorillas had been edged in last year's Cortland game by one goal in a quintuple overtime thriller. Their revenge this year was well deserved.

At this point in the season, the Gorillas are really jelling as a team. The three regular midfield units are doing their offensive and defensive jobs well. The defensive corps has been usually very tight.

Williams and University of New Hampshire will be the next two opponents for UMass before they take on Brown University in Providence on May 7. Last year the Gorillas won the New England championship of lacrosse when they beat Brown by one goal with eight seconds left in the game. That Brown game should be for the New England championship again this year.

It was an all-around bad day for the UMass baseball team at Lorden Field yesterday, as it lost both games of a doubleheader to Dartmouth, and lost the services of co-captain Pete Backstrom for an indefinite period of time.

Dartmouth ace Jim Beattie held the Minutemen to just three hits in game one while his teammates came up with five runs in the fifth off UMass starter Rich Kelly as the Big Green picked up a 5-1 victory. In game two, a three-run pinch-hit homer by Dartmouth's Greg Cronin off Jerry Erb led his squad to a 7-4 win.

The Minutemen, now 6-10 on the season, will end freshman Pete Rankowitz against the Crusaders of Holy Cross in a 3:00 encoutner this afternoon at Lorden Field.

Backstrom, the team's leading hitter for most of the season, pulled a hamstring muscle running out a grounder in the third inning of the first game. "We suspect that it might be serious," said Coach Dick Bergquist. "He could be out anywhere from four to six days to two or three weeks."

Kelly, a freshman, pitched extremely well for the first four innings of game one, but suddenly seemed to lose it in the fifth. The Big Green banged out six singles and all five runs before John McManus came in to bail out Kelly and end the rally.

UMass' sole run came in the first when Beattie walked three, and Backstrom scored on a passed ball. They also rallied in the last inning when with two outs, Al Lopiore (just up from the JV's) walked, Steve Wright singled, and Jim Cullen walked.Bergquist sent up Bob Moore to pinch hit for Paul Abramowicz, but Beattie slipped a called third strike by him and it was all over.

In game two, Erb started strong but was a victim of his own wildness. In the second, with two outs, he walked two and Dartmouth's Mark Ditmar banged out a single scoring two runs.

The Minutemen pulled ahead in the bottom of the second. Jerry Mondalto tripled, Jim Cullen doubled him in, Jim Black walked, and John Healy singled in two runs and it was 3-2, UMass.

The Minutemen added another in the fourth when Wright singled, went to second on Cullen's groundout, and Moore laced a single up the middle to make it 4-2.

But Erb's control troubles finished him off in the sixth. He hit the leadoff man, Glenn Reed, and walked the next batter. After Dave Clark flied out, Cronin pinch hit for Russ Bartlett and lifted a fly to right which just seemed to drift over the wall. When the next batter doubled, Bergquist lifted Erb and McManus came in again.

McManus had problems of his own, as he walked Steve Mele (son of Sam Mele, former Minnesota Twins' manager), gave up two singles for another run before the rally ended on an aborted double steal. But it was 7-4 Dartmouth, and UMass never mounted another serious threat.

Sweep of singles boosts netmen over Holy Cross

By PETER NALAK

A clean sweep of the singles boosted the UMass netmen over the Crusaders of Holy Cross yesterday, 7-2 in Worcester.

It took UMass a while to get started as the Holy Cross courts were fast and slippery.

"The highlight of the match was the cookies made by Abramoff's sister," said Coach Kosakowski.

Kosakowski was not excited over the win since the Crusaders were one of the weaker teams that UMass has faced this season.

Billy Karol continued his string of tough matches with his third setter in a week.

Karol lost his concentration in the second set but ended a two match losing streak with a 6-4, 4-6, 7-5 win at first singles.

Captain Chris Post had some trouble with his opponent's cannonball serve but was second off the courts with a 7-5, 6-2 second singles victory.

Post helped Barnaby Kalan eat some of the oranges provided by the Holy Cross coach. Kalan had won 6-2, 6-0 at fourth singles.

Worcester native Dave Abramoff had his father and sister watching him at third singles. Dropping the first set 3-6, Abramoff came back 6-3, 6-2 for the fifth and decisive UMass point. It was his first single win since the Boston University match at the beginning of the season.

Fifth singles player Marc Ouellet continued his winning ways but not without a second set scare. Ouellet fell behind 0-3 in that set but fought back to a 6-3, 6-4 victory.

Art Cloutier, at sixth singles, took a set to get used to the fast courts. He ended up on top, 4-6, 6-3, 6-4 for the netmen's first singles sweep this year.

With the match decided 6-0, the Minutemen wanted only to finish eating the oranges and head back to UMass.

The doubles had to be played and Coach Kosakowski experimented with two new combinations.

At first doubles Abramoff and Kevin Garrahan were put together and came within two points of winning. Their final tally was a 7-5, 4-6, 6-7 loss.

Karol and Kalan also played together for the first time, at second doubles. They ran up against the cannonball serve of Post's opponent and were downed, 6-3, 4-6, 3-6.

Post and Ouellet, playing third doubles, saved UMass from a doubles debacle with a 6-4, 6-3 triumph.

"Our doubles were as expected — lousy," said Kosakowski.

The netmen will spend the rest of this week working on doubles and preparing for the season's most important competition, the Yankee Conference championships April 26.

Golfers slaughter AIC by 50, Toski, Lasek lead way with 78's

By RON ARENA

No matter what the sport, when a team wins by 50, it has to be termed a slaughter. 50 runs, 50 points, 50 yards; they all spell out the same results. In the case of the UMass golf team, it happened to be 50 strokes as the Minutemen clubbed American International College yesterday 399-449 at Hickory Ridge C.C.

UMass, knowing it would be no contest, played the Gold tee in the match (the furthest tee). The added distance caused most scores to increase by about three strokes, but a 399 will still win most matches for UMass.

Tom Toski, after suffering through four consecutive matches of over 80 scores, had his best competition round of the season as he shot a 78 to pace the romp. Explained a revitalized Toski after the match, "It's been taking a while to hit the ball where I should be. Before, I had been having a lot of bad holes where I'd shoot a nine or a seven and my score would be ruined. You really start to get down on yourself when that happens."

Concerning yesterday's round, he added, "I was hitting the ball much better. I think my score could have been better with the way I was hitting it." Looking ahead, he adds, "I shouldn't have any more problems."

John Lasek recorded his fouuth straight under 80-round in match play, equalizing Toski's round of 78. The junior, along with Joe Artman, has been playing with the most consistency on the team.

Rick Olsen, responding from his off-round of 85 in the BC-Holy Cross match, shot a 79, while Howie Terban and Dave Grochmal scored 82's. Terban has still been struggling a bit, as he has broken 80 only once in competition this year.

Coach Fan Gaudette, commenting on the mismatch, said, "Our scores weren't really that bad. The course played tough, and don't forget, we played from the Gold tee."

The coach was also pleased with Toski's round, emphasizing that he "finaaly shot a round he's capable of shooting. With the strength of his play, we'll be that much tougher."

Again, judging everyone's scores, he added, "The early season is really hard. You have to hit the ball really super with the conditions of the course."

TEE TIME...Joe Artman proved he wasn't a machine built to swing golf clubs as he shot an 83, his first poor round of the season... Tim Dishkin, a transfer student who just became eligible, shot an 84. Gaudette feels "He is a pretty good player and should be a help. Dishkin has 2½ years of eligibility left... The golfers continue their busy schedule with a quadrangular-match with Amherst, WPI, and Dartmouth at Hickory Ridge. Amherst will be the host, and according to Gaudette, a 399 tomorrow will probably be good for the win.

Department phase-outs seen in budget cuts

By JUDY BOUCHER
MDC Staff

Facing the possibility of budget cuts, administrators here are putting together contingency plans that call for lay offs, phasing out of departments and no expansion of existing programs, according to Warren Gulko, budget director.

Although no hard case decisions have been made, informal budget hearings have been taking place this week to review the budget and make plans in anticipation of cuts, said Gulko.

Gov. Michael Dukakis has proposed a 10 per cent budget cut in spending on publich higher education. Dukakis is trying to trim state expenditures next year in order to reduce the $361 million deficit.

Final approval of the budget rest with the General Court. The full legislature is expected to vote on the budget this summer.

A 20 per cent cut, said Gulko, "for the Amherst campus would result in a budget that would have a severe and disastrous effect."

If the budget cut is handed down, there may be a reduction of $3 million in the personnel account or eliminating some 200 positions, according to Gulko.

The phasing-out of departments would be "complex" and depend on the "magnitude of reductions and how the reductions are distributed," he said.

Also, the contingency plans will probably eliminate the request for expansion of existing programs, Gulko added.

Students protesting proposed budget cuts have said cuts can be made without affecting academics if administrators "trim the fat" around offices.

UMass is asking the Commonwealth for $118 million dollars for a maintenance of the three campuses, a 16.5 increase over anticipated expenditures for this fiscal year. The request for the Amherst campus is $80.8 million as compared to $66,500,283 appropriated last year.

The Boston campus at Columbia Point is requesting $22,974,935 and Worcester is asking $9,784,253.

The biggest chunk of the University's request is for salaries, approximately $78 million dollars. Also in the request is $8 million needed to meet continuing cost increases and the other money would go for programs.

Gulko said one of the problems is that the Amherst campus has a fuel deficit for this year of $4.2 million dollars. The fuel request for the next fiscal year which begins in July is approximately $7 million.

Gulko said the Chancellor's austerity measures reduced the fuel deficiency from six million to 4.2 million.

The measures include implementing campus-wide energy conservation, freeze on hiring and position increases and a 4.3 assessment on all department's operating budget.

Gulko said out of the total budget request for the campus here approximately $76 million is "fixed cost." Program developments are slated to received $4.7 million.

The Amherst campus is also requesting money for 78 new positions, but Gulko said if a cut has to be made the new positions "would be the first to go."

According to Gulko, financial aid would not be affected by budget reductions because the financial aid appropriation is allocated from a "special appropriation". The financial aid requests is the same as last year, $1,050,000.

The state appropriation is only one source that goes toward operating the campus here

The following are the tour sources of revenue the University collects for running the campuses:

— about 65 per cent is direct appropriation from the taxpayers. The money pays for salaries, services, utilities, maintenance, repairs, academic programs and student services.

— about 25 per cent is derived from trust funds or fee-based revenues. These funds come from dormitory rents, dining halls fees, student activities tax, campus center fees and others. The fee-based revenues mainly go toward running the dormitories and paying for the bonds that were issued to build the buildings.

— about 10 per cent is derived from federal grants or-and other grants and contracts. This money is usually channeled into specific programs or research activities.

— the final and smallest source, about two per cent comes from grant money which is given the university to cover a few of the fixed costs.

The route to forming the budget is one that begins a year ahead of time with various committees and boards submitting requests and then reviewing the final products.

Campus votes today on class 'moratorium'

By JOE MAHONEY
Staff Reporter

Some 1900 students overwhelmingly ratified a referendum at the University Community Meeting last night calling for "classroom politicalization" on Monday followed by a two day "moratorium" of classes.

The referendum, which will be presented today and tomorrow on a campus-wide ballot, also calls for a State House demonstration on Wednesday.

During the two-day moratorium, students will conduct "teach-ins" and a "massive telephone and letter writing campaigns to parents and legislators."

The only item on the referendum that provoked discussion at the three-hour meeting was whether to term the classroom boycott a "strike" or "moratorium", The word "moratorium" won on a hand vote.

The meeting was called by a town meeting last week which ratified nine "demands" against proposed budget cuts, tuition increases and fee hikes.

Michael Albert, community meeting chairperson said in response to one of the demands, Campus Center Director John Corker called a meeting with Student Center for Educational Research Director Larry Magid at which Corker expressed willingness to cooperate with student researchers and the press in records access efforts.

Ann Ferguson of the ad hoc Socialist Faculty Caucus (SFC) said the SFC "strongly supports the students in their struggle" and "is deeply committed to an adequate educational budget."

Nobody should have to pay for this economic crisis by having raises in fees," said Ferguson. She said the SFC would support the actions called for by the students, including a strike.

Student Action Committee negotiating team member, Miguel Rivera, said, "We are going to win this battle even if it gets us in a lot of trouble."

"We are going to make life hard for (Gov.) Dukakis if he makes it hard for us," said Rivera.

Ellen Gavin, another student negotiator, said, "There is every kind of student advisory committee, but there is no real student input or power."

No percentage of affirmative votes was determined in the constitution of a moratorium mandate in the referendum.

Wood to reveal cuts today

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

UMass President Robert Wood announced to the Student Senate last night that he will reveal his plan for administration cuts at a Boston Press conference today. His 15 minute address was made before 50 senators and was followed by a half hour of close questioning by the senators.

Throughout his 15-minute speech, Wood indicated his support of student demands for no budget cuts and said, "Any cut is not possible without hurting faculty or students.

"I've indicated that last year's budget is not feasible, and ten per cent less is certainly not feasible either, especially considering that we've opened the library, are about to open the fine arts building, and we don't want to cut back on enrollments."

Wood was not in favor of a student union or of autonomy for the graduate or undergraduate student senates. "Nobody in this university from the trustees on down has autonomy," he said.

In reference to a student boycott of classes, Wood said, "I ask you to consider the advocacy of a strike, the effect of a strike. It's a judgemental fact for you to decide."

The President said that nothing is going to happen in the summer as regards to the budget, but asked that an alert group be set up by the student senate which would continue the battle for the budget during the summer.

Wood declined an invitation from the senators to attend the University Town Meeting.

DEMANDS:

Bromery likes some; will say so today

By CINDY ROGERS
MDC staff

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said last night that he will respond favorably to some of the demands voted on by a University Town Meeting.

A formal reply to all the demands will be issued today.

Bromery called the nine demands "diverse and diffused" saying he could only address himself to a few demands.

"I am a strong supporter of low tuition in public higher education," he said.

Bromery added that "as far as innovative non-traditional programs such as BDIC and UYA...I participated in their birth and development and I am going to see they do not disappear or get cut first."

Bromery said it was difficult to discuss budget cuts because the university has only been given "budget targets and threats."

However, he said it would be misleading to say "we are not going to cut programs, x, y, or z. We don't know how severe the budget cut is going to be."

He said he felt that it would be "premature" to expect the trustees or administration to guarantee that programs won't get cut.

On the issue of a strike, Bromery said "I think that the students involved have identified the issues but haven't recognized the best tactics in this time."

He added that students were using the tactics of the 60's. "The students have to carefully consider tactics they are going to use in demonstration in context of the state's severe financial problems."

He said he believes that a student strike on campus will have no impact on the governor, the legislature or on the general public.

Strike issues

What are we faced with?

Through Progressive News Service

The Student Action Committee prepared the following information in order to acquaint students with the issues concerning the strike, and the actions being considered in conjunction with a strike:

WHAT ARE WE FACED WITH?

University Budget: Dukakis is pushing for a 10 per cent cut, some sources say that he is after 30 per cent of the UMass budget. The latter cut, Wood, claims, will mean a reduction in the student enrollment of 9000 and a cut in non-student full time employees of up to 1800.

Tuition: The legislature expected to double tuition for next semester (tuition goes directly to the state treasury, with no guarantee that it will result in more funds for the University.

Financial Aid: There is likely to be 50 per cent decrease in financial aid for the next semester (even by the state's own standards, there already exists a $50 million gap between aid given and aid warranted.)

Housing: We are facing a rent increase of $70 to $100 and mandatory dorm living extended to those 21 and over.

Food Services: Dining Commons will remain mandatory, with a $40 facilities fee for non-users.

Academic Departments: Budget cuts will further overcrowd classrooms due to cut backs in teaching assistants and the probable elimination of special programs. Also, F's will be reduced to 10 days. Students will continue being excluded from equal participation in academic policy-making.

Campus Center: $54 of student's Campus Center Fee ($62) is still going in interest payments to wealthy bond-holders. The debt service of the Campus Center is borne completely by students.

Student Employees: Students face continued wage slavery and layoffs.

Minority Enrollment: There will be a further decline in enrollment of already proportionately unrepresented groups.

Women's Study Centers and Third World Centers: These are threatened with elimination.

Affirmative Action: The continued non-compliance with federal Affirmative Action laws.

Day Care: There may be a continued neglect by the University to student mothers and fathers.

Campus Parking: We are faced with inflated charges and inequitable allocation of parking spaces; and a sleazy towing service.

WHAT CAN WE DO?

1. Boycott Classes (Strike) This would mean witholding our bodies and our minds from the classroom and the traditional university ratrace. The significance of the strike would be three fold:

— A symbolic protest in that the University administration and the State House, demonstrating student unity around the demands.

' There would be time to discuss and educate each other around our problems as students, in order to be building alternatives.

— It would be a setting in which to initiate further actions which will force concessions to our demands, e.g. tuition and fee boycott, and massive grass-roots lobbying.

2. Boycott Tuition & Fees. We would deposit all or part of our tuition and fee monies in an escrow account (in a bank) to be forwarded to the University upon written agreement to all or part of our demands. It would include a provision that, if by a certain date (e.g. Sept. 1) we had a certain percentage of the student body participating in the boycott, then it would proceed. But if student participation were below that percentage, then the money would be forwarded to the University.

3. Lobby and demonstrate at the State House:

— Massive phone calling and letter writing to legislators by students, their parents, and other University interest groups.

— Demonstration at the State House on April 30 (when the legislature votes on tuition) in conjunction with the other UMass campuses and state colleges.

— Demonstrate with outher groups statewide, who will be protesting the state government's cuts in education, welfare and human services.

There are still many possibilities, anyone wishing to provide input, is asked to contact the Student Action Committee (SAC) in the Council Chambers on the second floor of the Student Union.

Recent federal statistics show:

State ranks low in education spending

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

The most recent federal statistics on state spending for public higher education show Massachusetts is not a big spender, but has significantly improved its position in the last ten years.

The figures, published last spring in the Chronicle of Higher Education, a Washington-based tabliod newspaper, show Massachusetts 49th in two categories — spending per capital and spending as a percentage of private income.

Most the figures were put together by federal agencies and reported in 1973. They also show the Bay State sixteenth in total spending and thirty-first per student.

The four categories, comparable rankings and analysis follow:

—Total appropriated amount for public higher education. The source is a University of Illinois researcher, M.M. Chambers. Massachusetts placed sixteenth with reported expenditures of $200 million. However, that ranking would jump two places, to fourteenth, if the state was ranked by the $241 million figure quoted by Education Secretary Paul Parks.

The five highest states, in order, were: California, New York, Illinois, Michigan and Texas. Wisconsin placed tenth.

—Spending per student. In this category, Massachusetts placed thirty-first with an average per student appropriation of $2,179. Reported by the U.S. Office of Education.

Secretary of Education Paul Parks said last month in an interview he thinks "per student" figures are the most meaningful way to judge UMass' budget request.

At UMass-Amherst, the per student appropriations are $2,980, according to Warren W. Gulko, director of the Office of Budgeting and Institutional Studies.

Federal reporting procedure may vary from state to state, and Bay State figures include state and community colleges, which account for the decreased per student figure.

Among other states with higher per student appropriation's are: California, thirtieth, $2,204; Connecticut, 12, $2,648; Florida, 7, $2,855; Illinois, 5, $2,914; Michigan, 16, $2,490; New York, 2, $3,515; North Carolina, 4, $3,025; Rhode Island, 9, $2,752; South Carolina, 3, $3,409 and Wisconsin, 14, $2,542.

The top five spenders per student, in order, are: Alaska, New York, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Illinois.

—Spending regarding the state population. Source was a state's appropriation divided by its people in 1970. It ranked tenth in spending by this measure.

To reach the top of this category, Massachusetts would have to spend far more than other states — because it is the tenth most populated.

—Spending per $1000 of personal income. Massachusetts again

Coalition insists on NUKE shutdowns

By DIANE UNGER
Staff Reporter

The Alternative Energy Coalition (AEC) insisted yesterday on the immediate shutdown of two area nuclear power plants, Vermont Yankee and Yankee Rowe, at a public hearing on nuclear safety held in the UMass Campus Center.

Twenty-six speakers testified before the nine-member Governor's Commission on Nuclear Safety, and before almost 100 interested listeners in a three-hour hearing.

The Amherst-based AEC said its investigations revealted that personnel at the Rowe plant were unable to locate their emergency evacuation plan during a personal visit. The town clerk could not find one either. And neither knew the procedures, the anti-nuclear power group spokesman, Francis Koster, charged.

Both plants, they revealed, had never had an emergency drill. And the telephone number of a state nuclear incidents investigatory body remained unanswered when the AEC called one evening last summer.

Federal law requires nuclear power plants to create, maintain in up-to-date fashion and test evacuation plans yearly.

"Until proof of safety can be shown to my satisfaction, the Montague plant will only be build over my dead body," nuclear tower-toppler Sam Lovejoy vowed.

Lovejoy was acquitted in court last year of toppling a weather tower at the proposed site of the Montague nuclear power plant.

He said at the hearing that all present plants "should be shut down 'till radioactive wastes can be coped with." He also insisted the public be made aware of the possibility and danger of sabotage on these plants.

Lovejoy admonished the utilities for allegedly bribing the public. He said they were told taxes would decrease "at least 90 per cent" if they conceded to the building of the plant.

Commission chairman George W. Rathjens, a professor of political science at MIT, alotted each speaker five minutes, in an attempt to preserve the vitality in the lengthy, controversial hearing.

The Commission was created by executive order in August, 1974 by former Gov. Francis W. Sargent to examine existing safeguards for nuclear plants operating in the Commonwealth and to investigate public health and safety aspects of this activity.

Representatives from Northeast Utilities as well as the suppliers of their nuclear systems, General Electric and Westinghouse, spoke of their "outstanding safety records" of the past and the "extremely small risk" anticipated for future operations.

A spokesman for General Electric said reactors were safe because they were a "desirable, clean source of energy." In an aside good-naturedly received by the audience he said that nuclear power plants were safe "because that's GE's business."

Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), the Sierra Club and a number of students from various environmental and conservation groups also offered their views.

Their remarks often met with applause from the audience, while GE, Westinghouse and Northeast Utilities testimony was met with silence.

Other speakers included Raymond Koffinger, an ecologist living in Montague and David R. Inglis, a UMass physics professor and co-worker on the atom bomb project.

"When I learned the plant was to be built, I was dismayed," Koffinger said. "When I learned there was a transmission line running through my yard, I was even more dismayed."

Other areas touched on at the hearing were our dependence on foreign oil as a fuel, and the economics of coal versus atomic energy.

Carl Andaninni, director of Yankee's nuclear plants, said "energy can be generated with nuclear power at one half the cost of alternative powers."

A resident of the Rowe area where the plant is established, Andaninni expressed the belief that "nuclear power and man can live and work together harmoniously."

The Commission plans to submit its final report with recommendations to Governor Michael S. Dukakis this summer.

Additional testimony is invited by writing to: Massachusetts Comm. on Nuclear Safety, Department of Public Health, Room 360, 600 Washington Street, Boston, Massachusetts 02111.

Rent control issue still alive in Amherst

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

A group of concerned tenants called rent control a community problem in a meeting last night at Jones Library in Amherst center.

Bill Sage, a tenant of Puffton Village, said, "Rent control isn't just the student's problem. It's every tenant's problem.

"In the past, people thought rent control was only for students," he continued. "Not all tenants are students. Rent control involves elderly persons on fixed incomes, people who are unemployed, the handicapped, the list can go on."

Sage said because rent control involves all tenants, measures should be taken collectively so the concerned tenants will not become "just an exclusive club."

Carol Moskowitz, a UMass student and ex-Housing Authority Director, said it is time to consider rent control for several reasons. "First, because of zoning by-laws, and second, because of the specter of students moving out of dorms en masse.

"Now is the time for rent control in terms of people's openness," she added.

Moskowitz said, although rents rise about $10 per year, money is not the major difficulty. The major difficulty is attitudinal change.

"Landlords," she continued, "can determine who lives where. There is a definite bias against low income tenants."

Citing a study made by Larry Magid of the Student Center for Educational Research, Sage said Amherst's low vacancy rate shows a shortage of housing.

"We need more housing," he added, "but until we get it, what's going to keep tenants from leaving."

Sage said a $50,000 study authorized by the state legislature proves rent control is without harm. The report, carried out by Harbridge House, is "not just some fly by night report."

"The Globe said, 'It's not a question of is it good, but of where it is needed,'" he added.

Students eligible to vote, run for office of TOC club

This is the first in a two part series on the Top of the Campus Inc., to be concluded in next Monday's paper.

By SAMUEL HASSAN
Staff Reporter

There are 13,200 members of the Top of the Campus Inc., all who are eligible to vote or run for one of eleven positions up for re-election on Wednesday May 7 at 6 p.m. Campus Center room 904-908.

Nominations for president, clerk, treasurer and eight TOC Inc. board of directors, all one year positions, will be made at the open meeting.

TOC Club president Sidney Myers said last week, "I won't run again. I was one of the incorporators of the corporation and have been affiliated with it since its inception."

Myers has been president of the club for two years and is also the University attorney for the Amherst Campus.

The TOC, incorporated in 1969, exists to hold the alcoholic beverage license and to set policy regarding its purchase and distribution, according to Peter Gluckler of the UMass News Bureau.

Presently, only two of the 11 member board are students although a vast majority of the club members are students.

Craig Stuart, business manager of the CC is treasurer of the TOC Inc. Stuart said, "The state cannot sell liquor so there must be a private corporation."

The TOC Inc. is the legal buyer of record for all alcoholic beverages sold in the Campus Center including the Hatch and the Bluewall.

According to Stuart, $160,000 in alcoholic beverage purchases were made between July 1974 and March 1975.

Dorritt Kinder, CC beverage manager does the actual buying, acting as an agent for the TOC Inc. Kinder is also one of the eight TOC Board of Directors.

Anthony Tartaglia is the student employee who was fired from his position as acting assistant beverage department manager.

Tartaglia, also clerk for the TOC Inc. was fired by John Corker, CC Director.

Corker also sits on the board of directors and has refused to give reason for the firing.

Tartaglia said he would like to see more of a cross-section of the University on the TOC Board of Directors.

He said he will accept nomination to the clerk's post he now holds if it is made at the upcoming election meeting.

Tartaglia worked for Dorritt Kinder in the beverage department handling security, entertainment and cash responsibilities.

More on the TOC Inc. next week.

Indochina developments

Ford views future

NEW ORLEANS, La. (AP) — President Ford declared last night that the Indochina war was over for the United States, and he called on Americans to "write a new agenda for the future."

The President told an audience of Tulane University students that he was saddened by the events in Indochina, but he said "they do not portend the end of the world nor the end of America's leadership in the world."

In a prepared speech that a White House spokesman billed as the first of the post-Vietnam era, the President said that "American can again regain the sense of pride that existed before Vietnam."

Cambodia facts vague

By United Press International

A report from Peking monitored in Belgrade yesterday said Prince Norodom Sihanouk had asked the Khmer Rouge in Cambodia to repair an airfield at Angkor.

But there were few details about affairs in Cambodia in the aftermath of the war and the fall of the capital at Phnom Penh. Tanjug, the Yugoslav news agency, quoting sources close to Siganouk, said only that life in Cambodia was returning to normal.

1st refugees arrive

TRAVIS AFB, Calif. (UPI) — The first wave of thousands of fleeing South Vietnamese refugees arrived in the United States yesterday.

Authorities warned of possible health problems connected with the influx, which the State Department said would reach 130,000.

Two planes loaded with 354 Vietnamese refugees from beleaguered Saigon landed at Travis AFB, 60 miles northeast of San Francisco, and within an hour, after quick customs and immigration checks, they headed on to connecting flights to other points throughout the nation.

Senate passes aid, troop authorization

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate yesterday approved $200 million in mercy aid for South Vietnam including authority for President Ford to use troops to evacuate Americans and some South Vietnamese.

The vote was 75 to 17.

But the House was still working on its $327 million version of a similar aid bill, grinding through a sometimes angry and partisan debate on the evacuation issue and the potential dangers of sending U.S. forces back to Vietnam even for limited purposes of assisting evacuation.

Once the House completes its work, the two bills will have to be reconciled by a House-Senate conference.

Before clearing its version of the mercy bill, the Senate beat back several Democratic attempts to restrict or kill completely any funds for evacuation and any authorization for the President to use troops in the effort. Republicans denounced these proposals as part of a "mini-filibuster against mercy" and they got scant support.

The Senate legislation puts strict limitations on how Ford can use the U.S. troops in any evacuation effort.

It would permit the use of American troops to rescue South Vietnamese only as part of the withdrawal of Americans.

In trying to speed House action on its version of the bill, a House leader disclosed earlier Wednesday that the number of U.S. officials and their dependents in Saigon has been reduced to less than 1,000 by Wednesday.

The Senate bill stressed the importance of getting as many Americans and their dependents out of South Vietnam as possible right now.

Ford would be allowed to use armed forces to assist the evacuation of endangered foreign nationals along with the Americans only after he certifies to Congress that every diplomatic effort had been made to terminate the threat to the foreigners and their lives were still in jeopardy.

During the debate, critics of the bill expressed concern that Ford could use the evacuation contingency fund —$100 million of the $200 million total, with the other $100 earmarked for humanitarian purposes — as a cover for further military aid to Saigon.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., who supported the bill, acknowledged such a diversion in the use of evacuation funds might happen.

He said the evacuation contingency funds "might have to be used 101 ways. It may even have to be used to pay to get people out of there."

But Humphrey opposed all efforts to restrict Ford's evacuation authority beyond those already written into the bill.

"The idea is to give the President flexibility," he said. "Otherwise, we will be telling the President to give them 'Care packages' and evacuate them by piggyback."

Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., said the Vietnam evacuation contingency fund was "merely a ransom. That is what it is." But Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., described it as "an insurance policy."

The Senate bill also:

— Requires Ford to certify that the use of U.S. troops to evacuate nationals will continue only so long as Americans are also being evacuated.

Viet Cong reject cease fire plan

Compiled from Wires

PARIS — The Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government yesterday rejected Saigon's offer of an unconditional cease-fire and peace talks as a U.S. "maneuver" to stave off South Vietnam's collapse.

A PRG spokesman said Vietnamese Communists would not talk with South Vietnam's new president, Tran Van Huong, because Huong belonged to the "warmongering clique of Nguyen Van Thieu in the pay of the United States."

Thieu resigned and Huong succeeded to the presidency Monday.

Nguyen Xuan Phong, South Vietnam's negotiator at the stalled political talks with the PRG, flew to Saigon Wednesday. His office said he wanted to consult with the new chief executive.

The Viet Cong spokesman said Huong's offer of unconditional talks "come at a time when the puppet administration and army are driven into a lamentable situation and while the Ford administration seeks by all means to get from the Congress an urgent military aid and the right to intervene with military forces under the guise of an evacuation of American residents.

"It is clear that this is merely a maneuver of the Ford administration aimed at shoring up the Saigon puppet regime to prevent its collapse and to cover up neo-colonialist designs by peace negotiations in order to win from the Congress permission to continue the war."

Viet Cong and North Vietnamese forces have been in position for 48 hours to overrun Saigon, Western intelligence sources said yesterday.

The intelligence sources, who are usually accurate, speculated that the Communist side is delaying a final kill while it watches the rapidly moving political events in Saigon following the resignation of President Nguyen Van Thieu and awaits the completion of the American evacuation.

The government command announced the loss Wednesday of the 20th provincial capital — Ham Tan on the coast — and it appeared obvious a 21st — Xuan Loc — has been overrun despite official denials. The provincial capitals — there are 44 in South Vietnam — have fallen one after another since early March.

The menacing stance of the overwhelmingly powerful Communist-led force around Saigon has been measured by the usual array of radio intercept devices, aircraft infrared photography and agent reports. But most of all, it is the obvious, methodical forward motion of Viet Cong and North Vietnamese units on the ground that carries the message that doomsday for Saigon could be near.

It generally is believed the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong can strike any time they wish, and the question remaining is how much of a struggle will be mounted to defend Saigon.

One Western intelligence assessment has as many as 18 or 19 Communist-led infantry divisions in the southern part of South Vietnam, a force numbering nearly 200,000 regular troops.

news summary

Portuguese campaign

LISBON (UPI) — Portuguese political parties drummed up support for hundreds of rallies yesterday, plastering posters on Lisbon walls and slapping leaflets on car windows in an all-out climax to campaigning for Friday's elections.

All campaigning must halt at midnight to give the population a one-day respite from the three weeks of intensive electioneering before the polling for a 247-member constituent assembly.

The Communist party, which was expected to hold the biggest meeting in a Lisbon soccer stadium, made a concerted effort to draw out supporters, cruising the streets with loudspeakers and pasting posters on city walls.

Death bill advances

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts House yesterday agreed with the Senate's version of a capital punishment bill, moving the legislature one step closer to a confrontation with Gov. Michael S. Dukakis over the death penalty.

Senate President Kevin Harrington, D-Salem, who rarely votes on any issue, has said he would cast a crucial vote to sustain the veto and keep the bill from becoming law.

Radio blinds child

BELFAST (UPI) — A 10-year-old boy turned the "on" switch of a transistor radio in his father's Belfast bar yesterday and the radio, crammed with explosives and nails, blew up in his face and blinded him in both eyes.

Police said doctors also had to amputate Tony Meli's right arm.

Two of the boy's brothers suffered serious facial injuries in the blast and a third had to be treated for shock.

The bombing, in the west Belfast cafe owned by the children's Irish-Italian father, Maserati Meli, was characterized by police as the latest in a series of random sectarian attacks involving Northern Ireland's feuding Protestant and Roman Catholic communities.

Welfare cutbacks attacked

Liberal legislators rap Dukakis plan

BOSTON [UPI] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' plan to cut next year's welfare spending by $311 million came under attack yesterday by the liberal co-chairmen of a key Massachusetts legislative committee.

Sen. Jack H. Backman, D—Brookline, and Rep. David Mofenson, D—Newton, both supporters of Dukakis' gubernatorial candidacy last year, criticized the governor's recently announced plan as short-sighted poorly conceived and "inhumane.

At a news conference the lawmakers said it was irresponsible for Dukakis to propose such massive cuts without submitting to the legislature backup data to explain broad policy positions and firm regulations and bills to allow for full debate on hard issues.

Without such details from the governor — who is on vacation — "it is literally impossible for the legislature, the media or the public to analyze properly the proposals since who can argue with the general theory of saving money," Backman said in prepared remarks.

Backman, long a welfare advocate, once served with Dukakis in the Brookline delegation in the Massachusetts House, but has been highly critical of proposed cutbacks in the new administration.

Mofenson called Dukakis' proposed welfare cutbacks "remarkably short sighted in conception, misleading in articulation and generally insensitive to human needs."

Mofenson specifically criticized as "penny wise and pound foolish" plans to cut back programs that are 90 per cent reimbursible from the federal government such as family planning for former and potential welfare recipients.

"For a $40,000 investment," he said, "we could get $400,000 of services and reap long term benefits instead of long term costs."

While highly critical of the governor, Backman and Mofenson both side stepped questions about the position or potential role in the dispute of the legislative leadership of Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D—Salem, and House Speaker David M. Bartley, D—Holyoke, claiming it was premature to seek their support until the governor submitted facts to support and explain his public statements on the subject.

Israel official says US delaying weapons

By United Press International

Israeli Defense Minister Shimon Peres said yesterday there is a "definite holdup" in the shipment of weapons from the United States and warned against the possibility of an embargo.

Another government official said Washington is trying to pressure Israel into a more conciliatory stand in negotiations with the Arab nations. "There is a definite holdup in the supply of weapons from the United States," Peres told students at Tel Aviv University. "We must concern ourselves that this does not become an embargo."

Israeli government officials say all U.S. arms contracted for are being delivered on schedule, but there have been persistent reports that promised F15 fighter-bombers and Lance ground-to-ground missiles are being delayed while the United States reassesses its Middle East policy.

"It (the U.S. policy reassessment) is part of the continued pressure on Israel to try and influence Israel in certain directions," the official said. "It's obvious that the United States wants us to do certain things we're not ready to do such as offering new suggestions that would be more palatable to the Arabs."

Harambe, Jazz Workshop feature Andrew White 3rd

By Black News Service

The Afro-American Society and Harambe along with the UMass Jazz Workshop of the Music Department will present the John Coltrane Suite featuring Andrew White III.

White graduated from Howard University with a degree in music theory, and has received fellowships from the WGMS Berkshire Music Center, the John Hay Whitney Foundation and Darthmouth College, as well as grants from the Rockefeller Foundation. White also studied oboe, English horn, orchestral and chamber music at Conservatoire Nationale Superieur de Musique de Paris, Center of Creative and Performing Arts at SUNY in Buffalo, New York and at Tanglewood.

White has an impressive background as arranger-composer and also performs on alto and Fender bass. He has performed extensively with such orchestras as The American Ballet Theatre Orchestra, the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Howard University Band and Symphonetta, as well as with the J.F. Quintet, Stanley Turrentine, Kenny Clarke, the New Jazz Trio and the Otis Redding Show. White has also performed on numerous recording dates with McCoy Tyner, The Fifth Dimension, Weather Report and Stevie Wonder as well as with his own group.

White has filled an incredible amount of accomplishment into his 33 years. Not only is he recognized as one of the most brilliant jazz saxophonist today, he is a funky rock and pop musician, a prize-winning symphonic oboist, composer and arranger, producer of seven of his own albums under his own label (Andrew's Music), and his most monumental accomplishment: the transcription of 209 classic John Coltrane saxophone solos.

White transcribed the John Coltrane solos — 1,000 pages of the incredibly rich and most influential improvisatory solos that changed the direction of modern music — "to expose the other quarter of the Coltrane's work has been spoken for — sound, technique and esthetic." The drummer for the suite will be Charlie Persip, of the Collective Black Artist Ensemble. Persip has performed with most of the major name bands in Black Music including Archie Shepp. The Concert will be at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Admission is free to the public.

Mayoral hopeful to speak tonight at Project 10

A yet-unannounced candidate for mayor of Northampton may make a surprise appearance tonight at Project 10's Political Campaigns Seminar in Pierpont Hall at 7 p.m., according to a campaign aide.

This will be one of the first campaign forums for Harry "Buzz" Chapman, who is expected to announce his candidacy for the Democratic mayoral nomination later this month. In doing so, Chapman would be the first candidate to challenge incumbent Northampton Mayor Sean Dunphy in the city's Democratic primary election this September.

Dunphy is expected to see re-election to a fourth term.

Chapman, owner of the Open Pantry in Florence, is a City Councillor in Northampton's Ward Six.

The public is invited to attend.

Debaters compile outstanding record

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

The UMass debate team returned from the National Debate Tournament in California yesterday with the best record they had ever compiled at the tournament.

John Adams and John Cross placed 30th out of the 64 teams which qualified for the tournament with a 4-4 record, winning 12 of 24 ballots.

Prof. Ronald J. Matlon, director of the Debate Union, said, "We went into the final round of debate with a 4-3 record. If we had won the final round, we would have had the 5-3 record and 14 ballots necessary to qualify for octafinals, which include the top 16 teams."

In the two other national tournaments which UMass qualified for, Matlon said the team compiled 2-6 records. Last year they placed 55th.

"I'm very pleased," he continued. "I think our chances for qualifying in octafinals next year are extremely good."

The national tournament, which occurred April 18-21, took place at the University of the Pacific at Stockton, California.

Adams and Cross beat the teams of Augustana, East Illinois, Iowa, and California State at Fulerton, while losing to Kansas, North Colorado, Northwestern, and West Georgia.

The Debate Union's individual events (I.E.) team will be competing at the National I.E. Tournament in Niagara Falls, New York, April 24-26.

Mike McCambridge, director of the I.E. team, said, "This is our first year of existence and our first year in the nationals. Regardless of how we do, it's still a very good ending to a very good season."

McCambridge said he is hopeful the team will make the semifinals or finals in some events.

Nick Burnett, Paul Goselin, Jill Peltin, Beth Rose, and Martha Seif will be representing UMass in the tournament.

I need a name!

The University Library is looking for a name, and all students are welcome to submit their suggestions. In order for the name to be accepted, it must be a deceased person who was active in the state, nationally known and had some affiliation with the university.

Nominations will be accepted in the lobby of the library until Tuesday, May 6. Possible names which have already been submitted include, Martin Luther King, Emily Dickinson, Dr. Rand and Dr. DuBois.

Teaching assistants to organize union

Teaching assistants here are beginning to organize a union. They are expecting layoffs, wage cuts and increased work loads, and the proposed union, such as the unions at the Universities of Wisconsin and Michigan, can provide protection against these fears. It may also join power with unions of faculty or students, if they are formed. A meeting will be held today at 3:30 in Rm. 105 Campus Center.

ranks forty-ninth. This category and the one before are related, and again Massachusetts suffers because it is one of the richest states in the country.

According to the 1974 U.S. Statistical Abstract, the state's average income per resident was $5,233 — placing it twelfth nationwide. UMass President Robert C. Wood has been quoted as saying the state ranked fifth.

To arrive at this ranking, The Chronicle divided the state appropriation by the July, 1973 population of the state.

The top five states in order of appropriations per $1000 of average personal income are: Alaska, South Carolina, Mississippi, Utah and Arizona. California ranked eighteenth; Illinois, 37; New York, 23; and Wisconsin 6. The latter states are among those having public universities of high quality.

Secretary Parks and some legislators say Massachusetts is a special case and does not need to support higher education heavily because of many prestigious private institutions within its boundaries.

But UMass officials disagree, saying the privates do not guarantee any more college spaces to state youth than state schools. They say the privates should make this guarantee.

Moreover, Massachusetts ranks third among all the states in the amount of increased appropriation over the last ten years, adjusted for inflation. In the last two years, however, that ranking has dropped to twenty sixth.

As Saigon crumbles

Soon the ships, the planes, the tanks and the soldiers will be gone and as the smoke and flames die down the inhabitants will once again pick up their tools and begin to rebuild their land.

The longest war is finally dying down.

The Americans are being chased out, soon it will be all over and for a change the good will have triumphed over evil, right over wrong and rigid Communism over shallow democracy. The North Vietnamese guerillas will have completely crushed the Americanized puppet-regime of Thieu. South Vietnam is now North Vietnam, only Saigon remains.

There'll be no bloodbath like the one at My Lai, no slaughter of the refugees who became refugees as a result of South Vietnamese political and war strategy. These refugees do not fear Communism and Communism does not fear the refugees. But now thousands of guilt-ridden Americans find themselves abandoning all of the homeless American orphans to open their arms in welcome to the Vietnamese orphans.

Those who sought to profit from the war, the corporate power-structure |remember that term|, the C.I.A., and the U.S. government in general can now see their dreams of controlling this strategic military position in the East as the last pocket of resistance, Saigon, slowly comes tumbling down.

As an earlier generation had to face at the end of the Korean War, this generation is now faced with the side-effects of the war which invariably turn out pretty good for some of the bad guys who threw us into it. Inflation, which only means increased profits for our big-business bad guys, recession, the poor will suffer and become more reluctant to fight the exploitation of a capitalist system, and depression, which means that instead of J. Paul Getty owning three Rolls Royces, he will own only two.

Yes, the Vietnam War is finally winding down, but even as Saigon crumbles we must not forget that the bad guys who failed in their attempt to secure themselves a goldmine in the east are still around to try again.

Where will the next Vietnam be? How much richer will the bosses get? How many more poor must die???

'F' is a fact

Richard Pine's letter against the return of the "F" into the GPA was academic nonsense. He missed the essential point of taking a course. When a student registers for a course, he, in effect, says he will try to discipline himself in order to learn something about the subject matter. If a student received an "F" in the course, then his cum should reflect the fact that he was not capable of learning something which he wanted to learn.

Towards tomorrow

If the problems that face all people, regardless of race or sex, are to be solved, it is to be done through understanding. However, if we are to understand each other, we must first come together and communicate. This is, in part, what the Wounded Knee Support Committee has been trying to do.

It is the Committee's hope to establish a weekend of exchange beginning May 8, 1975. But since we live in a society where transportation must be paid for, housing must be paid for, and even our food cost money, we need funds to bring people to UMass to establish the exchange.

To date, our attempts to find the necessary funds have been unsuccessful; funds secured thus far do not even meet the traveling costs we would incur in bringing people here.

As a result, what could be an excellent opportunity for coming to a deeper understanding of the Native American, his problems, his religion, his history and his future goals, is seriously threatened.

We are asking any groups, organizations, or individuals who feel they could provide honorarium or help cover traveling costs to please contact the Wounded Knee Support Committee through the Vet's Coalition Office in the Student Union. Working together now, will allow us to live together tomorrow in peace and harmony based on understanding.

EDITORIAL OPINIONS

Support the moratorium

Today and tomorrow in the dormitories and at tables on the Campus Center Concourse, a referendum is being held to decide on a boycott of classes for Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

The Collegian supports such a boycott under the conditions for alternative actions discussed at last night's meeting.

A demonstration is being planned for Wednesday, the second day of the proposed moratorium, on the Boston Common, to show the Legislature that this is not just a two day vacation, but a statement of our position on the budget cuts. Caravans and buses will be going to Boston (the Collegian will be providing more information when it is available).

In addition to the Boston Demonstration, plans are being made to open up WATTS lines for students to call their legislators. A referral service will be available for those who don't know who their representatives are, and letter writing is urged, both by students and parents.

Workshops and teach-ins will be held on the moratorium days to inform people on the budget cuts and related information.

Monday has been designated as a day of politicizing in the classrooms. It is important that students do attend classes on that day, since discussion and organization is a necessary component in such a collective action.

A moratorium in itself can be an effective student action, but it is only a base for other action. In his speech before the Student Senate last night, Dr. Wood stressed the need for unity and a voice toward the Legislature. While we may not agree with all of Dr. Wood's actions, the point is clear that we must fight the battle on a unified front. Vote for a moratorium, and in addition, support the spirit of a moratorium with your actions next week.

All unsigned editorials represent the opinion of the majority of the Board of Editors.

Many students find it rather humiliating to request financial aid under the present circumstances.

Prime cut

By Jim Kassner

It's no secret that the state is in the midst of a severe economic crisis. The Governor has said that we must cut back in all areas of state government in order to salvage what's left of the economy, and as usual, UMass is no exception. It appears that somehow we're going to have to come up with a 10 per cent cut in University spending if we are to be consistent with the Governor's desires.

Amid all the rhetoric and name calling, the facts remain — someway, somehow, we're going to have to cut back — that's for sure. We have no choice. But we do have a choice as to where those cuts will come from and what form they'll take. If they come from academic programs and the like, there is a real possibility that many of the items on the semester bill will rise dramatically in price.

For example, housing costs may skyrocket $70 to $100. Also, board costs may be higher, especially if the proposed "facilities fee" is taken on (the reason for this, they say, is to erase the debt service on the dining commons). Looked at in perspective, it all adds up to this: deficiencies in student and academic programs, and reductions in staff and services. And if these reductions materialize there is a good chance that many people will not be able to return to this University next year.

Although this picture looks bleak, there are alternatives.

One of the most talked about is that of limiting budget cuts to non-academic areas, including Whitmore. There has also been talk of eliminating the mandatory dorm requirement, and substituting the dubious universal fee. The practicality of such a move is open to debate: for some, it may mean leaving the frying pan to go into the fire.

The people in Whitmore (and Boston) have an obligation to listen to the students who pay their salaries, and if we speak loud enough, the message will be heard. There are many campus organizations that have become active in this area, especially dealing with the proposed universal fee, and that's good. But others need to get involved. Rallies, such as that held last Tuesday, and other similar events upcoming are good examples of what we, as a university community must do to express our concern.

The fact is, we care. This is something that affects each and every person at UMass — we should care. About such tings as what is being done with our money, and about the types of services and the quality of the facilities that we have come to expect from this University.

But most importantly, we are making others cognizant of the fact that we care. As much as we pay our tuitions, we have a right to have a say in where our money is spent. If budget cuts are deemed necessary, there is nothing that we can do to prevent them. But if it means jeopardizing our chance for a good education, it seems ludicrous to allow them. The whole idea behind this University is that of the transferral of knowledge.

Why defeat its purpose?

Your right to strike

By the Student Action Committee

A strike is not a carnival or a celebration — but then there is not yet anything to celebrate. What there is is a problem of our education and thus of our lives. A problem of whether or not it is we who shall be cutback because others want public education to be hurt and because they want people of relatively little means instead of the rich to have to pay the price of the economic crunch.

A strike on this campus is a statement in support of our right to the fullest educational opportunities this state can generate. A vote to strike is a vote to tell Dukakis that he'd better reconsider his policies because we're not only displeased by them, but also ready to voice that displeasure, ready to organize, ready to hook up with other groups opposing his cutback policies, and ready if need be to fight for our rights.

Further to vote for and then participate in a two-day strike is to try and take some power over our lives. It is to get together and act collectively, to hold teach-ins allowing us to understand more about our school and about the present economic situation. It is a vote to begin working out further activities, possibly a demonstration at the State House or a fee withholding campaign. It is a vote to take the time necessary to continue the development of our own knowledge and motion so that we'll be able to generate steadily more effective and more massive campaigns against the proposed cutbacks and in favor of all Nine Town Demands.

When you think about whether to vote yes and to get others out to vote yes too, think carefully: Don't I want to exert some power over my life situation, don't I want to let Dukakis and the rest know about how I feel about his messing with my wellbeing, don't I want to rouse myself and take this opportunity to start breaking free from cynicism so as to act together with other students like real in-touch people — Don't I want to strike in the name of my dignity and in the name of solidarity with all the rest of the people here at UMass and throughout the state who are sick and tired of being controlled and ripped-off — Vote Yes To Strike — Its The Only Real Immediate Way To Most Loudly Express Your Desire To Learn And To Take Action On Your Own Life Needs.

The lie that came in from the old

Remember the cold war, the red scare, and the days when just the word "communism" brought fear to your lips?

Those of us who grew up in the late fifties and early sixties can recall our teachers warning us about the "evils of communism." No one exactly knew what a communist looked like, but we were sure that one had no less than two heads and no more than one eye.

Indeed, "blind fear" is the only term to ascribe the American attitude toward communism in the days of the iron curtain.

We were told the only good communist is a dead one, the communists are trying to take over the world, and if the communists aren't stopped, there will be a nuclear war.

These attitudes may seem ridiculous now, but if you can remember back to your early school days, you will recall that communism was a real fear. We had practiced air raids and teachers who told us the United States was great nation that was going to save the world for democracy.

After all, we were free. Free to think and believe what we pleased as long as it wasn't communism. This flaw in their theory didn't seem to bother the government. Communists were the enemy, and the world couldn't be free as long as the enemy was free.

"Communist control" were the words that made us tremble with fear, for we knew that communists brainwashed people.

Of course, the communists were plotting to take over the United States. Communists never thought or created; only plotted and connived.

The Catholic Church was especially enthusiastic in their fight against communism. They violated communist theory with both their Christian and capitalistic beliefs. They took their revenge by declaring that communists were forbidden entrance to "heaven."

In the late sixties, however, anti-communist attitudes had lost their popularity. When the "hippie generation" led the nation to a more leftist attitude, communist theory didn't seem so extreme. Even the most conservative of anti-communist supporters, had to concede a little when former President Nixon made his "summit meetings" to Russia and China.

But the communist victory in Indochina has, perhaps, brought the threat of a "communist takeover" back into the stream of American consciousness.

Now that we no longer blindly fear the communists, it is time we examine our motives during the cold war. What was it we feared the most, a war with China and Russia or a takeover from within our own country?

Moral: "ALLS WELL THAT'S ORWELL'S" (sorry couldn't resist)

We claimed to be saving the world for democracy, but democracy is supposedly freedom of thought. We were told that communist countries brainwashed their people so they would believe them and we could not allow the United States to be controlled by communism. With all the anti-communist propaganda, weren't the ends, somehow, lost in the means?

We were so afraid that the communist might control us, did we somehow fail to see who was really controlling us?

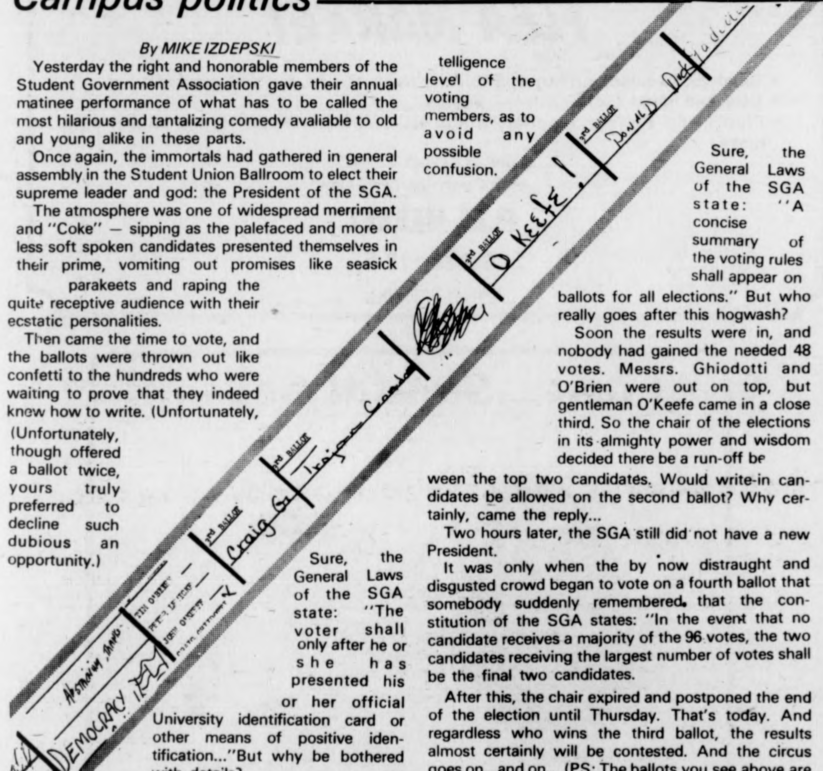
Campus politics

By MIKE IZDEPSKI



Yesterday the right and honorable members of the Student Government Association gave their annual matinee performance of what has to be called the most hilarious and tantalizing comedy avaliable to old and young alike in these parts.

Once again, the immortals had gathered in general assembly in the Student Union Ballroom to elect their supreme leader and god: the President of the SGA.

The atmosphere was one of widespread merriment and "Coke" — sipping as the palefaced and more or less soft spoken candidates presented themselves in their prime, vomiting out promises like seasick parakeets and raping the quite receptive audience with their ecstatic personalities.

Then came the time to vote, and the ballots were thrown out like confetti to the hundreds who were waiting to prove that they indeed knew how to write. (Unfortunately, (Unfortunately, though offered a ballot twice, yours truly preferred to decline such dubious an opportunity.)

Sure, the General Laws of the SGA state: "The voter shall only after he or she has presented his or her official University identification card or other means of positive identification..."But why be bothered with details?

The simplicity of the ballots was diligently kept down to the intelligence level of the voting members, as to avoid any possible confusion.

Sure, the General Laws of the SGA state: "A concise summary of the voting rules shall appear on ballots for all elections." But who really goes after this hogwash?

Soon the results were in, and nobody had gained the needed 48 votes. Messrs. Ghiodotti and O'Brien were out on top, but gentleman O'Keefe came in a close third. So the chair of the elections in its almighty power and wisdom decided there be a run-off between the top two candidates. Would write-in candidates be allowed on the second ballot? Why certainly, came the reply...

Two hours later, the SGA still did not have a new President.

It was only when the by now distraught and disgusted crowd began to vote on a fourth ballot that somebody suddenly remembered that the constitution of the SGA states: "In the event that no candidate receives a majority of the 96 votes, the two candidates receiving the largest number of votes shall be the final two candidates.

After this, the chair expired and postponed the end of the election until Thursday. That's today. And regardless who wins the third ballot, the results almost certainly will be contested. And the circus goes on...and on....(PS: The ballots you see above are genuine!)

Mike Izdepski is a Collegian Commentator

Hurry—Hurry—Hurry!

As Henry Ragin said, "the SGA is the circus that never ends." Tuesday night we witnessed another SGA farce that went under the mistaken nomer of an election.

After much talk this year of an open election, the Student Senate decided again that it would be too chancy to let students take control over their own lives and vote for who they wanted. What is even more amazing is the fact that after two or three ballots, write-in candidates were no longer allowed. It seems to me that the SGA got their election procedures from Generalissimo Franco and General Pinochet.

I am running on a platform of complete top to bottom change; Not liberal reformism. Not continuation of the status quo. COMPLETE CHANGE! It includes:

1) formulation by sitting down with the constituency of specific short, intermediate and long-range goals that reflect student needs. The present policy of reacting to crises is "inoperative".

2) upgrading of participation and communication with the populace as I do not see student government as a body to do things for people, but as an instrument to provide people with tools, resources, information and money to do it for themselves.

3)unionization is an absolute necessity and number one priority. SGA should be in the process of putting itself out of business as soon as possible to be replaced by a student union. Our powerlessness has been amply demonstrated over the past few years.

A possible solution to the election controversy is for Rick Savini to call for a referendum vote. It would give the people the opportunity to decide for themselves. Candidates could hold a forum in the ballroom and be subject to questioning from the people. If one lost in an open election, one should not mind. But to challenge a small closed group of two bit, third rate junior politicos and expect to have a chance is out of the question. I am in this race because I know there is a need for complete change, for student unionization, for control over our lives.

I appeal to any people interested in supporting my platform to come to the S.U.B. Thursday at 5 p.m. and witness "the greatest show on earth."

Honor thy SGA!

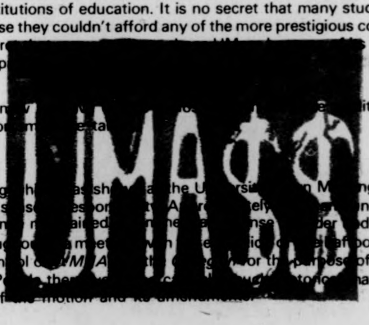
By BILL PARENT

The referendum is today.

This vote will determine whether or not to go along with a moratorium next week is unprecedented in public education. But one important aspect that will make or break the issue is student participation in workshops and demonstrations that have been planned.

The decision you make today is, obviously, yours. But be aware that we are not voting for a day off; we are voting on whether we will have a voice in what happens to UMass both next year and in the future.

According to The Chronicle of Higher Education, Massachusetts now ranks forty-ninth in the country for state spending on students. Such figures are shameful for a state which takes pride in its number of high cost private institutions of education. It is no secret that many students came here because they couldn't afford any of the more prestigious colleges. It is also no secr [illegible] size and its variety of p [illegible]



We are n [illegible] ities, action, some actio [illegible]

One thing that was made clear: our target is the state legislature, the enemy is the Governor, who is enjoying the rare political opportunity of being able to sway the State House in any direction he pleases. The way to the hearts of the representatives is clearly through their constituency who happen to be in large part, our own parents. Allying with both President Wood and our parents may be a strain on our principles but at this point in time it is a necessity.

As for the Governor, we need to remind him that students on this campus were instrumental in getting his campaign off the ground last spring. One can only wonder if MBTA Mike remembers the statements he once made to us in the Commonwealth Room about the importance of the public higher-education.

One can only hope that if more money isn't allocated to state colleges, they have the cash to support all the borderline students who will be standing in the unemployment lines next year.

I only hope that we all realize the importance of today's vote. Personally, as one who has been reading and editing stories on the budget for a number of months, now I feel that an educational moratorium would be one of the best things to happen at this campus and that the failure to follow through would be one of the gravest errors.

Vote for a moratorium as if your education depended on it. Because it does.

Dorm room-choosing to be held next week

"Room-Choosing for residence halls for the Fall Semester, 1975," will be held the week of April 28 – May 2, 1975. Students are to make all arrangements with the head of residence of the hall in which they wish to reside in the Fall. The general schedule below will be followed during Room-Choosing Week.

Monday – April 28 – Reserved for students who wish to sign up for the rooms in which they currently reside.

Tuesday – April 29 – Reserved for students who wish to sign up for available space within the hall they currently reside in.

Wednesday and Thursday – April 20 and May 1 – Reserved for students currently residing on campus who wish to sign up for available space in a residence hall other than the one in which they are currently residing.

Friday – May 2 – Reserved for students currently residing off-campus who wish to sign up for available space in residence halls.

Note: All students who wish to or are required by regulation to live on-campus are urged to take advantage of the Room-Choosing period. Students required to live on-campus are especially urged to do so or they will be randomly assigned housing and billed for such.

Questions concerning Room-Choosing should be directed to Heads of Residence, Area Directors and the Housing Office.

Vans to serve handicapped's needs

The Office of Handicapped Student Affairs has acquired two new Dodge vans to add to the mass transportation services on campus. However, these new vans offer transportation with a lift; hydraulic lifts, that is, capable of transferring and transporting wheelchair persons and other mobility disabled persons on campus. The vans will provide door-to-door service on campus. It is expected that these new vehicles will be particularly and immediately beneficial to persons with broken legs or sprained ankles.

The vans are available to fill special transportation needs from now until May 23, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on weekdays. No weekend service will be provided until next Fall.

To schedule transportation, call 545-0892. Please provide the following information: 1) name and phone number, 2) point of pick-up, 3) destination point and time due, 4) return trip needed, 5) estimated length of class-activity-appointment, 6) nature of disability if any. Confirmation will usually occur at the time of the request.

Judaic studies

There will be a meeting today for anyone interested in JUDAIC STUDIES. Information will be available on: courses, faculty, Outreach programs, major programs, study in Israel, special programs in Judaica, and opportunities for graduates. The meeting will take place in the 6th floor lounge of Thompson Hall, at 4:30 p.m. Refreshments will be served.

Backstage with Emmett Kelly Jr.

Tomorrow at 2:30 p.m., the Organization for Social Enrichment will be sponsoring a clown workshop called "Backstage with Emmett Kelly Jr. & Co." in the Colonial Lounge at the Student Union.

This will be the first time ever that Emmett Kelly and company makes such a presentation in an academic setting.

Emmett will make up his face and costume and explain his techniques and other information about the character he portrays. The clowns will demonstrate the art of clown make-up on volunteers.

Jazz workshop ensemble tonight

The UMass music department will present a concert by the UMass Jazz Workshop and small ensemble today.

The concert will be in three parts:

The small ensemble under the direction of Prof. Max Roach will perform contemporary arrangements of the students in the ensemble.

The UMass Jazz Workshop will perform compositions by local composers, "Rega-Rega" by Stephen Jaffe, and "Jazz Goes to Siwash" by John Talrico.

The concert is presented by the Department of Music and is open to the public without charge.

Stockbridge to hold 'classic' tomorrow

UMass and the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, is holding their 40th annual Livestock Classic tomorrow and Saturday, April 26. The entrants are four-year animal science majors at UMass, and laboratory animal technology and animal science majors at Stockbridge. The animals being shown are horses, beef and dairy cattle, sheep, swine, ponies, and oxen teams. There will be special events such as the baby animal parade, a pie eating contest, and the bucking barrel. Refreshments will be served Saturday, and after the classic is over, there will be a bar-b-que and a hayride. The public is invited free of charge to this exciting, fun filled event.

One of the many animals being featured.. A shot from last year's Annual Livestock Classic presented by the Stockbridge School of Agriculture shows one of the stars of the show and the sheep's master.

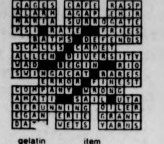
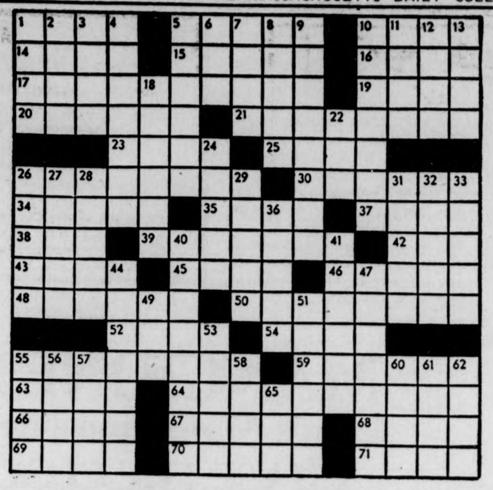
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved





Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, April 24 — Born today, you will as a child be uncommonly shy; you may even lack confidence to such a degree that you will be prevented from doing many of the ordinary things other children do with relative ease. As you mature, however, confidence and self-assertiveness will develop, so that by the time you reach adulthood, you should be able to take almost any bull by the horns successfully. It will do little good for parents or friends of those born on this date to attempt to force such children into confident action; only time will cure the case.

Whether man or woman, by the time you reach maturity, you will find that there is not enough within the home situation to satisfy you completely. On the other hand, careers may call in such abundance that you will have difficulty choosing among them. This will be especially true for you women who well may not have had the kind of education or training that leads to definite roles; thus, though you may get a late start, much more may be open to you than to your counterparts.

Basically well-organized, you have an extraordinary memory and have a knack for recalling precisely the right piece of information to enable you to move ahead at any given time. Seldom stuck for a solution to a problem, you have learned through years of quiet introspection how to bring all your inner forces into play when faced with difficulties. Thus, questions get answered quickly.

FRIDAY April 25

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A day in which actions speak louder than words. Even so, you may not be in any condition to act; planning is the next best thing!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Promises are not nearly as progressive as action. If you can do no more than talk sensibly and succinctly about a new project, you've accomplished something.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — There is a possibility of additional income fo ryou this morning — if you play your cards right. Don't divulge information prematurely.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — For best results keep strictly to the job at hand. If you attempt to branch out at this time, you may find yourself sadly behind schedule by day's end.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — A very strong day for the Virgo who is able to keep a secret to himself. Now is the time to move forward on another's very best advice!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Favorable hours in the afternoon should inspire you to take on new projects. Friends of the family may bring you a new view of your immediate future.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — A new contract is not to be considered lightly -- but neither is it to be taken as your last chance for gain. Investigate all avenues.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — A good day for the Sagittarius who takes things with a grain of salt. Don't believe all you hear and only half you see; this way lies success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You may have to forfeit immediate gain for a chance at greater, more long-lasting gain at some distant time. Consider your objectives.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Don't allow your efforts to diminish or your pace to slacken until day's end. Now is the time to make the kind of gain yo've been hoping for.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Make an effort to improve conditions on the employment scene. Succeed and you will have gained the lasting friendship of many.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A home study area in need of repair makes demands on your time. Do what you can to increase your efficiency as a leader of the family.

Amherst colloq presents 'ethics and journalism'

The 1974-75 Copeland Colloquium at Amherst College will continue today with a presentation and commentary entitled "Ethics and Journalism." Two 1952 Amherst graduates will participate in the event, to begin at 4 p.m. in the Assembly Room of Converse Hall.

The participants will be John P. MacKenzie, staff writer for "The Washington Post," who will deliver an address. Howard Ziff, professor of Journalism at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, will comment on McKenzie's remarks.

The annual Colloquium is made possible by a gift from Morris A. Copeland '17 and Mrs. Copeland to bring together "persons of diverse backgrounds and outlooks" to "engage in an exchange of ideas designed to promote a cross-fertilization of ideas."

Water polo squad second

By DEBBY HEXSIE

The UMass men's water polo team spent Patriot's Day weekend in Providence making a strong showing in the annual Brown Invitational water polo tournament. Seeded seventh overall, UMass wound up second in a field of ten Northeastern area teams.

Saturday afternoon UMass faced Westside in the first game and beat them decisively, 12-0. Duncan Lomas and Russ Yarworth scored three goals apiece. Henry MacLean scored two while Ron Boucher, Kevin McGinn, Mark Evans, and Todd Eachus scored one goal. Co-captain and goalie Mark Gordan only had to make nine saves for his shutout.

That same night UMass also defeated Cambridge, a team of Harvard and MIT players, by a 10-2 score. It was a balanced attack with Yarworth, Ron Boucher, Lomas, and McGinn each scoring two goals. MacLean and Steve Latter scored one goal apiece.

Sunday morning UMass fell to Northeastern in a lackluster game 6-4. The passing and shooting was poor for UMass, while Northeastern played well and never gave up the lead. For UMass, McGinn scored three goals and Lomas scored one.

In the afternoon UMass faced unbeaten Lower Moreland and pulled out a narrow 6-5 victory which put them into the finals with a 3-1 record. The first quarter was the key as UMass scored four quick goals. Lower Moreland chipped away at the lead, but good ball handling and control by UMass won out over the fast swimming of the Lower Moreland players.

Sunday night in the final game of the tournament (the team's fifth match in two days) UMass tangled with Brown. UMass scored first on goals by Ben Crooker (his first of the season) and Lomas. At the end of the half UMass held a slim 2-1 lead. Brown came back with four goals in the third quarter while UMass only scored two by MacLean and Lomas. In the fourth quarter Brown scored one more and put the game away 6-4.

The next game for UMass is today. Both the men and women's teams will be facing Northeastern in Boston this afternoon.

Sox hook Catfish 11-7

BOSTON (UPI) — Bob Montgomery's two-run double capped a five-run seventh inning outburst that knocked out Catfish Hunter and carried the Boston Red Sox to an 11-7 win Wednesday over the New York Yankees.

Hunter, winless since coming to the Yankees, was sailing along with a 7-3 lead on a four-hitter until pinch hitter Cecil Cooper tripled to open the seventh inning for Boston.

When Bernie Carbo singled, reliever Sparky Lyle replaced Hunter, giving up a walk to Dwight Evans and RBI singles to Fred Lynn and Jim Wright that cut the Yankees lead to 7-6. Dick Tidrow replaced Lyle and was greeted by Montgomery's wrong-field double, driving in the tying and leading runs.

Boston scored three more runs in the eighth when Tidrow walked Juan Beniquez, Carbo and Evans and Lynn blasted a double off reliever Larry Gura, scoring all three.

The Yanks went ahead on the hitting of Roy White who smacked two homers, good for three RBI's, and Sandy Alomar's three hits.

Two New York baserunners were thrown out, White at home by Evans, the right fielder, in the first when he tried to score from first on a single, and Ron Blomberg when Lynn tossed him out.

Former UMass runners excel in BAA Marathon

By SCOTT HAYES

Since January, Merry Cushing of the Sugarloaf Athletic Club had been training hard, hoping to peak for the Boston Marathon. Cushing upped her weekly mileage from over 70 miles to more than eighty miles and a race on weekends in preparation for the Patriot's Day event. But the University of Massachusetts alumnus surprised even herself when she broke the three-hour barrier, finishing fifth among women competitors in 2:56.57 on Monday afternoon.

"I never expected to break three hours," said Cushing, who was happy with her performance and obviously thrilled to break what was a barrier two years ago, by more than four minutes.

It was the third Boston Marathon for Cushing, who noted that although the hills on the Hopkinton to Boston route were though, this year's race was easier for her than those in the past.

In her first marathon attempt, Cushing finished eighth in the women's division with a time of 3:36. A year ago she completed the demanding course in 3:16, placing twelfth. Monday's showing lowered her personal best by another twenty seconds.

The field for the 79th annual race was a good one, with several members of the United States marathon team as well as foreign and outstanding US runners competing. Last year was the first time a woman cleared the three-hour hurdle and Cushing was one of seven women to better the standard this year, "That's fast," Cushing said of the times. Her efforts resulted in a terrific personal feeling after the race and deservedly so.

Cushing was mentally prepared for the grueling race. "The past two times I ran the marathon, I saw the Prudential Building as I approached Boston. It seemed as though no matter how far I ran, it wasn't getting any closer. This year I refused to look in that direction until I was practically on top of the building."

By SCOTT HAYES

For Tom Derderian, former UMass cross country runner, the Boston Marathon was no new thing. He had run the testing course that covers more than 26 miles six times before, including one time as a high school runner in 1967. The difference in Monday's marathon was that Derderian placed 18th, while former UMass harrier and teammate, Ron Wayne, finished 16th.

Derderian trained harder and ran more miles per week (120-140) to prepare for the marathon. His previous best time was two hours and twenty-five minutes in 1974 and the UMass women's track club coach placed highest in 1972, capturing 26th.

Derderian and Wayne, a pair of outstanding distancemen while at UMass, ran most of the marathon together. Derderian, who completed the course in 2:19.04, presently lives in Amherst; Wayne, a Berkley, California resident, was clocked in 2:18.55.

According to Derderian, the marathon was "an amazing race. I was astounded by the number of people running and watching the race. It was almost like a religious holiday," commented the veteran runner.

Derderian thought it was possible to finish in the top twenty, but didn't think it was likely. "It's kind of numbing when you think about it," he added.

"The hills don't bother me," Derderian continued. "but when you one after 18-20 miles of running it's tough and you've gone too far to quit." The Amherst distanceman was 47th at one point in the race and steadily passed runners to move into the top twenty.

Track and cross country coach Ken O'Brien was glad to see the enthusiasm carry over from college running into post-college training. "It takes a great deal of dedication and I'm happy to see their serious efforts paid off," O'Brien said.

Wayne was the New England cross-country champion in 1970 and co-captained the harriers. Derderian was a consistent third runner that year and worked to become the team's runner in 1971.

Another local finisher was Tony Wilcox, a graduate, who was timed in two hours and thirty-five minutes in 184th spot.

Stickmen drop squeaker

By BILL EDELSTEIN

The junior varsity lacrosse team succumbed to the Yale JV lacrosse folks 12-10 yesterday, in a coronary severer (heartbreaker) in front of Boyden. The Minutemen stayed with the tough Bulldogs, who have beaten Brown this year, throughout the contest.

Yale jumped off to a 2-0 lead, but the mini-gorillas (hereafter to be deemed the "chimps") battled back to tie, 2-2 on goals by Andy Howard and Wally "Putter" Goodwin.

The Bulldogs took the lead again, but the Minutemen tied things up once more at three, compliments of Fran Yung, who netted two scores on the day. The shot wouldn't have broken a pane of glass, but it easily managed to traverse the imaginary barrier that is the goal line.

Yale took the lead for a third time (they couldn't decide whether or not they wanted it) by tallying the next three goals and causing the UMass' netminder to throw his stick at the post in disgust. (Actually, the post was in Amherst; it was merely the stick that was in Disgust).

The chimps regrouped, however, and answered Yale's three goal outburst with four of their own, including a nice turnaround shot by Paul "Pit" Martin. The go ahead goal was netted by Goodwin, and closed first half scoring with the Minutemen taking a 7-6 bulge onto the sidelines (deeming a score of 7-6 as a "Bulge" is like saying that Twiggy has bulges.)

The chimps came off the bench smokin' at the start of the third quarter, but the intense pressure went for naught as UMass couldn't increass its margin.

The Bulldogs then scored during their first, second half excursion into Minutemen territory to produce the fourth, and final tie of the game. Yale posted three more tallies while they were at it, and suddenly, the chimps had their work cut out for them.

Mike Gongus, a five goal scorer in the chimps 12-2 demolition of Dean Junior College, made the UMass task a bit easier with literally a last milli-second, fast break score to end the third stanza.

Martin narrowed the gap to one for UMass, and the two teams traded goals before the Bulldogs applied the clincher, closing out the scoring at 12-10.

That bit of poison ivy (league) drops the chimps record to 2-1.

UMass Holy Crossed-up, 17-8

By STEVE SARACENO

There was fervent hope at Lorden Field yesterday that the UMass-Holy Cross ballgame would end before the football season began. However, looking at the final score of the 3 - hour - and - 18 - minute dragger — 17-8, Holy Cross — there is still some doubt that it actually did.

Despite the nine run Crusader advantage, UMass got just as many hits (11) as HC. Trouble was, the Minutemen contingent of pitchers walked 12, and the UM contingent of fielders committed six errors.

"What can I say?" lamented UMass coach Dick Bergquist afterwards. "The pitching was horrible and the fielding was atrocious." It was so bad, in fact, that the coach sent the squad through a full workout right after the game ended.

For those who look for silver linings, UMass did belt a couple homers — a solo job by Jim Cullen (his second) in the sixth and a two run shot by catcher Bob Moore in the eighth. Mike Koperniak went three-for-five with two doubles (one a 400-footer to the base of the fence in center), Jerry Mondalto tripled and a singled for three RBI, and John Seed garnered two doubles.

But don't get too excited, Martha. "That last pitcher they used," said Bergquist, "just wasn't a college pitcher." The Crusader reliever for starter and winner Steve Lebrun was Len Pepe, a small lefthander who, to put it mildly, doesn't have a Feller-fastball.

The wind was blowing straight out all day, and UMass took advantage of it in the first when Mondalto tripled off fence near the 375 mark in rightcenter with two on to make it 2-0.

But Holy Cross soon went ahead to stay. Minuteman freshman Pete Rankowitz, making his first start, was cruising along into the third, when he ran into some wildness and loaded the bases. Then, the Cross' designated hitter, John Gibaldo, golfed a low pitch out for a grand slam, just after it appeared Rankowitz might pitch himself out of the jam.

The Crusaders broke UMass' back with five runs in the fourth on one hit, two errors, and five walks. Rankowitz exited, and his reliever, Gus Bedard fared no better, lasting only one-third inning. To add insult, HC scored five more in the fifth to make it 14-3, as John McManus could not stem the tide either.

At this point, one fan keeping score was urged by his friend to exit the scene. Came the reply: "I wanna see if they hit twenty. Wait a sec."

But, no, Holy Cross did not reach twenty, although there was some doubt when they scored three in the ninth off final reliever Jim Witherell. In all fairness, it was only Witherell's first work since his knee operation.

The debacle ended appropriately enough when pinch hitter Mark Fontaine's sinking liner was snared by sliding rightfielder Steve Senior. Jim Cullen, thinking there were already two out, was running all the way from first and was easily doubled up to end it all.

YOU IS OUT! — John Seed's scoring attempt is foiled by Holy Cross catcher Bill Caron (3). Interested bystanders include Craig Allegrezza (with bat), HC pitcher Steve LeBrun, and UMass bench. Run wouldn't have mattered anyway — Crusaders romped, 17-8.

FROZEN ROPES — Word is that splendid centerfielder Pete Backstrom will be out for the rest of the year with his hamstring injury. However, Backstrom was walking around yesterday with both crutches in one hand, so he may be back after all ...

Are personnel changes in the wind? "I'm not sure yet," commented Bergquist. "I'll have to check with (JV coach) Jeff McKay and see how things are developing." Al Lepriore a freshman, is one jayvee that's already been brought up and even though he was playing infield, he's now starting in centerfield due to the Backstrom injury ...

Shortstop Cullen made a pretty play from the hole in seventh, as did first-sacker Seed on a pop with his back to the plate in the same inning ...

The Minutemen meet Maine here Saturday in an important Yankee Conference doubleheader and Craig Allegrezza (as in "Allegrezza and four days of monsoons") will start one of those ...

TOO LITTLE, TOO LATE — Bob Moore slams eighth inning two-run homer. The catcher's shot easily cleared fance inside leftfield foul pole, but UMass was trailing by ten at time. Assistant coach Phil Rollins is in background.

Braves even up series

*BUFFALO*N.Y. (UPI)* - Bob McAdoo scored nine of his game-high 37 points in the last five minutes and 13 seconds to lift the Buffalo Braves to a 102-96 National Basketball Association playoff victory over the Washington Bullets Wednesday night.

The win squared the Eastern Conference semi-final series at three games apiece and set up the seventh and deciding game Friday night in Landover, Md.

McAdoo, blanked for nearly seven minutes in the final period, hit his first points of the last quarter, a pair of free-throws with 5:13 left in the game, to give the Braves an 89-87 lead. Kevin Porter fouled out on the play and 15 seconds later, Washington's Phil Chenier tied it for the 19th and final time.

McAdoo's stuff and free throw, Lee Winfield's basket and two more goals by McAdoo were answered by only an Elvin Hayes follow shot and Buffalo was in command, 98-90 with 2:14 remaining.

The Braves, with only a 59-57 edge at the half, struggled to a 79-73 lead after three quarters.

McAdoo and Jim McMillian, who contributed 20 points, each scored six in the peirod. Winfield's goal with 6:43 left gave Buffalo an 87-80 bulge, but goals by Chenier, Hayes and Jimmy Jones put Washington back in the game.

Randy Smith collected 16 points for Buffalo and limited Porter to six. Buffalo's second half defense--The Braves held Washington to 16 third quarter points -- helped extend the series to the limit.

Locke key to golfers' victory

By RON ARENA

The scene after the match said it all. A relieved UMass golf team had gathered around an obscure player by the name of Bill Locke to offer their congratulations and express their thank yous.

Locke had become an instant hero as he fired a 77 in his first competition round for the team to lead a shaky UMass squad to a triple win yesterday at Hickory Ridge C.C. Locke's 77 gave the Minutemen a 403 total for the day to squeeze by neighboring Amherst College by one stroke. Dartmouth took third in the quadrangular-match with 419, while WPI finished a distant last with a 435.

The outlook was bleak for UMass as their first four finishers all came in with cards registering over 80. Joe Artman, with an 85, and partner Howie Terban, 82, provided a worrisome outlook with their off-rounds. And when John Laske and Rick Olsen followed into the clubhouse with scores of 83 and 87 respectively, the team had all but conceded the upset to Amherst, who had two of their first four finishers card a 75 and 78. Indeed, it seemed Amherst would come off with the major upset, prompting one spectator to shout, "What the hell happened to you guys (UMass) today? You fell apart from the seams."

But the tear was not beyond repair yet. Tom Toski and Glen Sullivan had yet to finish, and good scores were quite possible from the both. Each came in with adequate scores of 80 for Sullivan, and 81 for Toski, but it still seemed too little to overcome Amherst.

Someone then mentioned that Locke was having a good round, but UMass trailed by six strokes. Locke, being the final Minuteman finisher needed to outdo his opponent by seven for the win. He did exactly that. After a smooth iron shot onto the green, Locke came up short on a twelve-foot putt, then calmly sank his next shot, initiating an applause from his relieved teammates. His coach, an elated Fan Gaudette, was the first to shake his hand, remarking, "You're the hero."

Locke later admitted, "I had a feeling that it was an important shot. All the guys seemed to be playing it cool; everyone was quiet around the green." He added, "I was finally due for a good round."

Yesterday, Locke had responded with an 80 so Gaudette figured he'd give him a try. The decision should earn Gaudette coach-of-the-year.

TEE TIME... Joe Artman, with his second bad day in a row, explained, "I have no excuses. I just played bad. Four times I hit the ball over the green and into the water."... Reminisced Sullivan on one of his putts, "At three inches it was going in, at two inches it was maybe, and at one inch it was no way."... Gaudette, looking to Friday's Yankee Conference championships, said, "I just hope we're not going sour."... The Yan Cons will start at 8:30 on Friday at Stowe Acres, in Stowe, Mass.... UMass' record now stands at 9-0-1.

The Kennedy assassination

Total desruction of truth

A Prologue:
by Michael C. Kostek

What happens when the President of The United States, who happens to be one of the most loved figures in public life, gets the top of his head blown off on national television? In living color. In a manner the government told us didn't happen?

Empty.

Good line in the Collegian: "this story (the uncovering of the real assassins of John Kennedy) will make Watergate look like a firecracker next to an H-Bomb."

As we all know, John F. Kennedy was a sort of touchstone with many people, especially the young, who felt he was a friend of theirs, a difference from Daddy Ike, allowing The New to occur. Even though he was often as full of Cold War rhetoric as the Nix was, he did have Casals, etc. in the White House, and perhaps delivered one of the strongest and first displays of style as content.

His death in 1963, and Malcolm X, Martin Luther King and Robert Kennedy'sdeaths killed the special hope that some one could touch Chicanos and blacks and American Indians and make it in America. George McGovern's 1972 was the final brutal mashing of the seed. The people seem now drummed into holes, sticking out their noses barely enough to take care of their own business of living. And a business it has become.

And except for Malcolm X's murder, each one of the assassinations remains an unfinished case, with dead whale carcasses lying all over the beach. And we're told they're not there. We're told patent lies. Lies about Attica, lies about Jackson State, lies about Kent State, lies about Southeast Asia, lies about Watergate, lies about the FBI, lies about the CIA. There's not much left. Why did the Warren Commission lie? And where did Artie Bremer get all his money?

It's not, of course, the Kennedy s, or King or X or Wallace, as terrible as the idea of being murdered as a public official is, that's the real horror here. Rather it's our system so rank that cannot even give us reasonable lies about these killings, and yet has held the power over us all to keep on the lid. Is it inherent in the nature of the deceivers that they be low-order thugs like the Watergate crew? People who would order a briefcase of evidence thrown in the Potomac River, and who couldn't even bug themselves properly? Is this some sort of ultimate check of nature's in protecting us from these facts? And how long has this been going down? The only real difference in bringing down all these powerheads from before and now is the media's ability to flash the LOOK LOOK sign so that a glimmer will get through to the folks out there, who will be stricken and terrified and will write their Congressmen. Is everything we know wrong? Is our entire history a sham, as the revisionists are now starting to tell us? Why were there no revisionists before? Why were lies made truth?

What else is there to show on TV? And how can you watch anything else seriously afterward? What had happened to the Zapruder film for all these years? Where was it? Life had bought it and ...

... and we were shown some stills from the film, right up to the point of impact of the fatal bullet. The Warren Commission had issued its report, and life went on for more than ten years. The investigators had officially determined, in 26 volumes, what had happened, what the reality of 22 November 1963 had been. But Mr. Zapruder had his finger on the button and had a piece, a tenuous, blurry, piece of November 22. And it said something else had happened on 22 November in Dealy Plaza. This brief truth had been somehow slipped away from the official sources and was clandestinely shown to select groups at places like Harvard, and, under Dick Gregory's name and fame, was hereby given to the World.

Who swiped the Reds?

By Daniel Finneran

Where Have All
The Commies Gone? or What this world needs is an ocean of Visine

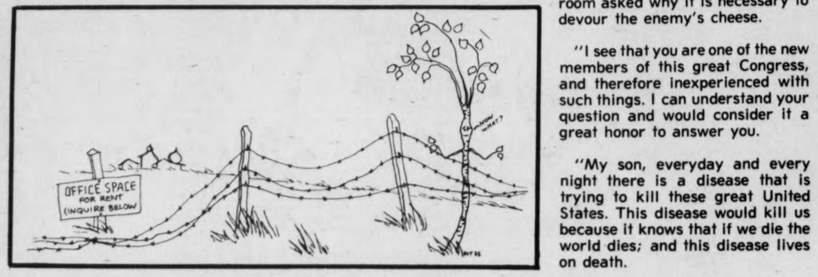
Once upon a time America and the world awoke to discover that Communism had vanished. All the great Communist countries were empty, and along their borders were signs that read: OFFICE SPACE FOR RENT. Also gone were Communists in the non-Communist countries. In America this was met with much rejoicing. In particular, the John Birch Society asked that the President declare the day to be forevermore a National Holiday. An added provision in the final resolution would keep the bars open day and night.

At a barbecue the VP of the JBS said, "I don't know how it happened; all I know is that it could only happen in America. I just wish that Joe was here to see this."

By Joe he meant the then prez of the JBS. Joe, it seemed, was nowhere to be found. Also among the nowhere-to-be-found were several prominent members of the DAR, several Young Republicans, the publisher of American Opinion, a Joint Chief of Staff, the Chairman of the Board of Ford, a close cousin of WF Buckley Jr., and a janitor who worked in the DC headquarters of the NAACP; thus proving what conservatives had been saying all along: that such liberal organizations had been havens for the Communists.

The night following that great day the President went on national TV to explain to the country just how he and his administration had done it; and how the other party had tried to stop them.

At a press conference held after the President's speech, the other party claimed that it was their idea to begin with; and had they not been victims of the present administration's underhanded campaign tactics, they would have been in power and would have done it much sooner.



Three days later the Reverend Billy Ritz of the First Church of the All-American Saints announced that God was very grateful to the President for ridding the world of Communism; and that he, Billy Ritz, would be happy to marry anyone in the President's family.

One week later the Vatican issued a statement saying the President had nothing to do with it; God was responsible. In one great swoop He had purged the world of Godless Communism; although, the Bull confessed, because of sentimental reasons He left most of the Jews alone.

Time passed, and eventually most Congresspeople remembered for what they had spent all that money. That same year the Pentagon planned to have Congress give them some dollars so they might investigate the possibility of training mice to devour the enemy's cheese. All had been carefully planned; and come time to introduce the request the senior Congressman from the Rand Corporation arose and spoke.

"We all know that no one is perfect, and in the course of human events even the Pentagon can make a mistake. However, in this case the need is so great and the chance of failure so small that it is our patriotic duty to fund this money. In my speech I have outlined the nature of this great plan; with it millions of lives could be saved. American lives! In my humble estimation, no amount of money could be too much for such a cause."

A voice from the other side of the room asked why it is necessary to devour the enemy's cheese.

"I see that you are one of the new members of this great Congress, and therefore inexperienced with such things. I can understand your question and would consider it a great honor to answer you.

"My son, everyday and every night there is a disease that is trying to kill these great United States. This disease would kill us because it knows that if we die the world dies; and this disease lives on death.

"Now this is not an actual physical disease, it is much worse. It is an ideological sickness. It is much more deadly. If we fall victim to this disease we do not actually die, our fate is much worse. This sickness kills all that is human, all that America stands for; and all that the rest of the world looks to America for. It has already killed two large countries as well as several smaller ones. It is from these countries that the sickness spreads.

"It is up to America to destroy this disease. It is what all the world wants and expects us to do. But to destroy it we must destroy the countries and people it has infected. It will not be murder for these people are already dead. We will be releasing their souls that they might fly up to God. It is what God wants. It is to let these people see God that we must give the Pentagon as much money as it wants, so it may do what must be done. What God wants us to do.

"In case you don't know the name of this sickness I will tell you. It is called The International Communist Conspira....ah....er....I....I would like to move that this session of Congress be prematurely adjourned for today."

That night in the Pentagon.

"We could say that Germany was going Nazi again and wanted to invade Poland."

"Why the hell would Germany want to invade an empty country?"

"What about Japan?"

"No. We've got too much invested in transistors to go and blow it now. England's out too. We're too friendly, although we could still work on it."

"Italy?"

"Are you nuts? Not even I would buy that."

"We need a country right now!"

"What about France? There are still a few DeGaulle sympathizers around; we could import some if we need more. Start by helping the people remember just how unfriendly he could be, then wing it from there."

"Well, it's not as good as the old set up, but it's all we can work with. Get a team working on it, and report back when you have some sort of plan. Meanwhile the rest of us will work on other alternatives that might be better."

Along with the Pentagon the DAR was having its share of difficulties. Their problem was similar to the Pentagon's, and as a result their yearly report on acceptable history books for use in the schools never got off the ground.

Back at the ranch, the JBS was loosing money left and right. Membership had dropped, nobody bought their books or pamphlets, their already small college lecture tour disappeared, and in general they felt lonely. At first they were baffled. The new prez called a meeting of all remaining JBS bigwigs; a half hour later they held a press conference where the prez gave the following speech.

"Slightly over one month ago the world's problems ended. Communism had been destroyed. Or so it seemed. What actually occured was the first step in the largest and most dastardly plan for world domination this planet has ever seen.

"A communist plan! A plan plotted by the top Communists of the world. A plan designed to lull the world into a false sense of safety. A plan, that if we allow it to succeed, will mean the end of the world.

"Where are the Communists, you may ask. Underground! Yes! From their underground fortifications the Reds can launch their attacks. Unless we act now it will be too late. The danger is greater now than ever before. The unseen enemy poses the greatest danger. We must act now! They must be destroyed once and for all!!

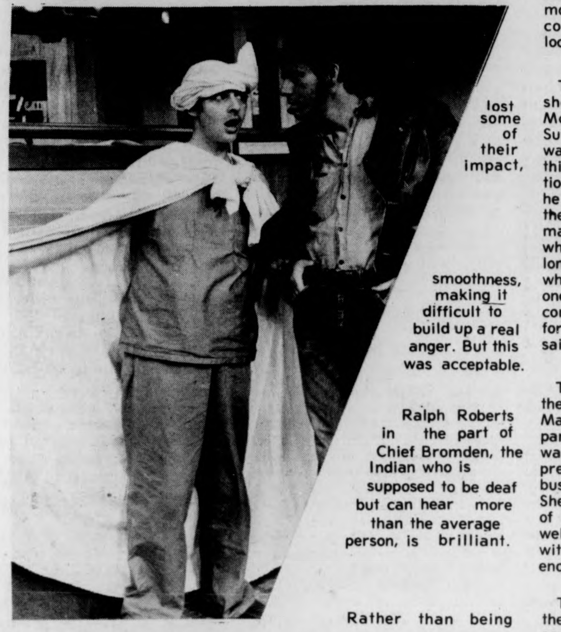
One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest

ONE FLEW OVER THE CUCKOO'S NEST
by Dale Wasserman
Directed by Peter J. Hajduk
Stage-West
April 19-May 10



One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest is one of the most popular current plays. It's popularity has reached a level that can rival the big cult movies going around. Happily, this cultishness has not damaged a truly powerful play. Based on the novel by Ken Kesey that we all felt was the best part of Psych 101, the play holds the strong emotionalism of the book.

The Stage-West production happened to be a good one. The casting was almost flawless and the director did some very nice things with an already well written script. Hajduk played for laughs, which he got, but because of this, forfeited some of the emotional impact. By playing every possible line for humor, the heavier scenes lost some of their impact, smoothness, making it difficult to build up a real anger. But this was acceptable.

Ralph Roberts in the part of Chief Bromden, the Indian who is supposed to be deaf but can hear more than the average person, is brilliant.

Rather than being psychotic and moody, Roberts' Chief Bromden is child-like. His facial expressions, movements and voice hold the little boy to whom no one paid any attention. This lucidity made the Chief a much more interesting character than in the Boston production of a year ago.

Stephan Mark Wyete was priceless in the role of Martini. Martini hallucinates, which is pretty funny to begin with, and here he was seen somewhere between Harpo Marx and any old pervert. Beautiful. Billy Bibbit always seemed to be the number two character of the loonies, but his part was played down to give more emphasis to Harding, the college educated, "bull goose loony" with a gorgeous wife.

The main focus of the play, as it should be, was Randle P. McMurphy, played by James Sutorius. As the psychopath who wanted to get off of the work farm, this character was multidimentional. He is more than just a loony, he is very human. His scenes with the Chief after lights out showed a man really trying to help someone who has been forgotten for too long. McMurphy really cares. The whole character is summed up in one line: in answer to Harding's comfort that a task McMurphy set for himself was impossible, he said, "But goddamit I tried!"

The other pivotal character in the play, Big Nurse was played by Maryin Brasch. She handeled the part with much empathy, but she was a little too young and too pretty for this part. Her ball-busting took on a flirtacious air. She was cool and calculating. Most of the time this was carried off well, but in the final blow out scene with McMurphy she was not asking enough for what she got.

This play is almost sold out for the entire run. On the merits of the script, this is understandable. On the merits of the cast, even more so. A good evening of good, gut-tearing entertainment.

Samia Hallaby at Amherst

Samia Hallaby left her easel, brushes and professorship of painting at Yale last Thursday and came to Amherst College, the guest of FORUM, to give a slide show-talk about her development as a painter.

She was dressed casually in pants and working shirt, short dark hair brushed boyishly back from her face — a face that betrayed little emotion through the course of the evening, a strong, Palestinian face..She was composed, disciplined, deceptively calm as she spoke, showing slides of earlier canvases, tracing the evolution of her work. Beneath the exterior mask, Hallaby has an electric intelligence, she is a self-conscious artist with exquisite control of her medium.

Boticelli and Petrus Christus gave her the word, she claims. Her fascination with bold geometric form — cube, sphere, cylinder, conic section —, her illusionary plays with perspective, her determination to control form and space with orchestrated plays of light-shade and color make her a spiritual heir to the quattrocento legacy — rarifying, reducing 15th century issues to their minima.

' There's tension in Hallaby's work. One senses an unresolved conflict between the painter and sculpture.. After brief experimenting with bas-relief she finally denies sculptural form a 3-dimensional environment, and forces it to define a powerful architectonic on the flat canvas, emphasizing the picture plane's potential as an illusionistic window. We go to touch bright red spheres, to stroke cool and warm metallic surfaces to explore a seascape distilled into essential issues of space and light — each time we must confront the reality of a flat canvas.

Samia Hallaby insists that art is a rational process. She's an articulate spokesman for conscious artistic method. We can only thank the blessed madness that lets her speak and paint with such clarity.

"I am, you are, we are, CRAY-zy!"

A few issues back, as part of an article on the newest U.S. releases from Virgin, was a half-hearted attempt by this writer to communicate the extremely high (in every sense of the word) quality musical silliness put forth by Gong on YOU, their only U.S. release to date and the only one I'd heard at that time. I was sufficiently impressed by both their approach and their abilities that I lost no time in getting hold of the previous two parts of the Radio Gnome Invisible trilogy (it's a continuing story, sort of. More about that in a second) and now that I have them I am even more convinced that I should drop out and go be a roadie for these inzen refugees from an astral cartoon festival; how else are you going to find enlightenment these days? I am also even more convinced of my inability to explain these Hindu hijinks and kozmic kapers, but fortunately I don't have to: The covers of Flying Teapot and Angel's Egg have synopsis of the story and YOU has a lyric sheet. I quote (spelling and capitals are theirs):

"So dis is wot its all abowt mate ..."

In Gong we trust.

Flying Teapot

THA STORY: RADIO GNOME is a kind of Telepathic Pirate radio which transmits from a FLYING TEAPOT coming from ze Planet Gong. It touches down in er ... Tibet but accidentally lands on the prayer mat of Lawrence the Alien who is most upset and does an ape dance on his drums. The teapot is fullup of Pot Head Pixies who are amazed at dis their first meeting with an earthman. Ha. But the Great Yogi Banana Ananda rescues them and introduces THE POT HEAD PIXIES to the band who do the first number on side two: 2. Then the GREAT SAGES and wise GooRoos of the wee pixies gnamed OCTAVE DOCTORS are there and lay up and down subliminal secret wisdoms via THE CRYSTAL MACHINE but who should show up but ZERO the HERO who sings a song of love and devotion for the weeeee pricksies sorry pixies. But the PHP's don't wanna be worshiped and so they take Zero through the Land of Scat and magnetic fields of Bad de Grass where he sees a Flying Teapot and meets the WITCH Yoni who bewitches everybody into total float and then sings her theme song I AM YOUR PUSSY, with dingo offering her Fish and Chips. Could it be that she is a women's lib? Is she really so good? WHO KNOWS? (to be continued in a little while).

Angel's Egg

"RADIO GNOME PART 1 ended with Zero offering Witch Yoni's pussy some fish and chips. Yoni sees that Zero has gotten almost too cynical to understand his role on this L.P. much less her revelations ..."

1. So Yoni gives Zero The Magick potion. 2. Zero loses his head which flies away up through the Quim of the Moon and out the other side into Seventh Heaven where is perpetual Orgasm and nacherly ze Planit Gong. He hears the Music of the Spheres and experiences all the correspondencas of colour and perfume and number and symbol. 3. Vision of the Green or Invisible Mother Planet. 4. Wot's this? A rocket contraption from Planet Earth approaches ... Zero tries to make contact but it's Captain Capricorn and he can't even see where he is (7th Heaven) because he is so totally into practickle facts. Capt. Cap. sings his home spun philosophy. But his mind is being invaded by 7th Heaven orgasm vibes which in his condition he mistakes for The Devil and he splits fast. 5. Zero sees Castle in the Clouds and there espies a luscious whore. 6. Hmmm. It seems we don't really have the space to do this whole thing verbatim, as I planned. But you get the idea, and I'm not about to try and out-synopsize the synopsizer; I have no synoptical delusions of grandeur (Sorta makes your fillings ache, doesn't it?). Suffice to say that Zero continues on his twisted path, with all sorts of mind-warping adventures, until the last side of the YOU album, when he gets spaced out on fruitcake and misses having his third eye turned on by the Octave Doctor. "So there goes Zero, turning around on the spiral wheel of births and deaths and each time round he gets a little closer to being one."

"You never blow your trip forever."

More to come, I'm sure. And now the musicians (the main ones, anyway): Bloomdido Bad de Grasse (Glad de Brass), (tenna and soprasax and so flooth); Submarine Capt. Steve Hillage (lewd guitar); Shakti Yoni (space whisper and loin cackle); Hi T Moonweed (Cynthia Size A and mellowdrone); Dingo Virgin (Local vocals, aluminum croon and glissando guitar); And an everchanging assortment of keyboardists, bassists and drummers, the latter including, at different times, Robert (Soft Machine) Wyatt and Billy (King Crimson) Bruford. Which leads us to a word about the music, all silliness aside "GREAT!" Thank you. This is very important, though, because there isn't a fairy-tale in the world, no matter how spaced, that can sustain interest through three records if the music isn't at least equal to the story. And no Donovanesque little strum-de-dum, either. As Robert Wyatt said, "There's no getting away from it: this is a — gulp — psychedelic band!" They'd have to be. And a great one. Seriously. I think they could, if they wanted, restrict themselves to instrumentals (Gong forbid) and still be an admirable band. There are only two things that bother me about them: 1) I think that they more than half believe in Pot Head Pixies, Octave Doctors, and everything else connected with the Planet Gong, and 2) I think that I do, too.

"Bullshit!" "Ah, what's your beef?"

Stepping Into Tomorrow
DONALD BYRD
(Blue Note BN LA 368-g)

In my long and distinguished career as a Below The Salt record reviewer, it has been my experience to deal with some records that, after the careful and arduous task of reviewing, were put into my collection and never again seen. This album, however, sits proudly alongside such perennial favorites as American Beauty and Innervisions, and at this writing has yet to collect any dust.

One of the stronger aspects of Stepping Into Tomorrow is the union of flowing melodies with rhythmic tension. Though the rhythm section is heavily fortified with two guitars, bass, organ, traps, conga, and other assorted percussion, including mouth harp, Byrd's trumpet (along with the alto sax and clarinet of Gary Bartz) stands out nicely. Also featured is the Astrud Gilberto-like voice of Kay Haith and some fine synthesizer work by Larry Mizell, who wrote most of the compositions, including the jewel title cut.

A word must also be added about the quality of the Blue Note albums I've heard recently. The quality of sound has been really crisp, and nice features such as plastic-lined sleeves have been the rule. Little niceties like quality help to ease the pain of shelling out four and a half dollars for a single album.

SUN RA AND HIS ARKESTRA
(Impulse ASD-8265) time 43:58

As Anthill says, this sounds positively lucid, with only an occasional honk or thwap to remind you this isn't Basie or Ellington. 1958's the date, and Ra was ushering quite a swinging ensemble about the land. This is certainly the straightest Ra yet reissued. As Sun sez, it's:

A Certain Beat
A Sudden Chord
These things charm the mind with veiled enchantment
That lingers along after the song is done."

Five-A-Side ACE
(Anchor Records)
Time: 36:05

Ace is a five man English outfit whose initial American release is a great album of simple rock and roll. By simple, I mean the minimum of everything — lyrics, overdubs, instruments, et. al. The songs are short, within the five minute range, and are far from being adventurous. (At least two songs have their entire lyrics repeated twice) Bored? You shouldn't be.

What sounds and looks like a complete bore is most emphatically not. Five-A-Side may be simplistic, but it still is an infectious piece of wax. Even myself, a stout Techno-rock fan, listened to side one three times in a row. The compositions are of two types: moderate tempo rockers and drifting soul ballads. The rockers are not mind blitzkreigs that never fail to drive people out of the room, but rather pleasant forays into controlled rock. "Sniffin' About" and "Rock & Roll Runaway" are fine examples of this. As for the ballads, Ace already have a hit single in "How Long". That song and "Why" are the best of the batch. Vocals soar majestically, while the band drifts, and not oozes along.

Five-A-Side is thus a good mixture of two types of rock music. If anything, they prove that you don't need a synthesizer or a "stun" guitar to rock and roll. This lp proves it, loaded with simple, but intelligent songs. (B)

FREDDIE HUBBARD
(The Blue Note Re-Issue Series)

The recordings to be found on this two-disc set act as a superb introduction to trumpeter Freddie Hubbard in this sixties music, taken along with Impulse's recently released anthology of Hubbard's big-band work entitled Reevaluation: The Impulse Years.

On Blue Note's anthology we are treated with the trumpeter's work in ensembles ranging from quartet to septet. His sidemen for these recordings have names that are bound to catch your eye — McCoy Tyner, Wayne Shorter, Elvin Jones, Sam Jones, Julian Priester, Philly Joe Jones...

The tunes served up on this fine anthology are also of particular note, such as — "Blue Frenzy", "One Mint Julep", "Weaver of Dreams." All were well-chosen and superbly re-shuffled for this re-issue series by a gentleman of the name of George Butler.

Excellent example of "old wine, new bottles". Four stars, er, I mean, an A.

Jam Session
BROWN — FERGUSON — TERRY (Trip)

The fifties' trumpet triumvirate sounds right here in full spontaneity. From 1955, this brass summit conference also includes altoist Herb Geller, who burns amazingly throughout, Harold Land on tenor, Dinah Washington's vocals on "Darn That Dream," super-fluent piano from the late Richie Powell and, magnanimous Max Roach en batterie.

Clark Terry, still an underrated master, shrieks, croons, and slurs, covering every range of his horn on "What is This Thing Called Love" and "Don't Worry Bout Me," yet never blows anything flashy or extraneous; every note is a part of a statement. Maynard Ferguson plays competently, but as ever, when his ideas fail, his high note proficiency takes over. The striking genius of Clifford Brown, killed in 1957, is in eminence on this date. His phrasing and chops are unmistakable — fiery on "Move" and delicately intricate on "It Might As Well Be Spring." Jam sessions are good for the soul and better for the ear.

The Truth burns so bright

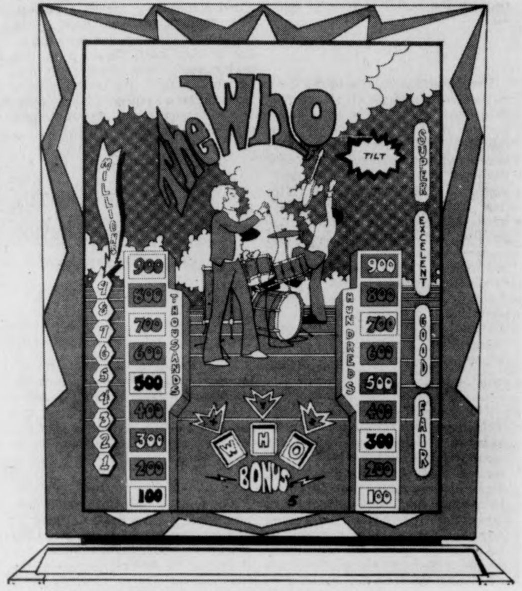
TOMMY
(Polydor PD 2-9502) time 84:03

While there are several problems that must be considered and dealt with here, it's a good general indication of some relative life force that this new soundtrack version of the WHO's epic surpasses the band's original so fast it's scary. On Peter Townshend's third try, Tommy emerges finally as whole, fully-realized, with much of the original premise's potential to excite our senses to near explosion finally released.

The only regrets that I have about this is the lengths it tries for here. Where the original seems meek and excessively low-key, the soundtrack rushes so full force that it at times suffers from a brashness and overindulgence that stems from the attempt to garner universal (read: wider 'Holywood Normal') appeal and a few compromises are made with quality along the way. Ann-Margret and Oliver Reed are the prime culprits. They are competent throughout in establishing the broader reaches needed to be credible parents — something Steve Winwood and Maggie Bell could never do — but they're not perfect. We hear Ann relying a bit too heavily a bit too often on her Las Vegas vibrating, braying, held notes ("He doesn't know who Jesus was or what pr-aa-aa-aa-aa-aaing is."). Reed manages to bluster through his lines pretty well, but he's caught at times with nothing to say. But while both could be better, (it's amazing how a clamhead like Margaret could pull this off as well as she does) their overall effect is one of character. Reed's slimey, opportunistic persona is masterfully restrained, yet always menacing, and Ann is continually strong, always a credible image of Motherly solidarity. They, along with the other Actors, provide the needed dose of Outside Authority that no one in the rock world can give. Tommy's parents are too real, too normal, too far from rock & roll's shuttered fantasy. They must be queer enough to keep us twisting and squirming at memories of our own childhood bondage as well as the continued rankness—madness we see every day.



The eyes that transmit all they know.

The other rockers play the unchained parts — The Preacher, The Pinball Wizard, The Acid Queen, Cousin Kevin, Uncle Ernie. They all provide enough of authentic kinkiness that wheels on the edge to make things go well.

Which brings us to the Scope, the broadening of which is the most important difference here. The old Tommy was quite an achievement — for rock, that is. But its appeal, both beyond WHO fans (who loved it) and beyond rock fans (who liked it) needed deepening. The WHO at the time ('68-'69) were heavily into the Pop-manic style of The Who Sell Out (whatever the WHO do, they do it all the way), a fabulous combination of intricate, exquisite harmonies, shimmering melody lines and music that divides its time between its own soaring harmony and some of the most frenzied sounds of dementia and reLEASE to ever come from any stage. Which is all right in dealing with Odorono commercials, and splendid for golden teen memories ("Pictures Of Lily"), but was definitely limited when it came to piping up a mature story of world-wide concern and endless magnitude over the course of four album sides. Tommy requires much more than the use of one particular musical sub-genre.

Playing the old Tommy after the new, the original seemed like a dream flitting quickly by, undeveloped and veiled, nay, drowned in mystery; a wisp of an idea that badly needed substance and fleshing out. Substance both in organization and performance. The story needed direction (why did "I'm Free" come after "Sensation"? etc. etc.) and tightening — to make a point and let people crank off from there, you must get people to that point. Tommy's original form is so unclear and cluttered (What are Tommy's parents like?) that it hindered and confused too many people, and its value was thus diffused. Pete played things too cautiously throughout, never letting the music really take off. Roger Daltrey wasn't much more than another pretty-voiced pop singer then, capable of a stirring 'ooo' but little else. He, as well as the rest of the band, sound half-asleep, with only Townshend seeming to have any idea of what he was singing about. Terrible, terrible production diluted things even further, and the entire affair called for a few years more of work and lunacy. All in all, the first Tommy seems little more than a period piece by one of rock's greatest bands on an off day.

The Tommy of 1975 and the ages must be more than the WHO. It must be as good as it can get. All the stellar combinations of different musicians work out very well, with usually spectacular results. Townshend's six years older now, and has had six years to rethink the music. And it shows. Excellent production, fine arrangements, tremendous music. Perhaps the highest compliment I can give the music is that it makes humpties like Ann-Margret and Oliver Reed sound good. John Entwistle's bass remains, along with Jack Bruce's, the best in rock. Daltrey's voice has aged immensely. He now needs no harmonies to hide in, but instead can open up and wail. He's learned much about singing in terms of inflection, conviction, character and consideration for what he's saying. Another of rock's greatest.

And Townshend. Pete's done a masterful job here, and deserves all the praise we can muster. He's added synthesizers, guitar, additional lyrics, four new songs, rearrangements of all the others, overseen the entire affair and he, as the creator, has given Tommy substance, depth and life it never had before.

For once, the hype is legit — Tommy is a head-crusher. At last something in rock has been carried out on a large scale and emerges with integrity and power intact. Tommy has the great ability to make you stand up and forget where you are, while ushering you to amazing new avenues of insight and passages to... most anywhere. No bottom.

It must have been quite a sight for the denizens of the 7:30 showing of Tommy to emerge last Friday, shook to their rivets by the film, and to re-enter the world and be confronted with the obscene sight of Gerald Ford chatting with the death fathers from the Old North Church as they took care of Our Heritage and Our Future. Those shocked souls who didn't begin eating the asphalt of Washington Street must remain, overloaded sacks of flesh just now emerging from the shock, babbling fools ensconced in the finest cells Boston could buy.

OK, just a few questions before we up.

Yes, the best rock movie ever. Yes, the best movie musical ever. What else has half the guts? Elementary. Rock & roll is great music, powerful music, stronger than a million of the nitwit Hollywood strings. So given the fact that most everything's done up right, it's no surprise that there are trails of rooted people, mesmerized by just the sight. For it happens to be, my fellow stews and students, that Tommy is a sensation. A real sensation.

CHICK COREA
(Blue Note Re-Issue Series)

This double-record set for the Corea connoisseur displays pianist extraordinaire Chick Corea in three different contexts, so let's discuss the highlights of each.

"Matrix" is the fast-paced number which opens our ears. It is the product of a 1968 session with Miroslav Vitous on bass and Roy Haynes on drums. Vitous and Haynes provide an impeccably solid rhythm section for Corea, whose nimble fingers literally dance over the keys of his acoustical piano. The precise interplay evidenced on this tune is duplicated by the same group on "Now He Sings, Now He Sobs."

This brings us to the 1969 sessions, which see Corea on electric piano, with Woody Shaw on trumpet, Hubert Laws on flute, Benny Maupin on sax, Dave Holland on bass and Jack deJohnette on drums. All-stars all the way. "This" begins with an ensemble search, easing into a swing feel, during which time Corea ties together some of those zany lines he's capable of playing. And let's not forget that Corea was probably the electric piano pioneer for jazz.

Incidentally, this group, with the exception of Maupin, formed the original Circle, which Corea eventually left in order to "achieve a better balance between technique and communication." He felt they were "sending audiences up the river."

A good example of what he's talking about is found on this album in the twenty-nine minute long "Is", a frenzied search where nothing much seems to be revealed. Communication definitely seems lacking, and it makes for quite tedious listening.

The remaining group consists of Corea on acoustic piano, Dave Holland on bass and Barry Altschul on drums. Corea's work on "Nefertitti" is really tasteful and definitive, while Holland provides solid support and an exhilirating solo, and Altschul is, as always, marvelous. This group recorded in 1970, so it's that much more interesting because on the one hand Corea's technique seems most nearly coincidental to that of McCoy Tyner (another piano prodigy), and on the other hand it is a prelude to the electric piano styles that Corea will evolve into his present group, Return To Forever.

Welcome To My Nightmare
ALICE COOPER
(Atlantic SD 18130)
Total Playing Time: 42:49

I am so damn tired of having musicians which I respect dig graves for themselves and jump in with both feet first. John Lennon (though he's since pulled himself out), Blood, Sweat and Tears, Jefferson Airplane come to mind, but there are many others — and now Alice Cooper. Muscle of Love wasn't exactly a musical triumph, but it was at least fairly solid. But Welcome To My Nightmare is, with the exception of a couple of high points, absolutely execrable. Why do successful and talented artists seem to be compelled to throw themselves away?

Thematically, Cooper has abandoned his puberty-centered lyrics, which were the source of most of his former power, and has opted to stick with horror-movie digressions, which were only a supporting concern on earlier albums and which have no compelling power on their own. Musically, he has given up entirely — he relies almost exclusively on the most cliched rock and orchestral patterns, sounding in places like a half-baked version of Chicago (if you can imagine such a thing — can you imagine A.C. singing "Baby, baby, come on and save me, save me"? It happens here). Movie music, poor movie music, poor soap opera music. The word for all of this is GRATUITOUSNESS. It's all sound and no fury, grossness without reason (on the earlier albums, there was always a reason), Alice Cooper doing a poor parody of himself.

I said earlier that there are a couple of high points. There are. "Years Ago" is a very powerful song, sung by a schizophrenic of sorts, unable to decide if he's a little boy or a great big man — accompanied by demented carousel music. Its sequel, "Steven", works almost as well, but its power is diminished by an affected spoken vocal and that damn orchestra. "Welcome To My Nightmare" and "Only Women Bleed" are fairly decent — that is, not excessively trite. "Only Women Bleed" contains some interesting tensions in its juxtaposition of cocktail rock and lyrics dealing with the mediocrity and pain of traditional sex roles, but (once again) the orchestra comes lumbering in and the thing becomes top heavy. "The Awakening" opens and closes with some fine eccentric piano by Josef Chirowski (who must be given credit for the only sensitive musicianship present on this album — must have taken a lot of concentration), and Vincent Price is amusing, in his own way, in his "Devil's Food" monologue. Too bad he's the high point of Side One.

Cooper — wake up. It's no longer 1972, stop pretending that it is. Get rid of that orchestra, and don't ever write songs with anyone else but Dick Wagner — the co-writer responsible for "Years Ago", "Welcome To My Nightmare", and "Only Women Bleed". OK? Thank you. Enough of this garbage.

Silver And Brass
HORACE SILVER
(Blue Note)
Horace Silver
HORACE SILVER
(Blue Note Reissue Series)

Pianist Horace Silver, perennial leader of tight, hard blowing quintets, has rebounded from the days of his godawful triple album United States of Mind. Although the soloists on his new brass augmented release come from a too-familiar mold, the ingenuous Silver melodies slip through undiluted. Finely wrought brass — saxophone interplay appears most tellingly on the intelligent funker "Kissin' Cousins." "Adjustment" and "Mysticism" are a bit stranger, yet retain the witty wisdom inherent in nearly everything he's done. Superb sound recording, but for superior solo content, try out the twofer reissue.

This reissue is culled from a long legacy of discs — Blowin the Blues Away, The Cape Verdean Blues et al, the musicianship is of high quality and the members are made up of everyone from Joe Henderson and Blue Mitchell to Art Blakey and Billy Cobham. A good deal of the material is "classic" (sic) with some strong soloes and ever-tight rhythm. The players are very close to this musical format which you will find wears well on the ears.

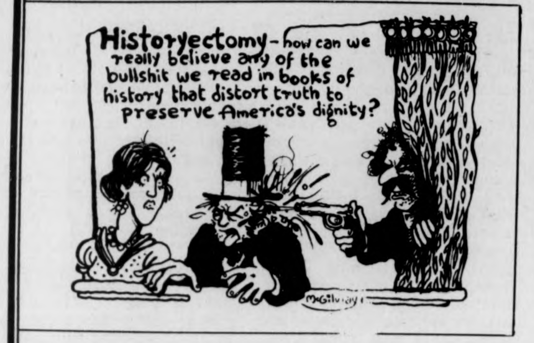
The Presidency has been decided by a bullet since 1963

by David Joyce

Last December, The New York Times broke a series of stories on the Central Intelligence Agency's domestic surveillance operations. Because of the exposure, James Angleton, the director of this counterintelligence effort, resigned. When he quit, Angleton made a statement to the Times on Christmas Day, 1974, "There were many rooms in the Mansion, (the Langley, Virginia headquarters of the CIA) and I was privy to most, but I was not privy to who struck Jack."



Historyectomy - how can we really believe any of the bullshit we read in books of history that distort truth to preserve America's dignity?
McGilvray

When the subject of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy is raised, there are two sides that square off: those who believe that it was the work of one man, Lee Harvey Oswald, and those who say, at the least, that Oswald did not act alone. I am a member of the latter of the two groups. That conspiracy killed J.F.K., there can be no doubt. Those who do doubt this need only to view the films of the assassination.

Until recently the most important assassination film, the Zapruder film, had not been seen by a large portion of the American public. In March of this year this was changed. for the film was shown several times on national television. Those who believed in a conspiratorial thesis had their beliefs confirmed. Those who had just doubted had their doubts reinforced.

But what were those doubts? Hadn't a blue ribbon commission pronounced Oswald guilty and stated that there was no credible evidence of a conspiracy? So what if; there were no fingerprints on the trigger, trigger housing, bolt or stock of the "only" rifle used in the killing; that films of the assassination show four shots being fired from three different directions; that a badly done autopsy shows the impossibility of the foundation of the Commission's findings; and that there is strong evidence that the "guilty" man was being impersonated before the act. The deed has been done, Oswald found guilty after his death, so let's get on with the business of running the country.

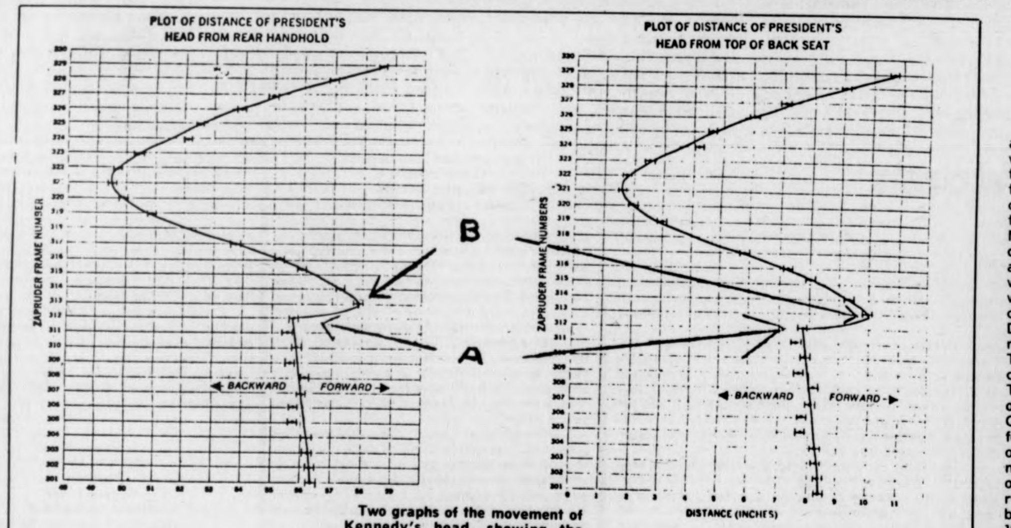
Before one can exorcise the myth that was told to the people, one must expose it. On November 30, 1963, President Lyndon Johnson signed Executive Order No. 11130, creating "The President's Commission to Investigate the Assassination of President John F. Kennedy". The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Earl Warren, headed the Commission, which included Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia, Senator John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky, Representative Hale Boggs of Louisiana, Representative Gerald R. Ford, Allen W. Dulles, and John J. McCloy.

After an eight month investigation, utilizing the "talents" of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Department of State, Military Intelligence Services, and the CIA, the Warren Commission, as it is known, published its findings. The main conclusions of the Commission were that President Kennedy was struck by two bullets fired from above and behind. The first "entered the base of the neck slightly to the right of the spine. It traveled downward and exited from the knot in the President's necktie". This bullet, according to the Commission, struck Governor Connally in the back, travelled downward through the right side of his chest, destroying five inches of Connelly's rib, exiting below his right nipple. It then passed through his right wrist and entered his left thigh where it caused a superficial wound, and was later found at the hospital in almost perfect condition. This conclusion is known as "the single bullet theory", and the bullet is known, in critics circles, as "super bullet". It takes an act of faith to believe this, as this would require the bullet to turn in mid-air.

The Commission also found that the second bullet which struck the President "entered the right rear portion of his head, causing a massive and fatal wound. The shots which killed President Kennedy and wounded Governor Connally were fired from the sixth floor window of the Texas School Book Depository by Lee Harvey Oswald, and that there was no evidence of any conspiracy, domestic or foreign, to assassinate President Kennedy". This is what the government said, but somehow, maybe because of Vietnam and Watergate, an evergrowing number of people refuse to believe it.

It takes an act of faith to believe the single bullet theory.

The main question mark is the "single bullet theory". The autopsy of John Kennedy found a wound in the back lower than the supposed exit wound in the throat. More importantly, the Zapruder film shows that the President and Governor Connally were hit anywhere from three-quarters to 1.6 seconds apart, too fast for a single rifleman using Oswald's rifle, and too slow for a bullet to travel the short distance between the two men. The film also shows that the position of Governor Connally at the moment of impact was such that his wounds could not have been made by a bullet fired from the School Book Depository. in the legal profession there is a motto, "False in one, False in all". Applying this to the Warren Commission, you arrive at a classic case for the reality of this motto, for the rest of the Commission's findings are equally false. This leaves the path open for all sorts of theories, and this is mine:



Two graphs of the movement of Kennedy's head, showing the double movement. +First, the third shot hits Kennedy from behind, driving his head forward (A). Then, one-eighteenth of a second later, the forth shot from the front pushes his head backwards (B).

+From SIX SECONDS IN DALLAS, p. 91. Random House 1967.

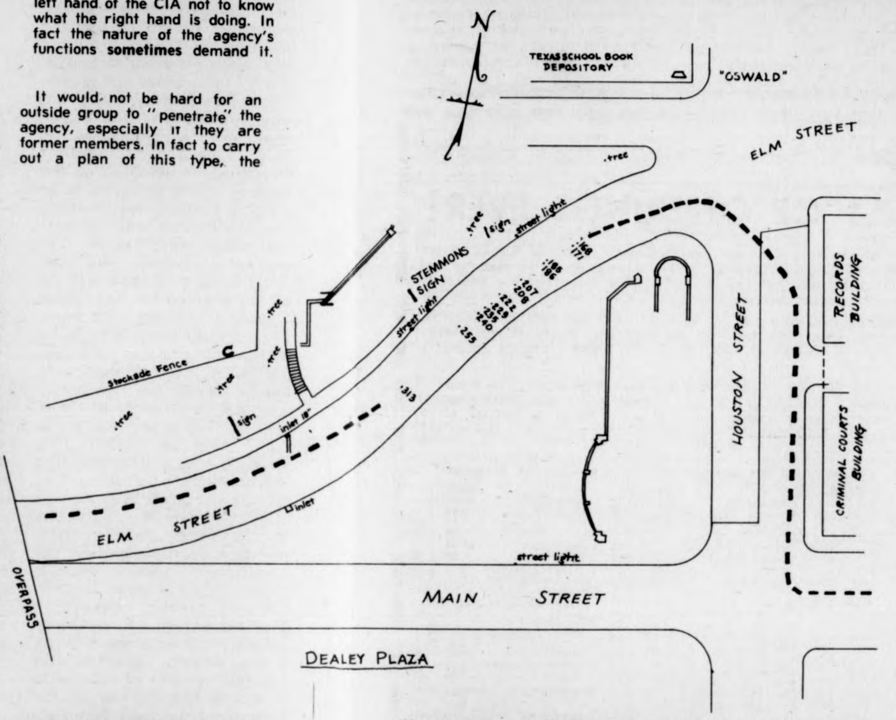
The first bullet was fired from the Texas School Book Depository as the front wheels of the Presidential Limosine were parallel to the Stemmons Freeway sign on the right side of Elm Street. It struck the President in the back, six inches below the top of the shirt collar and two inches to the right of the spine. The second shot was fired from the roof of the Dallas County Criminal Records Building. It struck Governor Connally, causing all of his wounds. The third bullet was fired from the Depository. It entered the right rear part of Kennedy's head and shoved him two inches forward. The forth shot was fired from behind the stockade fence on top of the grassy knoll forward of the motorcade. It was fired 1-18th of a second after the third shot, slammed the President backwards and to his left, and blew the right side of his head off.

This scenario is proven by photographs of the assassination, the autopsy reports, and eyewitness testimony. If this is what the totality of this evidence shows, then why did the Commission try to cover it up?

The answer to this question is to be found in the method used in committing the crime. What I have discribed above is known in the language of covert operations as "triangulated gunfire" (three gunmen, two firing from behind the target, one from the front). It is an effective method of assassination that calls for timing, training, marksmanship, and, in a daylight situation of this type, a "cover". An intelligence agency can effectively carry out such an operation, and supply the "cover" needed for the escape of the assassins. By "cover" I mean false identities that would explain the gunman's presence after the shots were fired. In this vain it is interesting to note the testimony of Dallas patrolman, Joe Marshall, who arrived in the area behind the stockade fence on the grassy knoll within two minutes after the shots had been fired. "I believe one Secret Service man was there when I got there!" Encountering a Secret Service agent at the scene of the assassination would not seem to be a strange or suspicious event. It becomes so only when we learn that by checking the individual reports of the agents who accompanied the motorcade that none of them remained at Dealy Plaza, but that all went with the motorcade to Parkland Memorial Hospital. Secret Service credentials are changed daily. In order to have the right credentials, one must have access to the schedule of change. In June of 1963, the Secret Service and the CIA started coordinating information for security on Presidential trips at home and abroad. As this fact and the quote I started this article with suggests, there is evidence to believe that the hand of the CIA was involved. Before I go further, let me say that I do not believe that it was official policy that killed J.F.K., but rather that it might have been done by a combination of knowledgable persons outside the agency. It is not unusual or the left hand of the CIA not to know what the right hand is doing. In fact the nature of the agency's functions sometimes demand it.

The man who killed Kennedy may still be alive

It would not be hard for an outside group to "penetrate" the agency, especially if they are former members. In fact to carry out a plan of this type, the assassination of a head of state without authorization, it would call for the penetration of, at the least, two compartments of the forty-one compartments below the level of the Directorate (second level). Naturally funds for such an undertaking could not come from the agency proper. However there are wealthy persons whose ideology would not prevent them from contributing the neccessary funds. Dallas had become, by 1963, a mecca for individuals of this type. The ideology I am speaking of is of course the extreme right wing. This would also fit the philosophy of these former members of the Central Intelligence Agency who felt betrayed because of the failure of the Bay of Pigs, the neutralization of Laos, the signing of the Test Ban Treaty, and the reduction of the Agency's budget by President Kennedy in 1962 and 1963. This last is important because as Allen Dulles (Warren Commission member) stated, "The last thing we can afford to do today is to put our intelligence service in chains." The proposed reduction of the Central Intelligence Agency's powers by John Kennedy and his desire to put Robert Kennedy in charge of the Agency after the 1964 elections ran counter to those who viewed the intelligence community as "constituting a forward line of defense against foreign espionage" and against "a master plan to shatter the societies of Europe and Asia and isolate the United States, and eventually take over the entire world".



As to additional evidence of involvement on the part of the CIA in the cover-up of the assassination, it must be noted that part of the fault of the findings of the Commission can be directly traced to the lack of vigor on the part of Commission members in following up certain areas of study. One of the earlist leads was a report that Oswald had been an FBI informant. Waggoner Carr, the Attorney-General of Texas informed the members of this allegation, and assured the Commission that "Oswald had never been an informant of the FBI". In spite of this denial, the Secret Service submitted a report (Number 767) to the Commission, in which it was stated the according to Allen Sweatt, the Chief of the Criminal Division of the Dallas Sheriff's Office, "Oswald was being paid two hundred dollars per month by the FBI in connection with their subversive investigation and that Oswald had informant number S-172". The Commission never questioned Allen Sweatt, nor checked the FBI files to see if the number was assigned to Oswald. In other words, no efforts were made by the Commission to investigate the rumor itself. The Commission relied on a letter written by Hoover to deny the story. The Commission also asked the CIA if Oswald had been employed by them. The agency did not reply until after the publication of the Commission's Report, which had already stated that Oswald had not been a CIA Agent, and agreed with this finding. But in spite of this belated reply, the Commission could not explain why Oswald was granted a passport during the summer of 1963 (the records of the New Orleans Passport Office indicate that Lee Harvey Oswald's name was on their list of persons to be denied passports, in fact next to his name on this list is the word, NO) in three to ten times faster than an ordinary citizen, or how a man with a wife and two children, who worked infrequently at a top wage of $1.25 per hour, could afford to travel to New Orleans and Mexico City, buy a long and expensive list of photographic equipment, rent an apartment in a suburb of Dallas for his family and a boarding house room in Dallas for himself. All this, plus buying a rifle and a pistol, and paying off a loan of $435.00 to the State Department was done by Oswald during the summer of 1963. Yet no explanation was given by the Commission.

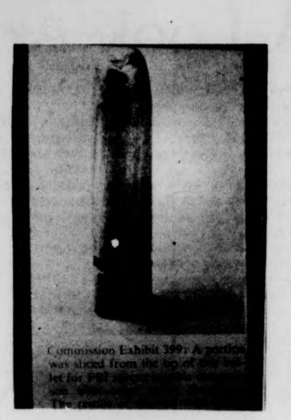
The reason for the Commission's lack of interest in these matters is to be found in recent news stories. With the uncovering of the Watergate scandal came the news that the FBI and CIA had been involved in domestic spying since the 1950's. At the time of the writing of the Commission's Report, not many of the American people knew about these operations. If, as the evidence suggests, Oswald was one of these domestic agents, then the revelation of these facts might lead to a cry to curtail or disband these agencies. Also, if, as the evidence suggests, there was a conspiracy, then there is the distinct possibility that in uncovering it, the fabric of American society would be ripped apart to a degree not seen since the Civil War and Reconstruction Era. Viewing the dilemma that faced the Commission this way, it can be seen why, in the interest of "national security", the Commission would choose the easiest path, ie. "convict a dead man."

There is evidence that the hand of the CIA is involved.

In recent weeks much "new" evidence has been revealed. The Rolling Stone, New Times, and other magazines have published articles and photographs that draw the same basic conclusions as I have here. Lest anyone think that this is just a counter-culture media fad, both Life and the Saturday Evening Post (November, 1966 and January, 1967, respectively) published articles raising questions about the Warren Commission.

The question must now be, "Who killed John F. Kennedy?". The answer to this question means a great deal because a large amount of recent American history might have been different had he lived.

How much of history would have changed had Kennedy lived?



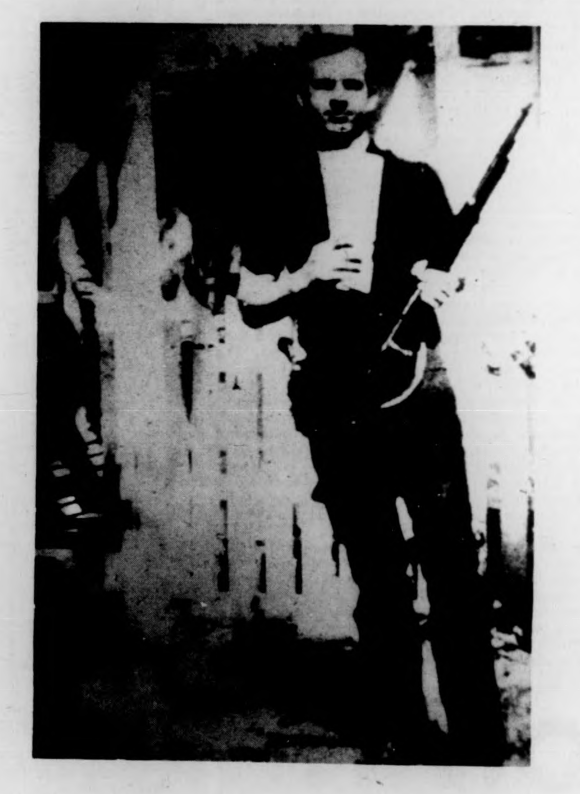
Commission Exhibit 399: A portion was sliced from the tip of this bullet for FBI

Superbullet

Every Presidential election since 1960 has been determined by an assassin's bullet. The assassination of John Kennedy eliminated him as a contender in the '64 elections. Robert Kennedy's death, at a time when it seemed that he would capture the Democratic nomination, eliminated the one, strong candidate the anti-war forces could have rallied around in 1968. George Wallace's shooting eliminated a possibility of a split in the conservative vote in the 1972 election. Indeed, with four Presidents in thirteen years (that is one President every 3.25 years) a reasonable doubt exists pertaining to the stability of the American Presidency.

An Epilogue:
by Michael C. Kostek

So it is that every person can stand on the knollside in Dallas and look through Mr.Zapruder's lens and see a sight the likes of which are perhaps the most powerful and moving experience any of us will ever see. And even had both shots been clearly from the back, from one gun, how different would the effect be? The ever-increasing eyes of the media might just give us the bounds of reality, the subject matter that is equal to the hardest and truest aspects of this disturbing existence we live in. And equally fascinating is the fact that Kennedy was no moaner groaner like George Wallace, but rather a media image of charm, grace and style. What effect does the total destruction of this image carried out against an emerging background of total deceit and complete falseness, have on our fragile judgments made on the people we know only through the TV screen? And on the larger, fragile 'reality' we carry around with us in our poor minds? This is the craziest, most full-blown of times, times that seem intent in either making mankind whole, or breaking mankind's very soul.



This is not a picture of Lee Harvey Oswald, although Life Magazine ran it as such. If the gun was proportionate to Oswald's body he would be four feet high. Other discrepancies include the impossible angle at which he is standing; the shadows on his face are at a different direction than the shadows on the fence behind him; the chin is different than the man who's mug shot is idenified as Oswald. This photo was printed as proof of guilt before the commission filed its report.

A Look At . . .

Look at the Harlequins!
by Vladimir Nabokov
$7.95 253 pp.
McGraw-Hill
Reviewed by Brian Coyne

In his latest novel, Look at the Harlequins!, Vladmir Nabokov has directed his artistic imagination toward his own career, refashioning another version of Nabokov who is a shade less fulfilled, privately and publicly, than his flesh-and-blood counterpart, to make some observations on the nature of aesthetic inspiration. It is an ambitious, audacious novel which succeeds through the virtue of its very daring.

Vadim Vadimovitch is the narrator of this "oblique autobiography." As seen in his name, Vadim is Vladmir Nabokov, almost. There are many commonalities, but several revealing differences between the two men. Vadim was born in St. Petersburg in 1899 and emigrated to England at the outbreak of the Russian Revolution, as did Nabokov. He wrote his first novels in Russian before converting to English in the late 1930's, as did Nabokov. He eventually came to the United States to teach at an Eastern university, as did Nabokov. The titles and plots of his novels are similar to those of Nabokov: Camera Lucida (Vadim), Camera Obscura (Vladimir); A Kingdom By the Sea (Vadim), Lolita (Vladimir); Ardis (Vadim), Ada (Vladimir).

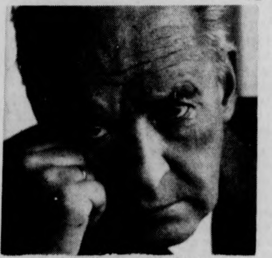
Vadim shares with his creator many basic attitudes and intentions toward his art. In a passage which explains the significance of the title, the reader learns what Vadim (and Vladimir) are trying to do with their fiction, coming in the form of a governess' admonition to the artist-child to "stop moping": "Look at the harlequins! All around you. Trees are harlequins, woods are harlequins. So are situations and sums. Put two things together — jokes, images — and you get a triple harlequin. Come on! Play! Invent the world! Invent reality!"

But as I said, the reality Nabokov has created for himself in the novel differs from his own life on a couple important respects. For one thing, Vadim has had "three or four successive wives" and several mistresses, while Nabokov has been married to one woman for almost fifty years, Vera, to whom all of his novels are dedicated. Vadim also imagines himself the possessor of a severe mental "affliction": if he takes an imaginary stroll from point A to point B, he cannot then reverse himself and walk back to A. Vadim believes that this flaw in his imaginary powers is preventing him from articulating his ultimate aesthetic expression. Nabokov has given the reader the portrait of the artist who has only sexual relations, never a love relationship, who imagines himself working on the edge of insanity and finds refuge from his disappointments in his fiction.

Vadim seems to reach the promise of personal and professional fulfillment, and Nabokov illustrates the intimate, vital connection between Love and Art, at the close of the novel when he meets his fourth wife and only love, "you." "You" not only gives Vadim a loving relationship; she also "cures" his imaginary disorder. She explains that while he has assumed his problem is a matter of spatial disorientation, it is really only an inability to reverse time, a rather traditional problem for artists and scientists, a problem people like Nabokov will always explore.

For Nabokov, love is the source of his imagination, the point from which his art begins. Vadim recognizes and affirms this connection when "you" comes to visit him in the hospital where he is recuperating from a stroke: "If emitted a bellow of joy and Reality entered." All the realities Vadim will ever invent are embodied in the women.

I said above that Look at the Harelequins! is an audacious book, for Nabokov is positing that his own life is already at the level to which Vadim is aspiring. It is a dangerous posture which could easily lapse from a healthy self-respect to a reactionary self-satisfaction. But Look at the Harlequins! is more than the self-indulgence of a pompous old man. It is a gentle, sometimes farcical, parody of the Nabokov character.



Vladimer Nabokov

At one point, Vadim writes: "I noticed a pair of harlequin sunglasses which for some reason suggested not protection from a harsh light, but the masking of tear-swollen lids." There is a man behind the masque of his prose, Nabokov is telling us, a man who also bleeds and cries.

So while the novel may at first appear to be the arrogant swagger of a man secure in his reputation, it is really a rather frank, refreshing review of Nabokov's sensibilities, talents and vulnerabilities. But what bothers me about the book is its "looking-backness". I get the impression that Nabokov is trying to wind up his oevre, to give his career a precise finish. That sense of finality is much more depressing and dangerous than arrogance.

But aside from questions of stance and attitudes, Look at the Harlequins! is an absolute pleasure to read. The Nabokov world is a fantastic world, an homage to Eros, full of textures and smells. In Look at the Harelequins!, Nabokov performs his masque as brilliantly as ever, and even gives the reader a glimpse of what it's like behind the mask.

. . . the Dream

Streets of Gold
by Evan Hunter
Harper & Row
$8.95 471 pp.
Reviewed by Ed Smith

The essence of the American Dream is the adhesive which binds together Evan Hunter's novel about the fate an immigrant Italian family in America. By following the family from the subway tunnels of New York to a Connecticut mansion, Hunter tries to unearth what it is about the Dream that is so disturbing.

Ignazio Di Palermo, whose name goes through a couple of changes before it arrives at Dwight Jaimison, is the narrator of the book. While not an unreliable narrator, the fact that Dwight is blind makes his sensory recollections interesting.

It is through his narrator that Hunter hammers away at the American conception of success, Dwight begins playing classical piano at an early age and is soon recognized as a child prodigy. A few years later he gives up classical in favor of jazz and it's all uphill from there. Dwight becomes internationally known and very wealthy. Starting as a poor boy in a Harlem ghetto, his rise to fame is the epitome of the rags to riches story. It is also demonstrative of the emptiness which waits at the top.

Hunter begins his examination of the Dream in Italy with Dwight's grandfather, Francesco. He came to America to make his fortune and then return to Italy. Instead he got married and stayed in New York City. Dwight's father had an equally uneventful career in America. Hunter makes his first comment on the American Dream with these two lives. His point is that once the pursuer of the Dream realizes he is not going to catch it, he is trapped by his responsibilities.

In dealing with Dwight, Hunter looks at subtler aspects of the Dream. There is never any question that Dwight has "made it". He has the money, the family and the recognition as a great musician. In "making it" though, Dwight discovers that there are things the Dream cannot deliver. For all the wealth the Dream yields, personal fulfillment and happiness are not necessarily among its benefits.

The Dream cannot be damned for this reason. The Dream does not claim to possess the key to understanding the universe or even oneself. What Hunter points out though is that the pursuer of the dream assumes happiness and fulfillment are a natural consequence of success and wealth. Streets of Gold makes the point that this is not necessarily true.

The use of the first person narrator is well suited to this novel. It reads like the oral history of a family with Dwight as the chronicler. He is sarcastic, sentimental and perceptive in his analysis of his own folly. Hunter has created a character capable of evoking catharsis every twenty pages.

The use of a blind narrator seems at points to be a gimmick. The fact that the narrator is blind carries sections of the book that might have otherwise been dull or even trite. However, these are made up for in other scenes where Dwight's blindness becomes an integral in the fabric of the novel and indispensable to its verisimilitude. Hunter has created a character who grabs the reader and demands attention to his story.

Streets of Gold combines humor, tragic irony and a host of moving characters in an effort to show where the American Dream has brought us. It is a successful effort.

Soul Power: Wetback Solution

SOUL POWER

by Scott Haas

Like many young people at college, I experienced moments of painful anxiety. Questions rushed passed me as picket fences passed a speeding car and just as one solution seemed acceptable, I forgot the question to which it was a response to. This can cause sleepless nights, tasteless meals, and insipid afternoons. Terrifying queries seemingly destined to pursue me for life were everywhere: Who am I? Am I capable of love? What do I want to do with my life? Why do I have certain friends and not others? What has shaped my unconscious? What is real?

And then hope appeared as it must have appeared to others before me. I was bumping into walls on the way anywhere after a particularly confusing lecture, "Epistemological Foundations of the Aural Retina", (from my course entitled "The Future of Nihilism"), when I suddenly saw a small poster before me. I assumed this was one of the hallucinations peculiar to my disassociation and let it go at that. However, the poster's staples were imbedded in my forehead so I stood transfixed. The poster (as long as I was there I thought I might be productive — so I read) said: "Lost? Does your life lack meaning? Come to the Truth! Transcendental Metaphysics has the answer. Wednesday, 8:30. Room 212."

Was this ever exciting! I despaired through dinner, experienced severe melancholy in my room, and at 8:30 stumbled to Room 212. It was packed! Hundreds of book toting students lined the walls and floors. People were comparing personal depression and some students frrm abnormal psychology had diagnosed them as dangerous manic-depressive suicides when...

He entered! This magnificent fat kid with diamonds in his nose! Gorgeous rainbow painted nostrils! And an amazing entourage of Persian dancing girls with very special loins!

SOUL
K. Miller

They carried him to the front of the room and placed him on three immense turquoise pillows. The entourage bowed, we bowed, and then he spoke:

> "First, let me welcome you all to this metaphysical sing-a-long. I am Sigmund Marx or, as my devotees prefer, Small World. I know many things about the soul. I believe in personal growth. I can help you grow six inches in a very short time. I have many college degrees despite my age. Knowledge flows through me like a knife through butter."

At this point Small World's entourage passed out envelopes into which we were each to whisper our particular anxiety and then seal it. The envelopes were then collected and given to him. He opened one.

"What is in this envelope? What? You must speak louder! Yes? Friends, the question was 'Who am I?'. An excellent question. Would the person who whispered this please raise his hand? No, only one person!

Of course, the question has an answer. Who are you? How do you know, for example, that you are not me and that I am not you and that that is the reason we agree all the time? How do we know that? And can you have your soul and eat it, too?

You are you. I am I. That is why I am sitting here. And you are sitting there. You are you — what else could you be? Who would be you if you were not?"

The entire audience broke into spontaneous applause. Small World's devotees tossed several flowers to him. He broke into his famous "shit-eating grin" and opened up a second envelope.

> "The second question is 'What is the soul?'. Is it bigger than a bread box? And why? How does it taste? Are some souls tastier than others? Will your soul get a shock if you rub your feet over and over again on a rug? At last, we can answer these questions! The Institute of Transcendental Metaphysics located in Hoboken, New Jersey has isolated the soul in the laboratory! Although photographs are as yet unavailable, let me provide you with a description that is part of a new book about to be published by Western Mystic Press, called SOUL FOOD. I quote: 'Apparently we are what we eat. The soul is a large tuba shaped object compressed in a space behind the nose. It is nearly invisible and varies in taste from one person to the next. There is conjecture about culture shaping the soul, but nothing conclusive has yet been found. Initial research has proven, however, that the soul is composed of our daily diet. Thus vegetarians have vegetable souls and people who drink beer souls of beer. Poets of the soul, people who tap their inner resources for art, often have the characteristic deviated septum. An important thing to remember is that nose size has nothing to do with soul size! One can have an extremely potent soul without a large proboscis..."

Small World was very profound! I am now enrolled in his school for Western Mystics and am learning the Way. He teaches us how to meditate, what to eat, what to read, and how to articulate our thoughts. I am very content. Growing. And trying to deviate my septum.

Reason is the dominant tendency of all things.
Why do you say that?
Matter tends to evolve into Life. Life tends to evolve Intelligence-- in time, this process will occur throughout the Universe
Look around you.
The only intelligent life we know of reduced its civilization to radioactive rubble
A temporary setback.
Scientists, like myself, aided by whatever devices or Knowledge we can salvage, will rebuild it--into a new world of reason--love--and trust---
Life WILL prevail-- Intelligence WILL predominate-- Reason and Sense WILL-

WEEKEND RATINGS
++++pheasant under glass
+++roast turkey
++Shake 'n Bake
+Colonel Sanders' pelvis

BLAZING SADDLES++++
Mel Brooks' finest achievement, and perhaps the funniest film since the Marx Brothers left us alone. (Mountain Farms Four)

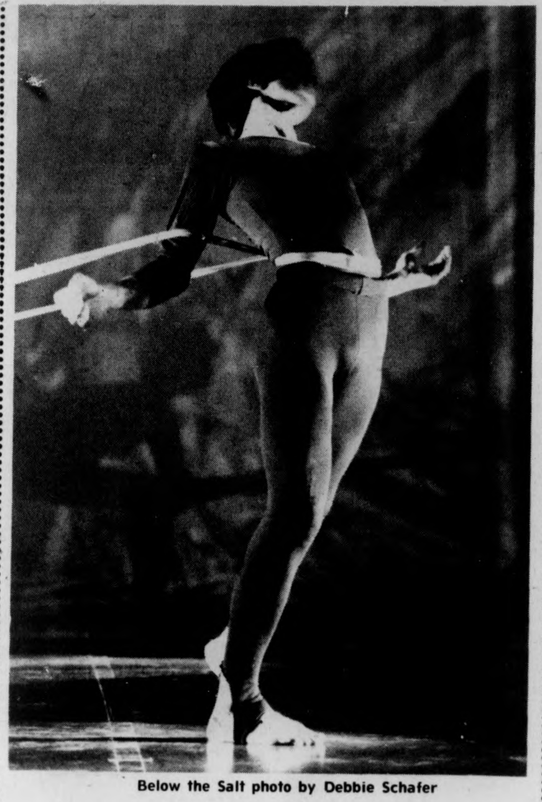
BUS STOP—THE PRINCE AND THE SHOWGIRL+++
For only 25 cents you can't beat this Marilyn Monroe double-feature for sheer economy. Even if you're not a Candle in the Wind freak, you might get off on watching some really good nostalgia. (S.U.B., 4-27, 7, 8:45, 10:45)

BUTCH CASSIDY AND THE SUNDANCE KID++++
The slick Newman and Redford classic where outlaws are made to look not only human, but virtually like stand-up comedians. But George Roy Hill's fast-paced direction raises this to the level of pure American cinema, in other words — commercially appealing. Beautiful Katherine Ross co-stars. (S.U.B., 4-25, 7, 9:15, 11:30)

CABARET+++
In case you still haven't come out of your shell yet, this is the big Liza Minelli-Joel Grey-foreshadowing of the Nazis-money makes the world go round hit musical which won eight Academy Awards a few years back. Vastly overrated, but Bob Fosse's choreography and camera work keep the viewer looking at the stage. (Mountain Farms Four)

CHINATOWN++++
Roman Polanski's latest, a departure from his supernatural tendencies, but still quite unusual. Jack Nicholson plays an eagle-eye detective who sticks his nose into the wrong case and pays for it in the end. Faye Dunaway is great as a millionairess haunted by a turbulent past. This film got royally ripped off at the Academy Awards, but we all know that doesn't mean shit to a tree; works of art cannot and should not be compared. (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.)

THE CHINESE CONNECTION+++
Ooh sakiyo! Bruce Lee stars in a — ugh! Ooof! Hayasadee!! — an exciting Kung Fu thriller, one of — Aah kyoko!! — one of his later works, sure to be — Eeyah!!! — to be loaded with plenty of splintered limbs and broiled chops — Yum-yum aieeee!!! (C.C.A., 4-27, 7, 9, and 11)



Below the Salt photo by Debbie Schafer

EMMANUELLE++
A new skin flick, which like most of the other failures, tries to satisfy the viewer by not satisfying him. Here we have Penthouse-style photography coated over the perverted proceedings. (Campus Cinema)

GODFATHER II++++
Francis Coppola's final proof of his cinematic genius, just in case you missed the Conversation. Al Pacino takes on dramatic substance he lacked for much of part one, and the results are Oscar caliber. The idea to widen the scope by including scenes documenting the Corleones before and after Michael's rise is unique, establishing this as a real sequel. (Campus Cinemas)

THE GREAT WALDO PEPPER++
Robert Redford's blue eyes and America's blue skies collide in this tale about World War I flying aces and their aviation feats which follow the end of the War. All the action you'll see is in the coming attractions, so it might be wise to take in a movie where you know this one hasn't arrived yet. Directed by George Roy Hill.

LENNY++++
Dustin Hoffman stars as the ultimate comic hero, Lenny Bruce, in this pseudo-documentary. Still available at the Mountain Farms Four.

LAST HOUSE ON THE LEFT++
If the ticket seller is holding a chain saw when you go in, think twice about seeing this bizarre blood bath. If he turns it on and runs after you into the theatre, you're either drunk or you're one of the actors in the movie. Regardless, there are some good gory thrills to keep Southwest residents stomping on the floor, even though this is larceny of Bergman's beautiful but seldom seen The Virgin Spring. I kid you not, dudes. (C.C.A., 4-30, 7, 8:30, 10:00)

THE NEW CENTURIONS+++
George C. Scott and Stacy Keach star in Joseph Wambaugh's police story about the inner psychological and social workings of the men in blue. Contains a little unnecessary obscenity but as a display of dramatic power it is superb. (TONIGHT in the C.C.A. at 7, 9, and 11)

REEFER MADNESS++++
1936 milestone propaganda "drama" about young American most-likely-to-succeeds turning to the killer weed. You can toke up with you friends and laugh your brains out at this mind-rape of marijuana "evils", but at the same time you might think it all very sad. Movies like this were to blame for many of today's harsh dope laws. You can retract your indifference, however, by contributing your 50 cents to the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, the group exhibiting the film. That stoned guy playing the piano with the mad face is still really pisser, though. (TONIGHT in Thompson 106 at 7, 8:30, and 10:00)

SCENES FROM A MARRIAGE++++
Ingmar Bergman's fascinating study of love and marriage, starring Liv Ullman and Erland Josephsson. Bergie cut the original 6½ hour Swedish television version down to about three here, but it still retains its emotional impact, as every one of his masterpieces has managed to do somehow. (Amherst Cinema)

TOMMY++++
Here we have it: 5-speaker sound, sensational imagery, the first and most successful rock opera turned into the greatest musical film ever produced. Stupendous acting and singing by Ann-Margret, Tina Turner, Oliver Reed, Elton John, Eric Clapton, Jack Nicholson, Keith Moon, Peter Townshend, and Roger Daltrey as the deaf, dumb, and blind kid himself. Ken Russell is a genius. To be extensively reviewed in a week. (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

SHAMPOO++
The first film about a hairdresser features Warren Beatty as the scissorstud who keeps his customers after shop hours. Julie Christie, Goldie Hawn, and Lee Grant play his girlfriends in this tight, nicely photographed, but incredibly overrated saga of adultery, sex before marriage (ye gads!), and other assorted hot combs. (Showcase Cinemas)

THE WAY WE WERE++
It sure wasn't the way I was. Jesus, if I looked like Redford I wouldn't be writing movie reviews. NEVERTHELESS, flick fans, this one is an entertainment-monger's orgasm, what with the two biggest Hollywood stars teamed up in a story about love and nostalgia. Streisand sings the title song which was, believe it or not, the number one-selling disc of 1974. (C.C.A., 4-25, 6:50, 9, and 11:10)

WILLIE DYNAMITE++
Grade B bust-'em-up Black thriller designed after the great Superfly, but director Gilbert Moses falls short of the predecessor's flair. (S.U.B., 4-27, 7 and 9)

WOMAN UNDER THE INFLUENCE++++etc.
Gena Rowlands and Peter Falk excel in John Cassevetes' masterpiece of human emotion, entering (Holy shit, Batman!) its sixth week at the Campus Cinemas, and rightly so.

CC Board dismisses food manager

By FRED NOBLES
Staff Reporter

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night moved to dismiss CC Food Services Manager Phillip Amico for "misfeasance" in "his actions with regard to the late billing of the Stefano wedding."

The action followed an hour and a half executive session of the board restricted to board members and CC Director John Corker.

Prior to the closed session, Corker announced that Steve Stafano, CC produce and production manager, had resigned his position and that a "program of restitution of payment" for Stefano's outstanding bill had been established.

Corker's announcement came as a result of his investigation into alleged billing irregularities concerning a wedding reception held in the Campus Center last August for Stefano's daughter.

Corker would not state in public session of the board why Stefano had decided to resign. Following the executive session, several board members said his reason for resigning was illness.

Board Chairman Jeff Taggart will announce today a committee charged with investigating the dismissal of Amico.

Taggart said last night the board will, "institute procedures as defined in our bylaws for the dismissal of Phil Amico. We intend to investigate all areas and hold him responsible for his actions with regard to the late billing of the Stefano wedding."

Board member John Hays, who introduced the motion to dismiss Amico, also brought two other motions before the board which he later described as "definitely related" to the dismissal motion.

The first motion would not allow CC management to give discounts on food services or rooms in the Campus Center without prior approval of the board.

The second calls for an audit of the Stefano wedding bill

Wood takes voluntary pay cut

By JUDY BOUCHER
MDC Staff

BOSTON — UMass President Robert C. Wood said yesterday that he is taking a six per cent cut in salary and reducing his staff by 15 per cent.

Wood also said he will ask other administrators to consider a salary cut as a "symbolic public act" to demonstrate concern for the integrity of the University.

Although the salary cuts are mainly "symbolic" Wood said he will continue to fight plans to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis to trim the budget by 10 per cent.

Slashing the budget would be "catastrophic" and would mean "reducing enrollment, lay offs, and abandonment of programs," he said.

Wood, at a press conference in his Boston office, also released a report on administrator's salaries which concluded that the salaries "are only conservatively competitive."

The findings of the $31,000 report by Hays Associates of Philadelphia, a national management consulting firm, are:

—the overall salary structure for administrators is conservative when compared to other public universities similar to UMass.

—UMass pays its administrators salaries which are consistently below those paid by comparative private universities.

—University employee's fringe benefits are "no way competitive" with those offered in private institutions of higher education.

Wood warned that a cutback in the level of administrative support would weaken the management of the University.

Legislators and the general public have criticized UMass for being "top heavy" with UMass administrators claiming the biggest pay checks cashed by state employees.

The president's yearly salary is $50,336. In addition to Wood's voluntary pay cut other top administrators have said they would follow Wood's pay cut.

But, he said, the consultants would not have made a recommendation to take pay cuts. "This is not trimming the fat, this is breaking bones," said Wood.

Wood said he believes that the UMass' $118 budget request is "responsible."

"I am determined and the board of trustees is determined to do all we can to persuade the General Court to adopt a responsible budget for the University."

He said he fears a budget cut because of the impact it would have on public higher education and various student services.

"The student of 1975 is not the student of 1969," he said. Today students are hard working-career oriented and with one difference — "they are now franchised," he added.

The final result of the proposed budget cut, he said, would be "cheapening of public education."

Students in Amherst have been protesting the proposed budget cut. A referendum vote is now going to determine if the full student body will have a moratorium on classes Tuesday and Wednesday.

Wood said after the press conference that he was "pleased" that students at Wednesday's Town Meeting decided to call the boycott of classes a "moratorium" and not a "strike."

In addition to the salary cuts, Wood reported that the current austerity program has saved UMass $3.8 million dollars. The 15 per cent reduction of his staff is a result of not filling vacancies and will total to about $150,000, said Wood.

No hiring and freeze on promotions, part of the austerity program, has resulted in a 10 per cent vacancy in faculty and staff positions, according to Wood. He said if the vacancy rate increases it may create "severe problems for the academic calibre of the institutions."

Over security deposits

Six students to sue UMass

By LARRY KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

A class action suit is being prepared charging UMass with failure to pay students 5 per cent interest on security deposits, and returning the deposits after the legal deadline of 30 days.

The suit is set for filing Monday in Northampton Superior Court on behalf of six UMass students according to their attorney, Thomas Lesser.

The University stand to lose between two and four million dollars, said Henry Doyle, one of the plaintiffs in the suit. Each student would receive double the 5 per cent interest the University owes for every year each student lived in a dorm since 1972, according to Lesser.

Lesser said the University failed to respond within 30 days as the law requires to a legal notice dated March 20 that he served to Joseph P. Healy chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees.

UMass President Robert Wood now uses the interest from the room deposits to pay the rent on his office in One Washington Mall, according to a housing report by the Student Center for Educational Research.

The report says that Wood spent $253,519 of the interest from this deposit in fiscal 1975 on his Boston Office. This means, the report adds, that Wood overspent his allocation for fiscal 1975 by $95,000.

"The failure to pay 5 per cent per year interest each year on these security deposits is a violation of Massachusetts General Laws Chapter 186, Section 15B and a violation of M.G.L. Chapter 93A, Section "2," according to the notice.

When called at home Healy said he had no comment on the suit.

Chapter 186, section 15B states: "A landlord of residential property who holds a security deposit... shall, beginning with the first day of tenancy, pay interest at the rate of five per cent per year, payable to the tenant at the end of each year of the tenancy."

Lesser would not go into detail about the suit when contacted by telephone today, but said he will say more about it after the suit has been filed.

Student Legal Services Attorney, James Starr, said that in his opinion the university is in violation of this law.

"They (the university) might argue their attempt. I haven't found any exemption that they come under," he said.

Chapter 93, section 2 states: "Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are hereby declared unlawful."

Chapter 186, section 15B also states: "If the landlord fails to return to the tenant such deposit... he shall be liable in damages in an amount equal to twice the amount of such security deposit... plus interest at the rate of five per cent from the date which such payment became due."

The notice claims the university failed to return the security deposits within thirty days as required by law in the case of four of the plaintiffs.

Wood has been criticized by Governor Sargent and members of the state legislature for spending too much money on his Boston Office.

Library site still undecided, locals visit JFK archives

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

The likelihood of the JFK library being located at UMass remains as unanswered question following yesterday's visit to the library's archives by thirty Amherst residents. During their visit, designed to familiarize interested people with the history, purpose and contents of the library, they viewed exhibits of John F. Kennedy's personal papers, letters, documents and possessions destined for display in the library, said Gerald Grady, UMass community coordinator.

The UMass campus is one of the top five being considered by the JFK Corporation. Since UMass President Robert C. Wood offered this site in February, Kennedy Corporation officials have visited the campus twice but no decision has been made.

The final decision will tentatively be made in early June but there is a possibility that it will not be made until next fall, according to John Stuart, associate director of JFK Library archives.

The 30 people, who were bussed to the Waltham Federal Bureau of Archives where John F. Kennedy library materials are stored, represented a cross section of the town, said Grady. They were: Selectperson Diana Romer, two student town meeting members Donna Fusco and Douglas Margarez, two women from the League of Women voters, two labor representatives, town meeting members, press and concerned citizens.

Daniel Finn, director of the library and David Powers, former Kennedy assistant, greeted the group. Stuart gave a brief history and description of the proposed library.

Stuart explained, plans for the library were developed before the assassination of Kennedy. The corporation, he said, planned to locate the library next to the Harvard School of Business but was changed to the former MBA yards. Now because of protests from Cambridge citizens, a new site is being sought.

The group was given a tour of the archives where they inspected documents, letters and possessions of Kennedy, including his famous rocking chair.

Amherst residents will make a decision to accept the library, if it is offered to them at the annual town meeting May 5. The selectmen will give their position on the library Monday night after they release the Gladstone Corporation report.

Gladstone Corporation has been engaged by the Kennedy Library Corporation to assess the effects the library would have if located in Amherst.

Science Fiction Club offers ways to find 'future shock' today

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Staff Reporter

Where do you go for information relating to the year 2075 — Institutional Planning? Future Studies?

The Science Fiction Club, a loose coalition of artists, writers and readers of cosmic debris, could probably make a good guess.

Originally a splinter group of the Astronomy Club, the Science Fiction Club started on its own in 1965. Using a footlocker as storage for its small paperback collection, the club library moved from Hampshire house to what is now the People's Market; finally settling in a book-crammed office high above all reality — in 921 Campus Center.

According to Matt Zimet, a graduate student in Zoology, the club sponsors four science fiction movies a semester using the revenues to purchase 4-5 novels or various magazines and comic books per week.

Club members gather at the office to read and sometimes just "bullshit" about novels or movies, said Zimet, the club's buyer.

The mostly male membership consists of hard core science fiction fans with a liberal sprinkling of fantasy and comic book devotees.

Turnout heavy for strike referendum

By STEVE DECOSTA
Staff Reporter

Heavy voter turnout yesterday characterized the first day of ballotting on a campus-wide referendum proposing a two-day moratorium of classes.

A random sampling of dormitories by the Collegian indicated that between 60 and 90 per cent of all dorm residents had voted on the referendum.

Volunteers Mike Costa and Mark Hopkins, who manned separate tables in the Campus Center-Student Union complex, reported a high level of voting activity among the more than 6,000 eligible commuters, but no exact figures were available.

As of mid-afternoon, Costa reported that "about 1500 people" had voted at the table opposite the candy counter. He compared the number to a recent student senate election' in which only 90 commuters cast ballots.

All vote-takers interviewed said they believed sentiment to be running in favor of the referendum.

"I would say it's about 90 per cent in favor," said Hopkins, who spent much of the early afternoon collecting ballots on the Campus Center concourse.

Leo Baldwin, a volunteer in Baker dormitory, remarked, "I would say about 90 per cent (are in favor) from what I've seen and what people have said."

The referendum was authorized at a Wednesday night town meeting in which approximately 1900 persons took part.

The ballotting, which is being conducted by the Student Action Committee (SAC), is designed to gauge student sentiment toward proposed Budget cuts and tuition and fee increases.

"Given that it's being run by the SAC," said Student Attorney General Cindy Iris, "they would be hard pressed to make it (the vote) binding."

Iris said there had apparently been some confusion between the present referendum and an SGA presidential referendum.

"The presidential referendum usually concerns legislation that affects the entire student body, and its results are binding," Iris said. "They're trying to make a parallel that falls apart when you realize that it's not a presidential referendum dealing with legislation."

Iris said members of the SAC had solicited her help in counting the ballots. She said she would ask for volunteers, but her office would not officially "oversee" the counting procedure. "That's not necessary," Iris said, "even on presidential referenda."

The resolution itself calls for "a moratorium on classes (on Tuesday and Wednesday) during which we demonstrate our opposition to proposed BUDGET CUTS, TUITION INCREASES and FEE HIKES, and our growing support for the Town Meeting's Nine Demands."

The referendum also says that the previous Monday should be set aside for "political discussions about the past week's events" in the classroom.

During the entire three-day period, the resolution calls for "a massive letter-writing and phoning" campaign to parents and legislators.

Voting on the referendum will continue today from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. and the results should not be known until late tonight or tomorrow.

School of Ed records not yet open to public

By JUDY BOUCHER
MDC Staff

BOSTON — Despite a court ruling that would allow access to the scandal plagued School of Education records, the U.S. attorney claims they are not open to the public at this time.

U.S. Attorney James N. Gabriel has decided to ask the FBI to take control of the records, according to UMass President Robert C. Wood.

The FBI has been investigating alleged misuse of federal grant funds, by school of ed administrators.

Wood said at a press conference yesterday that the decision to release the records is between the state courts and the federal government.

A Northampton Superior Court Judge ruled in favor of granting a reporter the right to view the records, disregarding two subpoenas by a federal grand jury sitting in Boston.

The suit was filed by Collegian reporter William P. Densmore Jr. who contended that the records under the state's "open records law" were public.

However, Wood said the only specific records that were not available for public scrutiny are:

--records of a New Haven teacher training program funded under a Model Cities grant.

--records of New-Funded Career Opportunities Programs in Brooklyn, N.Y., Worcester and Springfield.

In a letter to Wood, Gabriel said that an FBI agent who is also a special agent of the grand jury is the "custodian" of the records.

Judge Raymond S. Cross in a six page reading said that UMass is still the custodian of the records. The attorneys involved in the case agreed that most of the records were still "physically" present on the UMass-Amherst campus.

Gabriel said that the outside auditing firm, Coopers and Lybrand, would have limited access to the School of Education records.

However, Gabriel said a vote was taken by the grand jury that would allow university officials to use the records in order to conduct the day-to-day affairs at the School of Ed.

SGA president deadlock unbroken as confusion reigns, leader sought

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

After three days and eight ballots, the Student Government Association (SGA) is still without a new president, as yesterday's election ended in a deadlock between Craig Ghodotti and John O'Keefe.

In the last ballot, Ghodotti tallied 37.3 votes to O'Keefe's 37.2, with neither candidate receiving the 49 vote majority necessary for election.

Jon Hite, SGA speaker, said yesterday's election "showed that people are thinking about who they want as their president, and not just trying to elect someone to get it over with."

The assembly recessed last night after two hours of debate when no quorum was present.

The elections began Tuesday with Ghodotti, O'Keefe, Peter Lewicke, Cindy McGrath, and Tim O'Brien as the five recognized candidates.

The SGA Constitution says the top two vote getters after the first ballot should be considered in a runoff ballot until one of them obtains the necessary majority of votes.

After the first ballot, O'Brien and Ghodotti were the top vote getters, respectively, but O'Keefe gained the second position with second ballot "write-in" votes.

After four ballots without a majority candidate, it was brought to the Chair's attention that "write-ins" are unconstitutional.

This limited the balloting to Ghodotti and O'Brien.

The next ballot ended in a standoff with neither candidate receiving a majority of votes, as several people abstained.

The assembly recessed to reconvene yesterday.

At yesterday's meeting a motion was passed to reconsider nominations, and the five original candidates were renominated. Lewicke resigned, leaving Ghodotti, McGrath, O'Brien, and O'Keefe.

The next ballot left Ghodotti and O'Keefe in the top two positions.

After two additional ballots with neither candidate receiving 49 votes, the quorum was questioned.

When the role was called, O'Brien, no longer a presidential contender, denied his presence. When asked if he would stay, O'Brien said, "The hell I will," and left.

Several People followed, leaving the assemblies of Central, Northeast, and Orchard Hill without quorum.

Rick Savini, present SGA president said he didn't know when the SGA would reconvene.

Communists await new Saigon government

Politicians delay search for cabinet

SAIGON (UPI)— President Tran Van Huong's search for a new government acceptable to the Viet Cong for cease-fire negotiations bogged down yesterday in bickering among politicians. Outside Saigon the Communist armies halted their advance, apparently awaiting the outcome of the talks.

Huong and at least two men seeking his job-Senate president Tran Van Lam and Gen. Duong Van "Big" Mihn struggled, evidently without success, to set up a coalition "peace government" that could negotiate a cease-fire and prevent a Communist assault on the South Vietnamese capital.

An estimated 100,000 or more Communist troops have pushed their front lines to within 26 miles of Saigon, but the battlefronts were unusually quiet yesterday.

Foreign embassy officials in Saigon took advantage of the lull to get their nationals out of the country before any all-out Communist attack against Saigon.

The British embassy closed at the end of the business day, and Ambassor John Bushell and his staff flew to Singapore in Royal Air Force C130 aircraft. An embassy spokesman said the closing was temporary.

South Vietnamese soldier waits to be evacuated from the town of Binh Tuy, South Vietnam, earlier this week, before that town fell to the Communists.

Thailand also shut down its embassy. The New Zealand embassy closed Wednesday, and the Australians were expected to shut down later in the week.

An American airlift stepped up evacuation flights, flying thousands of U.S. citizens and Vietnamese to the Pacific island of Guam and sources said the number of official Americans in Vietnam would be down to about 500 by the end of the day. There were an estimated 8,000 Americans in Vietnam several weeks ago.

Huong, who took over from President Nguyen Van Thieu on Monday, accepted the resignation of Thieu's cabinet members but so far has not named replacements.

In separate action, the man constitutionally next in line for Huong's job, Senate Chairman Tran Van Lam, said a 21-member committee named by him has recommended an immediate cease-fire and the creation of a coalition group to set up elections.

Gen. Minh, leader of the coup that toppled the late President Ngo Dinh Diem in 1963, was also suggested as a candidate for president by one of his major supporters, Sen. Vu Van Mau.

Minh was a presidential candidate against Thieu in 1971. He withdrew from the race before the election, however, claiming it was not fair.

Lam, a former foreign minister and one of the signers of the Paris peace agreement in 1973, said his Senate Special Committee for Political Affairs recommended the appointment of a prime minister "capable of neotiation, not complying with the old leadership, having the confidence of congress and support of various religious parties, political parties and people."

Indochina developments

Victory announced

(UPI) — Cambodia's new Khmer Rouge regime announced yesterday it has "totally liberated" the country and proclaimed a three-day victory celebration.

The announcement, in a Phnom Penh broadcast of the National Cambodian Front Radio, marked the first time in four days that the station had come on the air with a live broadcast.

"Our revolutionary army and people have now totally liberated Phnom Penh and Cambodia," the radio said.

Previous reports had told of continuing pockets of resistance in outlying provinces of Cambodia following the rebel capture of Phnom Penh last week.

Withdrawal asked for

VIENTIANE (UPI) — The coalition government of Laos has ordered Communist troops to give up territory they seized this week and withdraw 13 miles to their original cease-fire positions, a spokesman said yesterday.

Spokesman Ouday Souvanouvong said the cabinet ordered troops of the Communist Pathet Lao and royalist soldiers near a strategic road junction 90 miles north of Vientiane to return to positions they held before the Communist offensive.

Airlift increases

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. airlift of American and Vietnamese refugees from Saigon is now in high gear with 5,000 people a day being flown out of the threatened South Vietnamese capital, an administration spokesman said yesterday.

L. Dean Brown, President Ford's director of the refugee relief effort, also said aircrafts are availablc to double that number if the U.S. Embassy staff in Saigon can clear them for evacuation.

Conferees pass Vietnam aid bill; limits Ford's use of troops

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House and Senate conferees yesterday approved a $327 million Vietnam aid bill which carefully limits President Ford's authority to use troops for evacuation purposes.

Reaching a swift compromise on what may be America's last Vietnam wartime expenditure, the conferees approved the larger aid sum - $327 - granted by the original House bill but also kept the troop authority restrictions spelled out in the Senate bill.

Sen. John Sparkman, D-Ala., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said the conferees had reached agreement on what the bill will contain and had ordered congressional staffs to draw up the final language.

Sparkman said that final draft would be ready for formal approval by the conferees this morning. It then goes to the full House and Senate, where approval is expected, and then to Ford for his signature.

"We have decided to make $150 million in new money available for humanitarian purposes and $177 million in funds already authorized but not yet appropriated to finance evacuation plans and humanitarian aid," Sparkman said.

Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., said the conferees had retained the tougher Senate restrictions on the use of U.S. armed forces for evacuation purposes.

This included, Javits said, the Senate requirements that U.S. troops can help evacuate Vietnamese only incidental to the rescue of Americans and only in areas where Americans were being evacuated. The House bill put no such strict and definite restrictions on Ford's authority to use the troops.

"We have retained the essential authority of the War Powers Act," Javits said in a reference to the 1973 law which forbids any President from from using U.S. military forces in Southeast Asia without congressional permission.

Sparkman confirmed the compromise essentially was a trade-off of the House money provision for the Senate's troop restrictions.

"I believe that is a fair explanation of what we have done," he said.

Rep. Wayne Hays, D-Ohio, said, "We have reached a general agreement on the amount of money and the objectives of getting people out and providing humanitarian aid."

Brown students occupy building

Budget cutbacks anger black students

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
Medeiros is a formei Collegian reporter

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Black students, angered by budget cutbacks they said would make Brown University "richer and whiter," seized control of the Ivy League school's administration building yesterday.

A university spokesman said administration officials would respond by Thursday night to student demands that included amnesty for all taking part in the takeover.

"The university has been insensitive to our demands," a spokesman for the Third World Coalition said after the takeover.

About 40 black students entered University hall, the administration building on the College Green, shortly after 8 a.m. after about 100 black students surrounded the building.

Within hours, more than 400 black and white students were picketing University Hall in support of the students inside.

The takeover was peaceful, and all university officials and employes left the building after the students moved in.

Other demands made by the students included continuation of financial aid for minority students at its present level and more money for recruiting black students.

The takeover followed a four-day boycott of classes last week by most of the 5,100 students at the university to protest the austerity budget proposed for next school year by Brown President Donald F. Hornig. There are about 450 black students at Brown.

The boycott ended Saturday when a committee of the Brown Corp. rejected many of the student demands and offered few concessions. The Brown Corp. is scheduled to take final action on the budget in June.

"As a result of the administration's insincerity, we have been forced to express our sincerity in this fashion," said Paul Jones of the Third World Coalition.

"We are tired of committees, discussions, and promises. The university has the power to implement our proposals. We demand that the university do so," Jones said.

Black students staged a series or protests at Brown in 1968 to protest what they felt were discriminatory practices at the school.

"The university has failed to honor the commitments which it made to the minority community in 1968," Jones said. "For seven years, we have been engaged in a frustrating dialog with the university.

Dukakis gets support from businessmen

BOSTON (AP) — The state's huge lobby of influential businessmen has broken precedent by praising Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and his effort to "control the chaos of runaway government." Associated Industries of Massachusetts (AIM), an organization of 2,500 businesses that includes 85 per cent of the state's manufacturing payroll endorsed the new governor with an editorial in its monthly magazine "Industry."

"Gov. Dukakis, in his effort to check the cost and control the chaos of runaway government deserves our praise but clearly will need our help if he is to have any hope of success," wrote Robert H. Cain, chairman of the AIM board.

A spokesman for AIM, Jim Sledd, said the endorsement is unusual.

"We don't get out and talk about individual politicians too often, but this guy is worth supporting," Sledd said.

AIM said it was particularly pleased with Dukakis' efforts to reduce welfare spending and oppose a cost-of-living pay raise for state employees.

Support from the business community was missing during the administration of former Gov. Francis W. Sargent, whose spending on social programs angered some businessmen.

Dukakis, once considered a liberal spender on social programs himself, sought business support during his campaign against Sargent. He complained frequently about fiscal waste in state government.

Dukakis' spokesman, Mary Fifield, said AIM's endorsement was not expected but "has to be considered a plus."

State Manpower Affairs Secretary Howard Smith, the governor's liason with the business community, said Dukakis "has made an effort to be responsive to the needs of business. But he hasn't done more than I would expect any governor to do."

Smith said he has told businessmen that Dukakis is a genuine liberal who may eventually upset them with his programs. But for now, the secretary said, the governor is on a honeymoon with businessmen.

"He's saying things they never thought they'd hear about fiscal responsibility in government," Smith said.

Students protest outside University Hall, the administration building on the campus of Brown University, which they had taken over to press for their demands of greater minority enrollment. Story on page 1.

Sadat vows respect for Israel territory

UPI — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said yesterday Egypt would respect Israel's territorial integrity if Israel gave up the Arab land it occupies.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said there are indications the Arab nations are preparing for war.

Referring to current summit meetings among Arab leaders, Rabin told a gathering of Israeli exporters Wednesday night:

"It is hard for me to believe that they were called to propose new initiatives for peace in our region."

Citing the meeting of Sadat, Syrian President Hafez Assad and King Khaled of Saudi Arabia in Riyadh this week, he said, "there are signals and indications among our neighbors that they are preparing for the possibility of a new war with Israel."

Sadat ending a visit to Tehran and talks with Shah Reza Mohammed Pahlevi of Iran, said he agreed with a statement Wednesday by Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko that the Soviet Union would guarantee the right to independent existence of all Middle East states, including Israel.

"I quite agree with this statement, but Israel must withdraw from all Arab occupied territories," Sadat said.

At an airport sendoff for Sadat, the Shah voiced his support for Egypt's Middle East policy although Iran is strategically important as Israel's main supplier of oil. But the Shah has often said he does not intend to use his oil to put political pressure on Israel.

Recipients protest

BOSTON (AP) — More than 100 welfare recipients marched on the State House yesterday in a protest against Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' plan to cut $311 million from the Welfare Department's $1.7 billion request for the next fiscal year.

Chanting "tax the greedy, not the needy," they walked from a rally at the Tremont Temple, a Baptist church on Tremont Street, to the State House, where they lobbied their legislators to oppose the budget cuts.

Jessie Sargent, wife of former Gov. Francis W. Sargent, was in the audience but did not speak at the welfare rally.

Bartley silent

BOSTON (AP) — Despite weeks of speculation that he has the job locked up, House Speaker David M. Bartley refused to say yesterday if he has actually applied for the position of president of Holyoke Community College.

The deadline for applications for the position is 5 p.m. Friday.

William G. Dwyer, president of the state Board of Community Colleges, also declined to say if Bartley has applied.

Hostages held

STOCKHOLM (UPI) — West German guerrillas holding 12 hostages in the German embassy in the Swedish capital told German newsmen yesterday the Bonn government had rejected their demands. They said they would kill a hostage.

The West German news agency DPA quoted one of the guerrillas holding the embassy as saying that the German government, through Swedish premier Olof Palme, had told them their demands for freedom for 26 jailed guerrillas in Germany would not be met.

"Our ultimatum stands as before. At 10 p.m. (5 p.m. EDT), we will shoot the next embassy official," a guerrilla told DPA's Stockhold bureau.

Warheads vulnerable

WASHINGTON (UPI) —The Army and Navy have been moving nuclear warheads along the nation's highways in a manner which makes them vulnerable to terrorist activities, the General Accounting Office said yesterday.

GAO, Congress' investigative arm, delivered a classified report on the situation to Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger, but made public an unclassified "digest" of its findings.

Alcohol studied

PITTSBURGH, Pa. (AP) — A panel of doctors studying alcoholism says it has found a definite relationship between alcoholism and male sterility.

Dr. Joshua Perper, chief forensic pathologist for the Allegheny County coroner's office, says severe testicle damage was found in men with a history of alcoholism and it could result from two causes.

FAMINE IN ETHIOPIA:

On Saturday, April 26th at 6:30 p.m., the Ethiopian Students in the Five College Area, in co-operation with Afro-American Society, Center for Racial Understanding, Poverty Committee, and Program Council, invite all concerned people to a fund raising night for famine victims in Ethiopia. There will be an Ethiopian dinner, speaker, a film on the famine in Ethiopia, and a photo-exhibit.

The funds collected will be forwarded to a non-government Famine Relief Committee made up of University students and professors in Ethiopia. Please show your support by either buying tickets at two dollars each, or giving donations to this cause.

The event will be held at the Campus Center Auditorium, at the University of Mass.

The following news commentary is special to the Black News Service from the Ethiopian Students Assoc. from the Five College Area.

The causes of famine has variously been explained by experts, reporters and politicians alike. One of the common opinion is that famine was the result of the food supply and demand condition on a world scale. Typical among the opinions was that of a U.S.D.A. official, Don Paarlberg, who stated, "never in modern times have crops been so poor in so many major producing countries at the same time." Whole on the supply side total world food production has shown quite a substantial decline, an estimated 23,000,000 tons for 1973. As compared to 1971, in total output and a decline of 117,000,000 in total stock for the period 1961 to 1974, on the demand side there has been a substantial increase. The result, it was stated is that in 1974 alone, 90 countries have ordered U.S. grain thus, resulting in a sharp increase of grain price from $1.30-bushel in 1973 to $5.20-bushel in 1974.

Demographers on the other hand has looked at the problem from the point of view of the rapid population growth, especially in the Third World countries. Believing so, they warned of a possible holocaust resulting from this trade-off between population explosion and food production.

Some other experts have explained the famine in terms of the physical and meteorological condition. This group of experts often capitalized on the encroachment of the Sahara and other deserts on the surrounding agricultural land as a result of the effect on the weather by the change in the position of some mystical star.

Famine in history

Even though sometimes it would seem so, hunger is not a problem endemic to the contemporary world nor a calamity of today's impoverished masses alone. Hunger has affected in an almost identical manner the oppressed classes throughout history. Hunger is an unquestionable phenomenon in a class society where the exploitation of one by the other is the governing practice.

A recorded 450 famines were known in Europe between 1000 to 1850 A.D.

In periods of extreme famine, cannibalism was practiced and merchants traded in human flesh. In feudal times the inhabitants of towns besieged by famine ate wild grasses, roots, and the back of trees and, like some animals, practiced a kind of collective hibernation. They spent four or five of the coldest months of the year in a semi-lethargic state, lying down most of the time, making the least possible movement and only taking care of their most urgent needs.

Until now there has been no mention of "population explosion" or "energy crises" in the age long road of usury, exploitation and hunger. The middle ages just had production relation between two classes; feudal lords and serfs. Hunger was glorified and poverty seen as a necessary condition for wealth.

In 18th and 19th century, when colonialism dedicated to "the lofty task" of forcefully introducing its Economic-social practices and thus disrupting the existing social relations, millions were forced to perish. Half the population of Madras, Mysore and Hyderabad in India died of starvation. Between 1870 and 1900 alone, 20 million Indians starved to death. In 1868 more than 300,000 Algerians died for the same reason. In the same century 100 million persons also starved to death in China.

Famine is nothing new to Ethiopia as elsewhere in the underdeveloped neo-colonial countries. It was estimated that in the late 19th century over a quarter of a million people lost their lives. This same time also witnessed the loss of millions heads of cattle and a massive destruction of the environment.

The situation in the present century though quite drastically changed for some countries, is still the same for the majority of the colonial and neo-colonial countries. We now live in a different historical epoch where famine due to drought cannot be allowed to occur in a few developed countries, while it is made to exist in the developing neo-colonial countries. Causes & effects know is the period of monopoly capital and imperialism, which has intergrated in its underdevelopment ring, even the remotest rural backwater in the neo-colonies. Thus, when famine exists during their reign of monopoly capitalism, it is because the structural intergration of these societies to world imperialism has given rise to the condition of immobility and "under developingness."

The consequences from this imperialist relationship is the artificial super imposition in money of these backward economics of a style of life which blindly immitates the metropolitan centers, particularly by the dominant class in the periphery. The backward ruling classes whose destiny is much more dependent on the moods of Washington and Paris than their own people, can freely mess with the lives of their "subjects." They indulge in hording, grain speculation, and create artificial scarcities to sell the last possession of the starving masses intrapped in a famine crisis.

In the era of imperialism, famine is not a result of absolute want, rather whatever its incidental origin is developed from the policy of throw away prices which the profiting classes launch against the laboring masses. Only the oppressed people in the world are vulnerable to famine and hunger at this particular era in human history. It is against this background that famine, hunger and other social ills must be seen in Ethiopia as else in the neo-colonies.

As a social scientist once wrote "What at one pole is the accumulation of wealth, at the other is the accumulation of poverty, suffering, hard work, slavery, despotism, ignorance and moral degradation." The essence of class society is this very connection. The accumulation of wealth, the product of exploration, is the equivalent of poverty and hunger throughout the world. It is in light of this that we should look at the two reports of fortune. Which published a list of the 60 top centi-millionaires whose wealth, worth 20,000 million dollars in 1974 and the FAU-1974 report of the 500 million asset-less, desperately starving, weak, sick, degraded human beings.

During the 1973 and early months of 1974, the deposed government of Haile Selassie has shown the most barbaric indifference to the famine savaged people. The government in fact chose to conceal the disasterous effect of the drought on people and livestock rather than to make a common knowledge to all.

Resistance to the cruel handling of the famine problem in Ethiopia has been strong. The Addis Abeba University students offer their meals until international relief agencies are aware of the situation. In reaction the government sent a large army of policemen, broke their meeting and killed six students in cold blood.

The current military junta which deposed the emperor in September of 1974, though has propagated a major campaign against the famine, has in face done little to save the lives of the millions affected by the famine.

In wake of its war of extermination against the Eritrean masses, little time and resource has been given towards combating the famine. The fascist junta has on one side been declaring "socialism" and on the other waging a war of extermination against the Eritrean masses, progressive students, teachers, intellectuals, workers and peasants who oppose the policy of barbarism.

In light of this we invite all to our funding raising night on Saturday, April 26, 1974 at the Campus Center Auditorium.

"Hunger is an unquestionable phenomenon in a class society where the exploitation of one by the other is the governing practice."

Bromery, Gluckstern question strike

By BILL GONET
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph Bromery, reading the text of his memo to the student action committee, told yesterday's meeting of the Faculty Senate that he supported student efforts to defend current University budget requests but questioned the effectiveness of a student strike.

"I fully support your combined efforts to increase student financial aid and to defend current University budget requests," Bromery said. "However,...you will find that it (student strike action) is not a very viable method to gain external support..."

Former Provost Robert Gluckstern added that in event of a strike "faculty are expected to conduct their classes." Faculty wishing to participate were told they must request leaves without pay, make arrangements to have their classes covered, and to hold students responsible for work missed during the strike.

In other action, the senate deferred consideration of the Athletic Council Report, and passed the following motions:

—a measure urging the administration and the J. F. Kennedy Foundation to continue exploring the possibilities of locating the J.F.K. Museum and Library on the Amherst campus.

—a measure establishing an ad hoc committee for the study of the January break.

—a measure recommending incorporation of additional revisions into the Academic Personal Policy prepared by the ad-hoc multi campus committee.

Presentation of amendments to the Athletic Council Report by the Committee on the Status of Women resulted in the Senate's decision to refer the report and the proposed amendments back to the Athletic Council.

The three part Athletic Report summarizes the organization and financing of all UMass athletic programs and outlines proposed future organization and financing of these programs.

A substantial section of the report was addressed to the problem of expanding programs open to women.

Objecting to the report's failure to compare by sex the distribution of scholarship money and to provide for recruitment of full-time women head coaches for women's programs, Professor Margaret Culley, spokesperson for the Committee on the Status of Women, recommended that the reorganization of the Athletic Department advanced in the report be postponed until the following conditions are met:

—equal distribution of resources between men's and women's athletic programs.

—increased allocation of full-time positions to women in the Athletic Department.

—the substantial increase of women's athletic programs.

—equal participation of women in policy making decisions within the Athletic Department.

In his presentation of the motion recommending further study on locating the J.F.K. Museum and Library at UMass, Senate Secretary Booth said he envisioned the proposed complex a "facility that would sponsor exciting intellectual scholarship."

He added that it would also improve the Political Science and History Departments as well as improving campus library services.

specifically aimed at, "comparison of items ordered, accuracy of amounts used and accuracy of costing of these items."

In a discussion prior to the board's decision to go into executive session, Corker said that his investigation of the Stefano billing had found "no attempt not to pay the bill."

In response to a question from John Hays questioning the amount of time elapsed between the wedding reception and the processing of the bill, Corker said, "obviously anything of that extent is not normal."

Hays said, "I fail to believe any manager in this building could overlook this kind of bill for that amount of time and not think something was irregular."

In other action last night the board voted to support the Union of Student Employees as the sole bargaining agents for student and hourly employees in the Campus Center-Student Union Complex.

The board's vote of support came after board Vice-Chairperson Mark Bennett read from a letter sent to John Corker by the U.S.E.

The letter read in part, "We, the Executive Committee of the Union of Student Employees base our demand on the strength of the authorization cards which have been signed by well over fifty percent of the work force and which are presently filed with the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission."

The board also voted to establish a committee which will work this summer to investigate Campus Center adherence to affirmative action hiring practices. The committee will be charged with investigating any discrepancies involved in the hiring and payment of women and minorities in the Campus Center.

Dance marathon starts tonight

By TONY BATTISTA
Staff Reporter

Phi Mu Delta will sponsor a dance marathon for Muscular Dystrophy this weekend. Dancing will begin tonight in the Worcester Dining Commons at 9 p.m. Spectators will be asked to make a $2 donation to Muscular Dystrophy on this night. Free beer and dancing will be available to all spectators.

On Saturday and Sunday, the dancers will move to the Student Union Ballroom. They will dance from 10 a.m. to 1 a.m. on Saturday and from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

According to the marathon rules, each contestant will be allowed one short break every four hours.

The couple lasting throughout the marathon who has collected the most money for Muscular Dystrophy will be named the winner.

First place prize is $150. The second place couple will receive $75.

All money raised for Muscular Dystrophy in a particular couple's name will be counted by an outside service organization. This is to insure that there will be no disputes over the final standings.

Music is being provided by bands who are donating their time. In between bands and during breaks, records will be played to keep things moving.

The winners will be announced as soon as possible after the conclusion of the marathon on Sunday.

UMass Wildlife Society protects & researches Amherst environment

The UMass chapter of the Wildlife Society is getting involved with the wildlife environment here in the Amherst area.

The Wildlife Society on campus is part of an international society which functions in 60 countries throughout the world and has a total membership of 8,000. Most of the members are in colleges, majoring in Wildlife Biology, but it is not a requirement for enrolling in the society. On campus, 30 active members make-up the only Wildlife Society chapter in Massachusetts. The four main objectives of the society are as follows:

-To develop and promote sound stewardship of wildlife resources and of the environments upon which wildlife and man depend.

-To undertake an active role in preventing man-induced environmental degradation.

-To increase awareness and appreciation of wildlife values.

-To seek the highest standards in all activities of the wildlife profession.

It is a professional association and shouldn't be confused with the Audubon Society. Unlike the Audubon Society, the Wildlife Society does no advertising for their own publicity purposes nor do they advertise for or against any issues concerning wildlife. The society concentrates on research in wildlife environments, finding answers to problems and protecting resources.

Currently the chapter is working on a project that will inventory a 46 acre plot of land just off Northeast St. in Amherst. This land was purchased by the Wildlife department of UMass in 1910. During World War I and II the land was used as a rifle target range and a tank testing ground for the ROTC. UMass professors have planted trees and shrubs there trying to stabilize the land after it was left barren in the late 1940's. Now the land is a well established Wildlife environment.

Dr. Donald Progulski of the Wildlife department came up with a proposal to inventory the land, and the Wildlife Society made a commitment to do the job for them.

Vice-president of the Wildlife Society, Art Washburn, is in charge of 15 students working on the project. These students are working alone or in small groups on volunteer areas of the parent project. Soil analysis, water tests, tree and shrub identification, weather conditions and animal locations are some of the ingredients going into the inventory report. Each student or group of students will turn in their results, which will be compiled before it will be handed over to the Wildlife department.

It is hoped that the inventory will aid students and faculty in using the land as an outdoor classroom area, for hiking and or exploring. The land has not been used for 20-25 years and now offers many opportunities.

UMass Music Faculty Trio presents Bicentennial selections

The UMass Trio introduces the Bicentennial with selections by Ives and Brahms on Sunday at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The Trio features Estella Olevsky at the piano, Julian Olevsky, violin, and Leopold Teraspulsky on cello.

The music being presented is highly individualistic and typifies the American spirit - it could be called "Americana".

The Ives piece opens in a philosophic, lyrical rather introspective movement and progresses into TSIAJ ("The scherzo is a joke"). The composer Charles Ives, a native of Connecticut was considered by some as being too outrageous for the time when he wrote around the turn of the century and by others as 50 years ahead of his time. His music expresses the "pioneer" in America.

The Trio is a reflection of Ives' college days at Yale and recalls a short but rather serious talk, games and antics of students on a holiday afternoon and some of the tunes and songs of those days. They are suggested in a sometimes rough way. The last movement is partly a remembrance of a Sunday service on the campus which ends with "Rock of Ages".

A second selection by Brahms is a major composition of Trio repertorie.

The Recital is open to public without charge.

One woman's struggle

By SHEILA WATSON

Recently, much has been written concerning the case of Joan Little, a 20-year-old black woman from North Carolina who stands accused of 1st degree murder in the death of Beaufort County's night jailer, Clarence Alligood.

Many groups, including a number of women here at UMass have banded together in support of Ms. Little in the hopes of raising funds for her defense. This group, the Joan Little Defense Committee has a table set up in the Campus Center where volunteers distribute pamphlets, sell buttons and bumper stickers, solicit petition signatures, and collect donations.

Aside from manning this table, the women on the Defense Committee have attempted to spread the news of the plight of this young black woman via the various mediums on campus and throughout the Valley and state. They have written to her lawyers and to Ms. Little in the hope of offering her their support.

Ms. Little's case combines the issues of civil rights, women's rights, and prisoner's rights. Her case has become a means of publicizing these issues. As Ms. Little's legal defense came together in the fall, the emphasis moved away from civil rights and the historic treatment of black people in North Carolina to women's rights and the issue of killing in self-defense under sexual assault. Each respective issue has support groups that are grasping for a case such as Ms. Little's to further their cause and raise the level of public awareness over their issues.

Raising public consciousness is certainly an important step in trying to change existing conditions. It seems to me that each of these issues is interrelated and important to this case and subsequently the cases of others in similar situations. I also think that it's important for groups with a desire to have their issues brought to the fore not to overlook the specifics of this case and the implications these specifics have for the fate of Joan Little. It is essential that this case get support from these various groups. At the same time it should not be merely a rhetorical vehicle for these groups at the expense of Joan Little whose life is on the line. She needs their support and as will certainly be the case, her trial will become a forum for these issues — but her life is more important than merely spreading the issues. Her life is the issue and civil rights; woman's rights; and prisoner's rights' issues are all a part of her life right now.

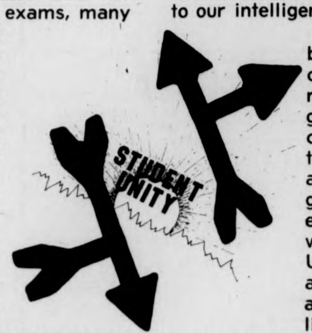
from our perspective

Pay now, not later

Students are attending classes today with a spirit that is analogous to the "last call for alcohol" at the Wall. Maybe this is an indication that leaving with a high cum this semester is more important than putting energy into the struggle for a better education in the future.

Between the moratorium and the impending doom of final exams, many of us are experiencing a personal conflicts concerning where our prerogatives lie. This atmosphere of confusion can be cleared up if we all take the time to consider what will happen in the Fall if we don't participate actively in the moratorium.



Faculty cuts will force us to attend larger and even more impersonal classes. Those who live in dormitories will discover that higher rents do not necessarily mean improved conditions when many of the maintainence employees lose their jobs. Potential commuters will not be allowed to move off campus. Minority and financial-aid students will not be able to continue their education. Single mother and married student needs will continue to be ignored. The list goes on and on...

The point is that by sacrificing three days of traditional classes, we are not losing a damn thing. For once we will be able to vent our frustration with an "academic" institution that pays more attention to profit-motivated bondholders than its students. For once we will be able to channel our anger into actions that will prevent further insults to our intelligence.

Now is the time to briefly step off the career ladder and realize that we aren't going anywhere if we can't afford to pay tuition bills. Psych. 101 and Statistics 300 are not going to help us deal with economic realities. Only we, the people of this University, can take action against those who are trying to control our lives while perpetuating our powerlessness.

Make the decision to support this moratorium. This is just the first step towards attaining student rights. If we fail to collectively fight the budget cuts that are facing us right now, it will be too late to "get involved" in September.

Comments on Prof. Wright

In the recent past the Economics Department here at UMass has experienced considerable departure from the traditional mainstream approach to economic study and investigation. This radical trend is reflected by an influx of faculty that represent a more critical attitude toward socio-economic institutions and their related political policies, as presently established. This factor may account for the rising political tone that has been felt in many economic courses. I believe that this tendency in the Economics Department is a progressive one, but only to the extent that its social costs do not exceed its benefits. A case in point will help to clarify the above statement.

I learned recently that the credibility of Prof. Arthur Wright of the Economics Department is being questioned. A professor's "record" often revolves around the extent of his-her publications and student evaluations. I would like to comment on Prof. Wright's teaching ability in the capacity of a former student.

Prof. Wright is able to develop hard core economic theory in such a way as to minimize the complexities and therefore the confusion that often surrounds relationships in economics. His presentations are clear and unbiased in terms of value systems that may distort or damage the essential mechanics of economic theory. Thus, the student leaves the course better equipped to analyze real economic behavior. This precision will ultimately lead to a more responsive understanding of the socio-political relationships that overlap and intermediate with various economics.

In essence, Prof. Wright represents a highly progressive movement in terms of the development of economic thought and application. His credibility should not be under-emphasized or questioned because he isn't outwardly consistent with a movement that has become dominant in the Economics Department.

Help the Greeks help

In past years, Greek Week was one of the largest happenings for the Greeks at UMass during the calendar year. This year, Greek Council has decided to incorporate numerous campus wide activities into the Greek Week calendar.

There are a number of events that will need support from all students in order to attain the goal of the Greek Council...to raise money for a number of charities.

If you enjoy bicycling, then ride in the Bike-a-thon sponsored by Iota Gamma Upsilon. Just by receiving pledges per mile from friends and professors and peddling for a few hours, anyone can help the fight against Leukemia. If you can spare a few hours on Sunday, April 27, call 256-6844 and help.

If you are light on your feet, we've got just the thing for you, "Dance for Those Who Can't" in the PHI MU DElta Dance Marathon. The proceeds are donated to Muscular Distrophy. The marathon takes place Friday, Saturday and Sunday, April 25th, 26th, and 27th. The money is raised by pledging a certain amount of money per competing couple. If you can dance for us, call Phi Mu Delta at 545-2163. If you can't dance, then come and support those who will at Worcester Dining Commons on Friday, April 25th from 9 p.m.-1 a.m., and on Saturday and Sunday in the S.U.B. If you can spare some time to dance for a weekend, someone...somewhere may take their first step.

"April showers bring May flowers"...so what would a May Day be without a flower sale? Sigma Delta Tau will be selling plants in the Campus Center Concourse all day May 1st. All donations will be given to the Massachusetts Heart Fund.

So help us help others. Greek Week is for everybody!

Protest of coverage

We are writing to protest the poor coverage given to the movement towards student unity and the recent demonstrations and rallies toward this goal. The Collegian is a student newspaper payed for, and run by and for students, therefore primary coverage should be given to the major concerns of the student body. The budget cuts proposed by Dukakis affect every student, so every student should know of the proposed cuts, the effects of these cuts, and the options we have to fight these cuts.

Students have the right to this information and the Collegian is the most effective means of communication. Time, place, and content of meetings, demonstrations, rallies, etc., should be highly visible, so students can't help but know about them. Once they are aware, the decision is their own. We demand that our concerns be given top priority coverage. Shit, we're all in this together!!!

School of Ed info

Hey...all you school of ed. undergrads!

Now that I've got your attention, how 'bout taking a short test on what you know about School of Ed. decision-making? It won't take too long.

1| What does the Executive Committee do? Can you name a member of it?

2| What does the Cabinet do? Can you name a member of it?

3| Can you name one of the five students that represent you on the Faculty Assembly?

4| Can you name your Cluster's chairperson?

5| Do you know the name of our Acting-Dean?

If you could answer 2 or more of these questions, you should be proud. If not, why not?

Each of these people or groups has a definite say in policy, money, fees, tenure, curriculum, program organization, and so on. Essentially, you don't... not unless you want it, not unless you're willing to hold it.

There is a meeting to gauge and organize undergrad participation in the decisions of the School on Monday night at 7:00, Rm. 162 Campus Center.

Be there... it's important.

Bread and taxes

There were three days of national significance last week. They were Income Tax Deadline Day, April 15, Food Day, April 17, and Patriots' Day, April 19: I would like to share some reflections I had about the first two of these days.

Food Day, April 17: Food Day did not attract the ballyhoo it did last year (Remember the one day fast?), but it did nevertheless draw some attention to the various causes of hunger. Yet, there are three conspicuous causes of hunger which curiously escaped commentary. I can name them. They are Russia, China, and India, an unholy trinity made one by virtue of the practice of agricultural socialism. Catholics should appreciate the analogy.

Consider each country individually. Let's start with Russia. Historically, Russia has always been an exporter of food, or at least the Ukraine has been. Yet in 1973, it concluded the biggest grain importing deal in history with America, which has only 1-3 the wheat acreage of Russia. And this was but the latest in a series of grain deals.

China likewise must import, despite the fact that most of its population is devoted to farming, and despite (or because of) the fact that agriculture, like everything else, is run with a draconian authority. This year they will import several million tons of wheat. And though they used to be the only significant producer of soybeans, it is now the United States which produces most of the world's supply. The Richmond News Leader recently noted that if Red China only matched Nationalist China's agricultural productivity, that they would export, and not import food. As for India, it is sufficient to note that the imposition of socialist principles took India away from the road to agricultural self sufficiency and helped make it the breadbasket case of the world.

'...we need a tax loophole structure like the one we have, because by and large, loopholes promote the well being of all...'

Let us hope that the immensely productive capitalist farmers of The United States, Canada, and Australia have good weather. We'll need it to feed socialism's hungry.

Income Tax Deadline Day, April 15: There is a regressive side of the progressive income tax structure, caused by inflation, where pre-inflation tax rates are used to tax post inflation income, thereby causing a net loss in real income. In Canada, the tax rates are tied into the cost of living, so that if inflation occurs, the rates will go up to match the higher cost of living.

I'd like to share some very general observations about the infamous income tax loopholes. What is a tax loophole? It is nothing more than an incentive. It is a cash award the government makes in order to encourage a desirable expenditure of money. For example, the government proposes to give $250, in form of an itemized deduction, to anybody who insulates his home, because it wishes to encourage energy conservation.

'...let us hope that the immensely productive capitalist farmers... have good weather. We'll need it to feed socialism's hungry...'

There are two kinds of loopholes. One kind encourages money holders to invest in the government, and the other kind stimulates the private sector. Examples of these are, respectively, municipal bonds, where the incentive to invest is the promise that the interest on the bonds will be tax free, and property depreciation, which encourages construction.

It's all very well to demand the elimination of loopholes by pointing to the example of oil billionaires who pay no taxes. But remember that such a person can take advantage of loopholes only if he spends money elsewhere. For example, one could force the DuPonts to pay taxes on the interest from New York City municipal bonds, but if this were done, why the DuPonts would no longer invest in New York City. Nobody would. The City would go broke, which would do an awful lot of people no good at all.

The truth is that we need a tax loophole structure like the one we have, because by and large, loopholes promote the well being of all. Now, if you were to say to me, "I can demonstrate that tax loophole X makes Mr. Y rich AND does not nevertheless promote any public economic good and therefore should be eliminated," I'll say, "Fine, demonstrate it. But do not think to eliminate the entire structure because you have succeeded in finding one bad one."

A new housing plan

"A lie on the throne is a lie, still, and truth in a dungeon is truth, still; and a lie on the throne is on the way to defeat, and truth in a dungeon is on the way to victory."

-Anonymous

It looks as if the lies flying down from the "throne" in Whitmore lately may defy the optimism of the above quote. For a number of reasons, mostly our own inability as students to organize, we have had to watch an endless parade of Nixonian half truths insult us this semester, and from optimistic beginnings we may yet find ourselves worse off than we were in January. Consider:

Early in the semester and through most of last semester both the Chancellor and Vice Chancellor Gage claimed that they could see an end to mandatory dormitory living for all as of next semester. This was, of course, in the face of lawsuits challenging the University's right to make a person live in a dorm.

Now the tune is different. After throwing everyone off guard with their early proclamations, the Administration has gone in the exact opposite direction, and it looks as if MORE people will have to live on campus in the Fall, this thanks to the repeal of the rule which allows 21 year old non-seniors to live off campus. And what of the earlier statements, Messrs. Bromery and Gage? Are they now "inoperative?"

Just as a sidelight, veterans will probably be exempt from the ruling, and that's cool (can you imagine a 23 year old freshman faced with three years in the dorm?). But has anyone stopped to think that in a strange way this will discriminate against women? How many woman veterans do you know?

Incidentally, this isn't a student problem alone. Administrators in the residential areas aren't happy with what's coming down either. For one thing, Whitmore isn't keeping them informed of their decisions, and since they reverse their stands on everything with regularity it's hard to know what current policy is at any given moment. Whitmore actually tells these administrators to "read the Collegian and the Hamp Gazette" to get the latest information. Neat, huh? And these are the people who have to face the angry students. They've become the flack catchers for Whitmore, and they aren't even responsible for what's happening.

To top it all off, these people are getting screwed in other unique ways. For instance, the Whitmore gang has informed administrators who are signed to multi-year contracts that if budget cuts slash too deeply their contracts will not necessarily be honored.

Now if you had just signed a multi-year contract last year, and then went out and taken a mortgage on a new house, on the strength of that contract, how would you feel? Suddenly someone tells you that your job security is nil. What do you do with your mortgage then?

Oh well, maybe it's just Whitmore's new Master Plan. First they get all employees on multi-year contracts to sell their homes because they can't meet the payments, then they'll offer to let all the homeless administrators live in dorms, solving the occupancy problem there. The way things have been happening lately, it wouldn't be surprising.

Can it be that Ron Ziegler has become an employee of the University secretly?

The drafty winds of change

By GREGG WILSON

If you can take time out from your daily routine, glance at Wednesday's N.Y. Times; you'll find an article quite relevant to the UMass student movement against budget cuts. It seems that over the past decade the costs of college education have risen 15 per cent faster than the Government's Cost of Living Index. Inflation reflected in rising wages and prices has sent budgets skyrocketing. Stanford University reported its costs increased almost 1 ½ times the rate of inflation.

Ironically, if you continue on into the business and financial section, you will discover that the petroleum industry reported that their 1974 earnings increased by 41 per cent. Although stagflation has put higher education in a perilous situation the major corporations continued on a profit making spree.

Someone must bear the costs of these increases. Although it was not the UMass community that caused inflation, officials in Whitmore and the Governor's office propose that you, "the student," accept the responsibility of elevating the impact of inflation. Fee increases and program cutbacks will be inevitable in the absence of an effective and unified student protest.

Yet economy moves will not stop there. The years ahead promise the introduction of new methods to decrease costs. Educators nationwide have recommended a "radical restructuring of the teaching process," alterations which are destined to damage the educational process. They favor the introduction of audio-visual teaching to cut down on faculty costs. UMass has already seen the introduction of this ineffective teaching method in the Engineering Department. Only half-awakened UMies are forced to attend an 8 o'clock lecture on the tube. Soon we may see this method used in all courses taught at the introductory level. Friends of mine at Northeastern have also seen the introduction of T.V. teaching at their university. Their reaction "It ---- (you supply the obscenity!)".

Other recommendations include the elimination of alternative courses which attract relatively few students. Does this mean that BDIC and University Without Walls will fall prey to the Governor's cleaver next year? They also recommend increased student-teacher ratios and more emphasis on channeling new students into two-year community colleges, thus eliminating the need of expanding faculties and facilities to receive the college students of tomorrow. The stand we take now involves the plight of members of our family who may wish to follow us here.

Public higher education is always the first to feel the crunch of cost increases. If the UMass community does not join together and "send a message to Boston" the needs of public higher education will fall by the wayside.

The moratorium is a perfect opportunity to show the legislature we have the unity to press against cutbacks. Writing letters to your state senator and representative will consume a mere 15 minutes of your time. Demonstrating at the State House on April 30th can only enhance our chances of being triumphant.

The future of higher education at the state level rests on "your shoulders", don't shirk the responsibility. If our efforts fail, others may give up without even trying!

5-College course registration easier

By NANCY DAWSON
Staff Reporter

Registration for off-campus courses among the five colleges should be a much easier process this semester thanks to the efforts of the Academic Committee of the Five College Student Coordinating Board (FCSCB).

During the week of pre-registration, April 28-May 2, a student will be available full time in the University Registrar to provide any assistance in matters concerning five college courses.

The Academic Committee also has someone in CASIAC at UMass, not only during pre-registration but all the time, working to supply students with five college information. Another source is the Campus Center Assistance Desk.

Similar services exist throughout the rest of the area colleges. All the registration centers will be equipped with five college catalogs and description guides. Referral lists will also be on hand with names students can call at the different schools for further information on a particular subject.

Chairman of the Academic Committee Andrew Rizzo, a UMass representative to the FCSCB, said "Our whole purpose is to make everything easier." He said his main activity has been "coordinating this whole thing for all five colleges."

Rizzo pointed out that these services are being funded by Five College Incorporated.

"We're trying to encourage people to take full advantage of the Pioneer Valley — there's so much to offer," he explained.

Almost all students who have taken five college courses have "statistically been very satisfied," according to Rizzo.

UMass, however, trails the other schools in the amount of students who have participated in five college courses this past year. Rizzo said 964 students signed up from Hampshire College, 630 from Amherst College, 564 from Mount Holyoke College, 559 from Smith College, and 379 from UMass.

The FCSCB sponsors Five College Bus transportation connecting the colleges by half-hourly operation. Library and research facilities are freely accessible to a student from any one of the campuses, and there is also a meal plan exchange between schools.

The FCSCB holds open meetings every Wednesday at 8 p.m. on a rotating location basis between the colleges. This Wednesday the board meets at Mount Holyoke College in the 1886 Room of Mary Wooley Hall. Anyone is welcome to attend.

New laws to affect motorcycle operators

"Motorcycle operators are advised that beginning in June there will be two new laws governing their operation on the highways of the Commonwealth," Deputy Registrar Francis McCone said today.

—Effective on June 11, 1975, operators of motorcycles which are not equipped with windshields or screens are required to wear eyeglasses, goggles or protective face shields.

—Effective on June 23, 1975, operators of motorcycles shall ride no more than two abreast and shall ride single file when passing.

These laws have been enacted for the safety and protection of motorcycle operators and must be obeyed.

Black parents invited Saturday

On Saturday, parents and guardians of Black (CCEBS) students have been invited to UMass (Amherst) to increase their knowledge of, participation in, and support for CCEBS.

The day's activities will include:
9:00 a.m.-10:00 a.m.: Registration
10:00 a.m.-11:30 a.m.: Orientation (Hasbrouck Laboratory)
12 noon-2:00 p.m.: Lunch (Campus Center Auditorium)
2:30 p.m.-6:30 p.m.: Parent-Student Academic Counseling (New Africa House)
8:30 p.m.-11:00 p.m.: Evening Concert (Bowker Auditorium)

From the day's activities, it is intended that the parents, in attendance, will come away with an increased knowledge of their child's academic progress in "higher education" and of the support mechanisms that are assisting their child in the attainment of their college degree.

Energy Coalition will sponsor free workshop in Northampton

On Sunday, from 1-5 p.m. the Alternative Energy Coalition of Hampshire County will sponsor the second in its series of ALTERNATIVE ENERGY WORKSHOPS. The workshops will be held at the People's Institute at 38 Gothic St., ¼ block from the Hampshire County courthouse in downtown Northampton. There will be no admission charge, and child care will be provided.

The afternoon schedule will consist from 1-1:40 p.m. of coffee and refreshments (provided by the A.E.C.) and time to browse literature and displays. At 1:40 p.m. there will be a general session, consisting of a solar energy slide show given by Fran Koster of UMass' Future Studies Program and the introduction of workshop leaders. Workshops will begin at 3 p.m.

The workshop topics will be: solar, wind, wood and design. The solar workshop leaders will be Fran Koster and Ran Bullard, a carpenter and associate with Solar Energy Works in Springfield. Helen and Klaus Kroner of Energy Associates in Leverett will lead the wind energy workshop. Larry Gay, Vermont author of Heating with Wood, will conduct the wood energy workshop. Tulio Inglese, NACUL Center architect of Amherst, and Curtis Johnson, UMass teacher of Housing Design and Construction, will present separate workshops on designing for energy conservation. Inglese will present a topical slide show to open his design workshop.

Course to be offered for execs, businessmen

A course in leadership and organizational change will be offered executives, presidents, industrial staff administrators, and other high level business managers, by the UMass School of Business Administration, in April with a follow-up session in September.

The first session will be this Sunday through Friday and the follow-up will be Sept. 11 and 12. The seminar is designed to provide frameworks from the social and behavioral sciences to help practicing managers improve their effectiveness in implementing planned change. Emphasis will be on problem-solving and decision-making.

Seminar title is "Leadership and Organizational Change: new perspectives in organizational development."

Speakers will be: Kenneth H. Blanchard, co-director of the Center for Curricular and Organizational Studies, UMass School of Education; Frederick Finch, associate management professor, UMass School of Business Administration; George S. Odiorne, UMass dean of business administration; D. Anthony Butterfield, UMass associate management professor; Arthur Elliot Carlisle, UMass management professor; and Joseph A. Litterer, UMass management professor.

Ganienkeh Support Committee to discuss Native American plight

By JOE COTTER
Progressive News Service

The Ganienkeh Support Committee will be conducting a workshop on Saturday, at 1:00 p.m. in Moore House Lounge. There will be discussion and information concerning the plight of the Native Americans within the Iroquois Confederacy who are settled in the Ganienkeh Nation located in Upper New York State.

The Mohawk Nation, in alliance with other tribes, re-established the ancient Indian Nation of Ganienkeh, "Land of the Flint", on public land in Herkimer County N.Y. near Big Moose Lake last spring. Their claim to the land, both in New York and Vermont, stems from the prevailing belief that no sale of that land was authorized by those Native Americans involved.

However, New York State refers back to a sale that took place in 1797 by War Chief Joseph Brant, transferring much of the claimed land to the State of New York. The Six Nation Confederacy insists that the sale was invalid since they were never consulted.

Ganienkeh is in the process of becoming a self sufficient nation where co-operation will replace competition. Education will be taught in both English and Native tongue with emphasis on traditional Native American Culture.

The people of Ganienkeh, have contacted the United Nations, the President of the United States and the Governers of New York and Vermont in an attempt to establish a recognized sovereign nation. In addition, they have submitted a request for foreign relations to the U.S. Government.

Although the people of Ganienkeh have been subject to intense legal and personal hassles from both State and Federal Governments, they will continue to proceed on the basis of a permanent existence. They have developed excellent relations with their neighbors with the exception of a few intoxicated hunters.

According to Gerry Morton of the Ganienkeh Support Committee, "supplies are still needed. Blankets, wood stoves, farming utensils, farm animals, seed for planting, food staples such as grains, flour, nuts, potatoes and sugar are vital. Rope, nails and other construction tools are necessary for building shelters, schools and other facilities."

In addition to the workshop Saturday, there will be a Spring Pow Wow to be held on May 9th and 10th, sponsored by the Wounded Knee Support Committee. Among the speakers will be Kawkwirekeron, a spokesperson from Ganienkeh. For more information contact the Ganienkeh Support Committee in the Veterans Coalition, Room 411, Student Union.

WFCR airs 'The Artist and the Law'

If you have not yet listened to THE ARTIST AND THE LAW on WFCR (88.5 FM) you still have time to tune in to the last broadcast at 7:00 p.m., this Sunday, April 27. The four program series is devoted to a look at a current movement by visual artists to secure additional legal rights for themselves and for their works which the law has not traditionally seen fit to provide. The guests on the program include artists, lawyers, copyright experts, gallery directors and collectors. The host, Richard Evans is a practicing attorney in Amherst, who has represented a number of artists.

Upward Bound wants you!

Due to budget cutbacks, the Upward Bound program will only have 2 full-time staff members for the 1975-1976 year to provide services to 70 students from low-income backgrounds. The Upward Bound staff will not be able to adequately serve the students with individualized counseling which the students in the program definitely need.

The Upward Bound program directly affects the lives of young Black students in Massachusetts.

How can you, a student, help?

The Center for Experiential Education can place you in a pre-professional position on the Upward Bound staff. You can earn a full year of academic credit and a small living allowance.

If you are seeking an unselfish learning experience, act immediately. The internship program begins in June 1975.

Pre-professional positions are open to UMASS students and students in the Five College Consortium. Minority students are urged to apply.

The Center for Experiential Education urges faculty members to refer students to the Center.

For more information call Larry Scott at 545-1381, or come to the office between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. located at 315 Arnold House, UMASS Amherst.

Save the Whales Rally set for Saturday at Amherst Common

Tomorrow at noon there will be a Save the Whales Rally on the Amherst Common. The group will assemble at 11:00 a.m. by the UMass pond, and at 11:30 will march uptown along North Pleasant Street to the center of town. Guest speakers at the rally will be Jim Collins, state representative and Madge Ertel from the Institute for Man and His Environment. Don Sineti, a folk singer from Connecticut, member of THE MORGANS, will sing and lead various sea shanties.

The rally will culminate the activities of a valley wide Save the Whales campaign this spring. Peter Lamdin and Bill Levinger, coordinators of the project, view the plight of the whales as a case example of mans' abuse of his environment. They see the Save the Whales movement as a symbol for environmental concern. Efforts this spring have been primarily educational.

Annual Water Dunk slated to start Monday

For the fourth consecutive year, UMass students and Amherst area residents will find out who is really all wet at the annual Water Dunk, Monday and Tuesday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on the concourse level of the University's Campus Center.

A donation of $.25 to the Western Massachusetts Chapter of the American Heart Association, gives each participant three chances to lodge a basketball in a target pail. A successful toss will give a water dunking to such UMass luminaries as Coaches Jack Leaman and Dick Garber, National Baton Twirling Champ Diane Luciani and Dr. Fergus Clysdale of the Food Science Department.

All proceeds from the two-day event, sponsored by Sigma Alpha Mu, will be contributed to the Western Massachusetts Chapter of the American Heart Association.

UMass, Stockbridge students to hold 40th Annual Livestock Classic

Students from UMass and the Stockbridge Agricultural School will demonstrate their skills in animal husbandry this weekend at the 40th Annual Livestock Classic at Grinnell Arena.

As many as 150 entries are expected in the exhibit of animal husbandry skills, Friday evening, and all day Saturday, beginning at 9 a.m.

According to student Eve Breitung, young people majoring in laboratory animal technology or animal science at Stockbridge are required to show an animal in the Classic. Students in the four-year UMass animal science program also exhibit livestock in the competition.

Qualified judges from throughout the northeastern United States will inspect cows, horses, swine, oxen, sheep, ponies and other farm stock raised by students.

Saturday's events include a baby animal show at midday, an inexpensive all-you-can-eat barbecue, hayrides and refreshments. The public is invited. There is no admission charge.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

FRIDAY, April 25 — Born today, you are given to high enthusiasms and low periods of disinterest, to great general optimism about everything and anything and equally great general pessimism about all and sundry. You are, in short, moody. Self-confident and filled with personal misgivings by turn, you blow hot and cold by turns and at times thoroughly confuse those who must work, play, or live with you. Ultimately, those who have considerable experience of you learn not to judge you when you are in extremes of reaction; you must do the same!

Although you may attempt to hide it, you have a deeply spiritual nature — which actually explains why one of your moody tendencies does not succumb to real depression. No matter how "down" you get, you cling to a belief that the tide will turn; even in your most pessimistic moments, you are able to remember that the pendulum will swing, that optimism will again arise. This belief and this memory are the offshoots of your basically spiritual character.

You possess more than a little artistic ability and may well enter the field of commercial illustration. You enjoy the outward expression of inner emotions through painting, music, literature — but you may never reach the creative heights you might until you also attain more emotional balance. Without such balance, you cannot be objective; without such balance, you must remain unpredictable.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SATURDAY, April 26

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Results of your efforts may not be quite up to par today. Children may make it difficult for you to move ahead quickly. Evening brings relief.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Romance is in the air for the Gemini who is looking for it. Make sure, however, that you don't come up with something you can't handle.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Selectivity is the key to this Saturday's success. You have the power to choose your own activities; employ it wisely. Details tell the tale.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Cultivate another's friendship, but not so obviously that you appear gauche. Good manners and a demonstration of good taste take you far.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Painstaking attention to detail will ultimately make this a highly productive Saturday — though results may not be in for many weeks.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — If you are discriminating in your choice of friends you can avoid the kind of influence that will cause personal failure by day's end.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — It is the fastidious Scorpio who is best able to withstand the onslaught of the ill-mannered today. Children make the day difficult — and joyous!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Where details of a new at-home project are concerned, be watchful today. Those who would like to see you suffer a setback may work against you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Frugality is essential if you are to see a profit at the end of the day. Don't be talked into expenses you can't really afford.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Remain open to the idea of change, even though you may be unable to make up your mind about it conclusively. The status quo may stultify.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Benevolent action on the part of another may make this a Saturday of exceptional gain for you. Do your part in joint efforts early in the day.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Unless you are willing to demonstrate your loyalty to another today, don't proclaim it and cause disappointment in the long run. Guard words well.

Fraternity sponsors Heart Fund Marathon

Preparations are now being made for the Second Annual Heart Fund Marathon to be run by UMass students from Boston's State House to the Amherst campus on May 1. Sigma Alpha Mu, a UMass fraternity, is sponsoring the run along Route 9 to raise contributions for the Western Massachusetts Chapter of the American Heart Association.

At 9 a.m. Governor Michael Dukakis is scheduled to light the symbolic Heart torch which volunteer fraternity runners will relay along Route 9 throughout the day. The participants will be accompanied by a bus carrying fraternity and sorority members who will solicit donations along the way. The marathon will conclude at Fraternity Park on the Amherst campus at 8 p.m. where Chancellor Randolph Bromery will greet the group returning.

Representatives from each fraternity house at UMass wil be running the course. Each house will also be making contributions to kick off the Marathon.

Kathie Lawson, who has participated in National and World University meets, will start and end the 11 hour marathon.

UMass gets $350,000 from science society

U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., and Sen. Edward W. Brooke have announced that the National Science Foundation has awarded a $350,000 grant to UMass. The grant will help support the University's Materials Research Laboratory. Directors are Frank E. Karasz and R.S. Porter of the Department of Polymer Science.

Israeli educator Tabenkin speaks Monday in Machmer

On Monday evening, at 7 p.m., Moshe Tabenkin will be speaking at UMass in Machmer W11. Tabenkin is an outstanding Israeli poet, educator and author. He was born in 1917 in Kinneret and was educated in Kibbutz Ein Herod. His prolific activity as a writer was carried on concurrently with his Kibbutz movement activities and service in the Haganah and Palmach. His first collection of poetry was published in 1940 and was followed by many other publications of poems, stories and literary critiques.

In addition to his literary activity, Moshe

Portnoy's Complaint revisited

This Sunday the Hillel Brunch series will offer an unusual program entitled "Portnoy's Complaint Revisited". The program will be addressed mainly to the adjustment problems of Jewish students on the campus.

The two speakers will be Saul Perlmutter, director of Hillel at UMass and professor Ted Slovin, associate director of Student Development at UMass and member of the psychology department.

Professor Slovin's current interest and attention is directed to campus community psychology.

The brunch will start at 11 a.m. in Colonial Lounge and is open to all.

Weightlifter Eric Wiseman comes up out of a clean and jerk motion. Weightlifting comes to UMass this weekend.

New England Amateur Athletic Union weightlifting at Boyden

By JANE HOLZAPFEL

On Saturday, April 26 at 1:00 p.m. there will be a New England AAU Invitational weight lifting meet at Boyden Auxiliary gym.

The UMass weight lifting team will be competing against other lifters from colleges throughout New England.

The range of weight classes is similar to that of wrestling: starting at the flyweight class of 114 pounds and ranging up to the super heavyweight class of 242 pounds and over.

The UMass team is favored to win the team title, with outstanding lifters in varied weight classes.

Lifting in the 165 pound class is Joseph Satlak, in the 181 pound division are Brian Wiseman and Fred Myerson. In the 198 pound class is team captain Doug Cooney, Jeffrey Smith and John Donnelly. Finally, in the heavyweight class (198-242 pounds) is Eric Wiseman.

Each contestant performs a minimum of two lifts. The first is the two-handed snatch, in which the lift is one in one movement. The second lift is performed in two parts, the so-called clean-and-jerk. Each contestant has three attempts for a lift within the two different types of lifts.

There will be a general admission fee of twenty-five cents, admission is free for those with a student I.D.

Dance for Muscular Dystrophy

By CYNDY ADAMS

Energetic couples will be dancing for twenty-six hours for charity and cash prizes in the third annual Dance Marathon getting under way at 9 p.m. this Friday night at the Worcester D.C.

UMass fraternity Phi Mu Delta is sponsoring the "dancathon" to raise money for Muscular Dystrophy.

"Money is being raised in two ways", co-ordinator Ray Kittredge said in a telephone interview. The bulk of the money will come from the entry fees of participants.

"Each couple is asked to raise a $30 minimum entry fee. This can be done through pledges, door to door collections; really anyway the couple can get money", Kittredge said. "They can even rob a bank if they don't get caught", he added chuckling.

When the dance is over Sunday afternoon, "first and second prizes of $150 and $75 will be awarded to the couples who raised the most money among those still dancing," Kittredge continued.

Money for M. D. will also be raised through a raffle. Kittredge said that non-dancers can go to the D.C. Friday night, listen to the band, encourage the dancers, drink beer and get a raffle ticket for a two dollar cover charge. Prizes to be raffled include dinner for two at the Rusty Scupper.

"The Dance Marathon will consist of three sessions: the first in Worcester D.C. from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m., the second at the S.U. Ballroom from 10 a.m. Saturday to 1 a.m. Sunday, and the third at the S.U.B. Sunday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. A total of seven bands will perform," Kittredge said.

Registration for participants is at 8 p.m. Friday at Worcester D.C.

Some dare to call it justice

From the New York Daily News

Ceasar Cedeno popped up with the bases loaded, in a spring training game went to the dugout and put his fist through the glass water cooler, for which Preston Gomez has assessed him $200.

Some people say that if Cesar had been punished properly when he was involved in a serious crime a year ago, he might by now have learned to better control himself, but I can't blame him for being confused at this point. When a woman was shot dead with his gun, he was charged with involuntary manslaughter and was fined $100. Now, for breaking a water cooler, he is fined $200. Wouldn't that mix you up?

No horsetale at all

The UMass equestrian team now leads the field in their quest for the Region III equestrian championships.

The team has been battling with Colby College for first place all season and just recently overtook Colby in an Intercollegiate Horse show held at the University of Hartford.

The UMass equestrian team's next competition will this weekend at Colby College.

The UMass dancers; a very talented group

By SUSAN DOSKOCIL

The University Dancers and the Concert Dance Group presented their annual Spring Concert last week Thursday through Saturday in Bowker Auditorium. Alternating programs provided the time necessary for all 16 works to be shown.

Francia McClellan's "Scenes From West Street Minds," a fascinating panorama of many different moods effectively displayed the versatility of its dancers. They were expressed through the different characters portrayed by the dancers — at times figures such as a finger-wagging tramp appeared, sometimes people who seemed to be having a super good day, at one point several dancers collaborated to emotionlessly form a sculpture of themselves to be decorated with leftover reigns, and at times they were robots or scuttling animals.

Costume changes from street-wear to practice attire to reigns added to the changes; so did the baffling, echoing, weird, metalic music.

As always, one of the smoothest flowing yet intense dances of all four evenings was Richard Jones' big work; for this concert it was "Rodin's Antelier". Perhaps he and Rodin are of the same mind; for as we watched Adam (Jo Orlando) awaken with awe to experience the wonder of his body through first slow and tentative, and later, assured, stronger movements, we know that both Rodin and Jones see their work through the human figure as works of love.

The remorse, desire and anguish felt by Rodin's mistress and student Camille was portrayed exactly right by Joyce McGowan in the "Fugitive Love" segment. Jones was her fiery powerful lover, a role perfectly filled by the artist.

The set utilized platforms, a sculptor's hanging cloths and poor lighting, and at least one slide projected above the dancers of the sculpture upon which each of the four segments was based.

Another audience favorite was the spoof of the Fred Astaire-Cyd Charisse "Dancing in the Dark" routine from the MGM movie Bandwagon. Marilyn Patton and Richard Guimond co-choreographed and executed this amusing piece of the evening's entertainment titled "You'll Find it in Aisle B" (— If you missed the performances, it began with him pushing her onto stage in a grocery cart, and they left in reverse positions).

The other 13 numbers of the companies four night engagement covered a large variety of subject matter and expression, and very clearly demonstrated the competence of this talented group.

Last chance to see the University Dancers will be on Saturday, May 17 at Colby College in Maine.

Gorillas revisit massacre site

By TOM CROWLEY

Tomorrow Garber's Gorillas will revisit the scene at Williamston where one of last year's best games was played. Last year UMass walloped Williams College 21-1.

Williams is sporting a 3-1 record, besting Springfield (11-10), Yale (10-9), and Union (14-11). Their one loss was dealt to them by UConn, 12-7. The Minutemen dumped the Huskies themselves 16-3.

Coach Garber described them as "a quick team, good stickhandling, good offense." Coach Garber said "they have a strong midfield. That's their strong point."

"I saw them beat Yale," Coach Garber said "they have a strong midfield. That's their strong point."

"I saw them best Yale," Coach Garber said. "They were down 7-0 at half. They hung in there and played good."

Coach Garber is more concerned with the condition of his team. The team is banged up and have quite a few injuries.

"Billy O'Brien is a doubtful starter," Coach Garber said, "But everybody should be well." O'Brien is the team's second leading scorer, behind Jeff Spooner, with eight goals and twenty-four assists.

Being physical was how UConn beat Williams and the condition of the squad could affect the style. UConn used this physical style to keep Williams off-balance and UMass used this tactic last year.

"We can play that way, but that's not our normal game," Coach Garber said.

If the lacrosse team can play its game, as the cliche goes, it will win. Probably not as big as last year, but they'll win.

Women's crew seeks new laurel

By TERESA HANAFIN

Still riding the crest of the wave of victory over BU and Connecticut College last Sunday, our dauntless women's crew team hosts Dartmouth this weekend in hopes of adding another laurel to their crown of glories.

Sunday morning's race will be at home on the Connecticut River. This affords many who have not yet seen the women rowers the opportunity to watch them in action.

UMass will unleash three boats against the Ivy League crew, as Rose Sellew's beginners will also race.

The varsity boat hopes to prove that its' victory over BU was not a quirk due to poor conditions. A defeat handed the Ivies would be sweet revenge for the loss to Radcliffe two weeks ago.

The JV are anxious to show how tough they can really be. A broken fin in their first race two weeks ago slowed them down, and high winds on the Charles last week prevented them from even racing.

And last but not least, the beginning boat gets a second chance to show its stuff on the temperamental Connecticut against a composite boat of Dartmouth and UMass spares. A disappointing loss to Middletown Rowing Club marked their debut last week.

All three races will be 1000 meters, which again means some steadily powerful rowing from start to finish.

The home advantage should help UMass, although the Connecticut can be very unpredictable.

And just as important, this race is near enough that students and friends can show their support for these hard-working women by showing up at the boathouse (just down Route 9) at 10 Sunday and cheering them to victory.

Crew vs. USCG

By BOB NORTON

The men's crew is off to New London, Conn. tomorrow in search of a vital victory with the Dad Vail only two weeks hence. The crew faces a tough Dad Vail foe in the United States Coast Guard Academy and hopes to pick up the pieces and put it all together after last weekend's stink from Harvard.

Coast Guard is likewise coming off a big loss to the Naval Academy, so (please excuse the pun) they're in the same boat. In all probability, the winner of tomorrow's regatta will capture the number one seed for the nationals at Philadelphia. Coast Guard has swept Trinity College whom UMass had trouble with in their opening race. If the crew can knock off Coast Guard and gain the first seed, chances are that they will encounter easier preliminary and semi-final heats at the Vail.

Varsity stroke Steve Loomer is back after a two week bout with a viral infection. Coach Bill Mahoney has once again reshuffled his line-ups to accommodate the situation, and after a shaky first half of the season, hopes to have assembled the winning combination as the team heads into the final stretch.

Spring football

By BILL ELIAS

This Saturday the Massachusetts' Minutemen will finish spring workouts with their annual intrasquad football game starting at 2 o'clock in Alumni Stadium.

Team selections were announced Wednesday for the game coming after a month of vigorous training. Leading the white-shirted team will be Brian McNally and Mike Fallon at quarterback. On defense John Penny and Bob Levine are returning from last year's Yankee Conference championship team.

The red squad has quarterbacks Fred Kelliher, Pete Colton, and Joe Harrington, calling the plays. The strength of the defense will be against the run, with Ed McAleney and Dennis Fenton at defensive ends.

Earlier Saturday three highly successful football coaches will speak at the 14th Annual University of Massachusetts Football Clinic according to an announcement made by Minuteman Head Coach Dick MacPherson.

Bill Arnsparger, head coach of the New York Giants, Carmen Cozza of Yale University, and Dick Collins of Andover High School, will talk primarily on defensing the various option offenses during the day long clinic.

Spikers in Philly; race Penn Relays

By SCOTT HAYES

When fourteen members of the UMass track team lace their spikes today and tomorrow in Philadelphia, they'll have to make sure their double knots are secure because more than likely there will be 35,000 fans watching at one of the biggest track relay meets in the world, the Penn Relays.

The meet features fourteen hours of competition and over 150 races. In recent years the Relays have averaged 5,000 competitors. The meet is well organized. In fact, one race is started every five minutes.

A year ago, the UMass participants set five school records against the outstanding athletes that gather annually for the Philadelphia classic.

Coming off victory at the Boston College Relays, coach Ken O'Brien anticipates Standards to fall this season. School records are expected to be bettered in just about every event. The performances may also qualify members of the team for the NCAA Championships.

Joe Martens will have to put all of his talent together and concentrate on his high jumping. The UMass flopper will be challenging fourteen seven-foot high jumpers.

Randy Thomas will be competing in the three-mile run, an event in which he finished fifth last year. Bill Gillin is slated to run the 3,000 meter steeplechase. Last season Gillin placed third in the steeple. Bob and Ken Adamson, along with Toney Pendleton, are entered as competitors in the College Division long jump.

The sprint-medley team consists of tri-captain Tommy Beland in the 440, Mark Healy and Pendleton in the 220 and Devin Croft, anchorman and half-miler.

The mile relay includes Beland, Healy, Curt Stegerwald and John Richards. Stegerwald will also be competing in the 440-yard hurdles, which is the first scheduled event of the two-day competition.

Both the sprint-medley and the mile relays will hold trials today and qualifiers will advance to the finals tomorrow.

One of the big events, the distance-medley relay "Championship of America" race, will hold finals today. Jim Hunt (880), Richards (440), Chris Farmer (three-quarter mile) and Thomas (mile) compose the UMass entry.

Hunt and Farmer will team up with Mike Hansen and Dave Lipinski to compete in the two-mile relay.

Last year's Penn Relays resulted in six UMass runners qualifying for the NCAA's. Warm weather during the past week has helped the trackmen in workouts and O'Brien feels that the team performance at BC indicates enthusiasm that can only help the individual athletes as they compete in the best track meet in the United States.

PHILLY FILLERS---Once again, the Ben Franklin mile boasts an exceptional field. Tony Waldrop will be returning to defend his mile title he earned a year ago and will be joined by Kenyan Olympian, Wilson Waigwa. Rick Wolhuter and Dan Fikes are also expected to see action.

Yankee Conference titles on line

Netmen underdogs

By BILL EDELSTEIN

The UMass tennis team will be seeking to regain the YanCon championship that was stripped from them last year by Vermont, when they participate in the Yankee Conference Tournament, hosted by UVM, April 26-27.

This is what the season is all about for coach Steve Kosakowski's racketeers, and the tennis mentor figures his team has a definite chance to oust the tourney favorite Catamounts.

Will coach Kosakowski be disgruntled if his team doesn't walk away with their seventh YanCon championship in nine years? Will the team be disappointed if they don't turn in their best performances of the season? Will your favorite puppy become rabid if you inject him with rabies? (Take your time answering that last one.) The coach summed up the answers to all of these questions (except the rabid puppy stumper, which can be easily unravelled by a zoology professor) by stating, with a slight Vince Lombardi accent, "there's no place after first place."

Vermont nipped the Minutemen (UVM's rabid puppy impersonation) 5-4 earlier in the year, and one of the Catamounts' starters was sidelined for that match. The defending champs, who, Kosakowski says have the best balanced team in the conference, also have almost their entire club back from last season, but for one player who was beaten out for his starting position this annum by a freshman.

Another factor in Vermont's favor is that they will be playing at home, although Kosakowski explains that the tourney will not be held in the hockey rink, as was UMass' loss to UVM this year (if a tennis court wasn't put over the ice, the playing surface would have been too fast), but in a well lighted private tennis club. "Vermont is the only team used to playing indoors," said coach Kosakowski. "Also, the courts there are very fast." Maybe they're made of ice...

The racketeers should be able to handle Rhode Island and New Hampshire, teams they easily defeated this season, while Connecticut and Maine, two clubs UMass has seen neither hide, hair nor racket of this year, look to present the Minutemen with no special problems. Coach Kosakowski predicted that all of the teams in the tournament will be tough, but taking into account the two ho-hum victories over URI and UNH and the fact that UConn was destroyed, 8-1, by the same MIT squad that the Minutemen edged, 5-4, the coach's view seems unsubstantiated. One must also consider that Maine is, invariably, Maine.

Barnaby Kalon, Bill Karol and Mark Ouellet, all 3-0 in conference play, and Chris Post (2-1), should all be seeded in the tournament.

"If our doubles hold, everything should be alright," prognosticated Kosakowski.

Golfers favored

By RON ARENA

Forget all the pre-match buildup, foreseeing it as a close, tight, nail-biting battle. Today's Yankee Conference golf championship will not fit this category. After all the clubs are swung, all the curses are cursed, and all the scores are added, UMass should return from Stowe Acres (Stowe, Mass.) with the Yan-Con championship. It's as simple as that.

Sure, upsets are possible, but as far as Yan-Cons go, an upset here would be one of major proportions. If they bend the shaft on Joe Artman's club, if John Lasek is forced to play with a tennis ball, and if Howie Terban plays left-handed, then UMass might be considered an underdog. Most likely these prerequisites will not occur, so the Minutemen can only be viewed as the favorite. Predicts UMass mentor Fan Gaudette, "Sure, I think if we play like we're capable, we'll probably win."

Seven Minutemen will participate in the match. They are: Artman, Terban, Lasek, Tom Toski, Rick Olsen, Glen Sullivan, and on the basis of his Wednesday performance, Bill Locke. All are more than capable of fine scores, and if UMass plays anything like they did in their encounter with UNH (377 total), they could easily win by more than ten strokes.

So far this spring, the golfers have met only two Yankee Conference teams - UNH and the season opener with Rhode Island. UNH shot a respectable 403 but still lost by 26. With URI, the best six scores were used, with Rhody scoring a 496 to UMass' 482. Gaudette said "New Hampshire looked good when we played them, and Rhody wasn't bad either." This can only point to the strength of the UMass squad since both matches weren't even close.

Connecticut, after tying for fourth in the fall with URI in the Toski Invitational Tournament (UMass tied Bryant for the win), has been having a tough season. The Huskies entered this week with a mediocre 2-3 record.

Vermont placed way back in the same tournament and would have to be regarded as a weak foe. A possible dark horse could be Maine. They won the Yan-Con two years ago.

If the Minutemen repeat their Wednesday faltering of 403, the match will probably be close. But Artman will seldom card an 85, Terban is way overdue for a good score, and Toski has shown signs of ending his slump. Add Lasek's consistency to the fact that Olsen is capable of exploding (low medalist in last fall's New Englands), as are Glen Sullivan and Bill Locke, and the outlook is good.

And UMass is confident. Their attitudes can well be summed up in Artman's words after his 85, "I'il go out and get you a good score on Friday." Enough said.

Batters eye Maine wins; Key Yan Con contests

By BILL DOYLE

The UMass varsity baseball squad, reduced to a skeleton crew because of injuries, carries a four game losing streak and a 6-11 record into action tomorrow for a Yankee Conference twin-bill with Maine at Earl Lorden Field, at 1:00 p.m.

The doubtful status of catcher Jim Black because of a slight hamstring pull which caused him to miss the last game against Holy Cross, in addition to injuries to both co-captains, has forced the team to face Maine with only one spare infielder, one spare outfielder, and no back-up catcher.

John Healy will miss the doubleheader because of a bad shoulder and Pete Backstrom will be out with a severe hamstring pull.

Craig Allegrezza and Jeff Reardon, who have five of the team's six victories, will be the UMass starters tomorrow. Allegrezza, 3-1 with a 0.71 ERA, will try to avenge a 10-1 loss to Maine that he suffered last year. Reardon, 2-2 and a 4.50 ERA, didn't have a decision against the Black Bears last season.

Maine, who is 2-1-1 in the conference (UMass is 1-1), will counter with Bert Roberge and Rich Prior. Roberge, who beat UMass last year, is a right handed control pitcher with a good slider said UMass coach Dick Bergquist. Prior is a hard throwing southpaw, Bergquist added.

The Black Bear attack is led by catcher John Dumont and second baseman Kevin Goodhue. Maine is definitely a team to be reckoned with, as the Bears went 12-6 on their southern trip this season.

Despite the team's recent problems, including what Bergquist called "horrible pitching" and "atrocious fielding", the UMass mentor remained optimistic about the rest of the team's 12 games.

"Believe it or not," Bergquist said, "I honestly believe that we have the talent to beat Maine twice but we just haven't jelled. Our pitching may not be as good as it was two years ago when we won the conference but we have the hitting and the potentially good defense to win."

The team has a combined batting average of .265 but the defense, especially in the infield, has been a major disappointment, Bergquist said.

Bergquist said that if UMass has any chance to win the conference, the team can't afford another YC loss and thus must sweep tomorrow.

Celts win; take series

BOSTON (UPI) — Jo Jo White scored 17 of his game high 29 points in the decisive third period Thursday night as the Boston Celtics eliminated the Houston Rockets from the NBA playoffs with a 128-115 victory.

The Celtics will now open the Eastern Conference final series at home Sunday afternoon against the winner of Friday night's Washington-Buffalo game.

John Havlicek had 28 points and Don Nelson 25 as six Boston scorers hit double figures.

Rudy Tomjanovich and Calvin Murphy had 27 points apiece and Mike Newlin added 23 for the losers.

The Celtics, leading 60-55 at the half, opened the third period with a 20-4 spurt to put them ahead by their largest margin of the game, 80-59, 5:13 into the quarter.

White, who had just eight points in the first half, netted 21 in the second half and provided most of the Boston offense.

Other double figure scorers for Boston were Cowens with 16 and Westphal with 10. Ed Ratleff scored 20 points for Houston.

John Healy: Courage

By BOB HIGGINS

If you look closely, you can see a good-sized bulge in the lower back of John Healy's baseball shirt.

If you didn't know about it, you probably wouldn't notice it. If you do know, it's very hard not to notice it.

The bulge is a special pad which Healy must wear each time he plays baseball. It protects something which most of us never think about, but which John Healy has to think of every time he straps on that pad.

John Healy has only one kidney.

Two years ago, as a sophomore, the 6'1", 185-pounder was an All-Yankee Conference safety in football, as well as an All-YanCon baseball catcher. It was obvious that UMass had made a sound investment in offering him a football scholarship when he graduated from Westboro High in 1971.

The summer after his sophomore year, Healy entered the hospital to have a vessel removed. In the course of the operation, which had nothing to do with the kidney, the problem was discovered. "It's something that requires a special X-ray," said Healy. "If I hadn't had the operation I'd still be playing football today."

But, as it was, football was definitely out, since one solid hit to the kidney could end his life, never mind his career.

A family friend of the Healy's, a doctor, broke the news to John immediately after surgery. The blow was softened somewhat by the news that he could certainly continue to play baseball.

At the time, the news did not hit Healy as hard as one might think. "I was more concerned with getting on my feet and out of the hospital," he recalled. "The only thought I had was 'at least I have basketball."

He soon found out, however, that, with regards to baseball, his troubles were just starting.
